Vol. 152

WASHINGTON, TUESDAY, MAY 16, 2006

No. 60

Senate

The Senate met at 9:45 a.m. and was called to order by the President pro tempore (Mr. STEVENS).

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Barry C. Black, offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

O God of courage, make us brave in facing the challenges of our time. Show us how to meet each difficulty with faith and wisdom. Make us faithful in the small things that matter in order to prepare us to face greater obstacles with trust in Your power.

Guide our lawmakers in their daunting work. May they live with such honor that they will be ready to be tested in life's storms. Infuse them with an ethical courage that will make them passionate about staying on the right path.

We pray in Your holy Name. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The PRESIDENT pro tempore led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DEMINT). The majority leader is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, this morning following the opening remarks of the two leaders we will proceed to the consideration of a nomination to the Ninth Circuit Court. We have set aside up to 15 minutes for comments on that nomination prior to the rollcall vote. Therefore, I expect the vote to occur after 10 a.m., but it should not be too long after 10 a.m. this morning.

Following that vote, we will resume debate on the comprehensive immigration bill and the pending amendment proposed by Senator ISAKSON. This amendment was offered yesterday and had been pending from our earlier consideration of the immigration bill. It was my hope to lock in a vote to occur shortly after the judge vote of this morning, and we want to allow a few minutes for closing remarks and we want to accommodate a few minutes before that vote. I will be in discussion with the Democratic leader about that. There may be a Democratic alternative which I believe may have been just submitted. We will take a look at that and plan the vote on this accordingly. I do want to alert Members that we could expect a vote or two prior to our luncheons today.

As Senators return for the first vote of the week, they should be reminded—which I believe may have been just submitted—which both the Democratic leader and I did yesterday—that this will be a very full week, with lengthy sessions and with a number of votes. We recognize that people have a lot of schedules which compete with the votes, but our major priority must be this bill. We ask for everybody's consideration in that regard. We will be in session as long as it takes in the evening to accommodate the wishes of Senators and their desire to present amendments.

We have this week and next week prior to the next recess to complete this bill. We have a supplemental bill, a pensions bill, and the Kavanaugh nomination—all which is a heavy load which I believe can be accomplished.

I will also add, the manager of the bill yesterday—both managers, I believe—stated we want these votes to be 20-minute votes, when we are actually voting and recognize that 20 minutes is a short period of time, but it is plenty of time if people know as soon as the bell goes off that they need to start coming here.

I have a statement—it will be brief—on immigration, but I turn to the Democratic leader if he has anything in terms of scheduling?

Mr. REID. No.

IMMIGRATION AND BORDER SECURITY

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, last night the President of the United States addressed the Nation on the need to fix a broken immigration system, the focus of that speech last night being on securing the borders. The President was very clear on the fact that our borders have to be secure, we have to stop the hemorrhaging of people coming across-the-border for an immigration plan to really work. I applaud the President's leadership on this important issue, this pressing issue, especially because we are in the middle of this debate on the floor of the Senate. I support the proposal in terms of turning to the National Guard as a short-term, an interim, stopgap measure to secure our borders because anything we do does take time.

The President outlined the progress that has been made over the last 4 to 5 years on the border. Yet the problem gets worse and worse, in spite of the fact that we do have more people on the border. Our infrastructure is getting better, and we are building barriers. The fact is, as the President said last night, our borders are out of control, and we are failing the American people until we bring them back under control. Our border agents down there are stretched too far. They are over-stretched. Technology has not been fully applied to the degree that it should be. Each year we have millions of undocumented immigrants, illegal immigrants once they cross that border, who come across the southern border and indeed our other borders as well.

We catch more than we did in the past, but the numbers coming are increasing even faster than the numbers we catch, and far too many escape detection, and then, unfortunately, because of a catch-and-release program which is not working to the degree it should, as the President mentioned last night, they are then released into the country.

We need to beef up the electronic surveillance and physical barriers where appropriate. Bottom line, we need to stop the hemorrhaging, and the President laid out a five-point plan very specifically last night, as to how we might do that. The reality of his remarks last night is that we are debating that very issue on the floor and this body must act, and will act, over the next 9 or 10 days to secure those borders and further the comprehensive immigration reform plan that addresses the issue of security and enforcement at the workplace, a strong temporary worker program, and addressing—a lot of the amendments will focus on this—the situation of 12 million people who are here illegally.

Our supplemental appropriations bill we passed a few weeks ago included almost $2 billion to repair fences in high-traffic areas, to replace broken Border Patrol aircraft for lower traffic areas, and for supporting training of additional customs and Border Protection agents. We paid for this additional spending by cuts in other areas. The Senate—and we will hear this debated over the next several days—is near consensus on putting nearly 15,000 new border security agents in the field over the next 6 years.

We are taking action. We are taking control. But these changes are going to take time. It is not a matter of just money, it is a matter of training and support and applying that technology. That is why I strongly support the President's proposal last night of sending a contingent of National Guardsmen now as an interim measure.

But that is an interim measure, and securing our border is only one part—a very important part and many argue it is the most important part—of a comprehensive immigration reform plan that has to be tough, it has to be fair, and that does have to be comprehensive.

We started the debate once again yesterday, and we will continue today and throughout the course of this week. I am confident that by staying focused under the leadership of our tremendous managers, Chairman SPECTER and Ranking Member LEAHY, we will be able to pass a bipartisan comprehensive plan before Memorial Day.

I, also, thank Senators HAGEL and MARTINEZ for their determined efforts to bring consensus to the issue at hand. Under their leadership, we have developed, building on the work of others—namely, Senator MCCAIN and Senator KENNEDY—a fair, workable plan to help deal with each of the four components of the comprehensive immigration proposal, but most specifically to address the 12 million people who currently live in the United States illegally.

The overall approach deals with the diversity of this population. We know that 40 percent of these 12 million people have been here longer than 10 years. Many are fully assimilated into our society today. We know we can't give people who have broken the law a leg up in applying for American citizenship, but they must be treated fairly, must be treated compassionately, and that is what this bill intends to do. And it may be modified in making it even a little better over the next several days.

Law breakers should not be able to cut in line, as the President mentioned last night. People in this category need to be put at the end of the line.

I am confident that as we proceed with the debate, as long as we consider these amendments in a fair and open way, and we have that well underway today, we will have a comprehensive bill. Immigration is not a Republican issue, it is not a Democratic issue, it is a sensitive issue that touches on our values as a nation. We should not have to choose between respect for history as a country of immigrants with the respect for our laws. I am confident we will be able to pass this comprehensive plan in the days to come.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DEMINT). The minority leader is recognized.

IMMIGRATION REFORM

Mr. REID. Mr. President, yesterday morning I talked about this being the summer season, new movies—there is a blockbuster out, starting this Friday it is, "The Da Vinci Code," with Tom Hanks. I suggested yesterday that in the third week of May, on the Senate floor, we have our own blockbuster that is part 2 of immigration.

We had part 1. It didn't go very well. I suggested yesterday that in the President's speech he was going to give, he should become a player, an actor in this part 2 of the Senate blockbuster.

Last night the President, I thought, did a commendable job in laying out what he felt was a path to solving this immigration situation.

I acknowledge the President's statement, and I support the direction the President has taken. I want the President to continue to be a player in all of this. I remind everyone, however, that much of what the President talked about we should already have done. For example, the President talked—and rightfully so—about the fact that we don't have enough beds. We have the so-called catch-and-release program where we find people who are here illegally and we let them go because we have no place to put them.

Following the 9/11 Commission, there was a recommendation that we provide additional beds for the illegals, and we did. We authorized 18,000. But even though we have tried, the President and the majority have not supported our position in this regard. We only have 1,800 beds. We have to move forward and do all of that. I certainly hope that can be done.

It is important that we have additional Border Patrol agents. We have already called for them. In fact, our request has only been filled to 75 percent capacity. The President has said we need more beds. Let's move on that now. The President said we need more Border Patrol agents. Let's move on that now.

The National Guard: Yesterday, I asked the President to give us a timetable. He said within the next year. I hope we can take care of that situation so that we don't need to have National Guardsmen there. But in this interim period, I support the National Guard being on our border.

It is important that we move forward as quickly as possible with this very important legislation. I hope in the days to come that the President will also acknowledge how wrong the Republican House approach is to this. They are still talking the same way. They haven't backed down. They think their approach is the best, from what I have seen by a couple of speeches the chairman of the Judiciary Committee gave last week.

The President needs to stay engaged. He needs to recognize how bad the House bill really is and speak to the American public about how bad it is.

Yesterday, there were some remarks on both sides on this issue which I thought were good. Here is an opportunity. We always talk about bipartisanship.

Interestingly, I was just talking to a member of the Republican staff coming into the building today. We exchanged greetings. He said on the Republican side they are just going to vote their conscience. I said that is an interesting way to legislate. That is what we all need to do. We should have been doing it more in the past. This is the week in which we need to vote our conscience. We don't need to vote the Democratic way or the Republican way. We need to vote the American way and move this most important legislation down the road. I hope we can do that.

STEM CELLS

Mr. REID. Mr. President, let me also talk about one other important issue; that is, the American people are not only counting on us to finish the immigration bill—which we need to do—but they are also counting on us to finish the stem cells bill.

Today, in the New York Times there is a letter from Nancy Reagan to Senator HATCH in which she writes:

For those who are waiting every day for scientific progress to help their loved ones, the wait for the U.S. Senate action has been very difficult and very hard to comprehend.

Yes, it really has.

Last Thursday, the Republican leadership concluded the only week they intend to devote to health care in this Congress. I was disappointed that—despite his repeated promises to allow the Senate to consider the House-passed stem cells bill—Senator FRIST didn't consider this issue important enough to bring to the floor and that parliamentary tactics were used to deny our efforts to bring this forward.

On May 10, prior to the conclusion of Health Week, my friend, the distinguished majority leader, Dr. Frist, stated:

The issue of stem cells is a very important issue. . . . I am very committed to addressing that particular issue. . . . The interest in stem cells will be debated in the future, at a time that is mutually set by the Democratic leadership working with the Republican leadership.

The one-year anniversary of the date the House of Representatives passed H.R. 810, the Stem Cell Research Enhancement Act, is May 24, exactly 1 week from tomorrow.

The bill would offer hope to millions of Americans and their families. Why are we waiting so long to simply vote?

If the distinguished majority leader agreed that this is "a very important issue," then I hope he will keep this issue moving forward and vote on it immediately and schedule a vote on the House-passed bill.

EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. REID. Mr. President, finally, we are going to momentarily take up the issue of the circuit court judge, and proceed to the consideration of the nomination of Milan D. Smith, Jr., of California to be a U.S. circuit judge for the Ninth Circuit. That is a circuit which Nevada is in and a big, powerful circuit. This is an exemplary judge-to-be.

Just to mention a few names, such as Wallace, Wallace is the first person who has gotten the "nonqualified" rating, but yet he is going to be brought forward, I am told. Boyle, a man who is steeped in controversy, has been reversed 165 times, has ethical problems.

Let's go to the Milan Smiths. There are many qualified Republicans who I hope meet the standard following the Constitution and who are not controversial but are good people. Some are lawyers and some are judges elevated to a higher position. Let us move to those kinds of people. And there is no better example of that than the judge we are going to vote on in just a few minutes, Milan Smith.

I compliment the President for sending him to us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at noon today the Senate proceed to a vote in relation to the Isakson amendment, No. 3961, to be followed immediately by a vote in relation to the Salazar trigger amendment, which is at the desk; provided further that no second degrees be in order to either amendment prior to the votes and that all time after the judicial nomination vote and noon be equally divided in the usual form.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—I shall not—Senator FEINSTEIN and I are in favor of the distinguished nominee of the Ninth Circuit. We ask to have an additional 5 minutes for debate so that the result would be 10 minutes on either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, leadership time is reserved.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

NOMINATION OF MILAN D. SMITH, JR. TO BE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT JUDGE FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will proceed to executive session for consideration of Executive Calendar No. 625, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Milan D. Smith, Jr., of California, to be U.S. Circuit Judge for the Ninth Circuit.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I have sought recognition to urge my colleagues to vote in support of the nomination of Milan D. Smith, Jr., for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

The Judiciary Committee has held a hearing on Mr. Smith, and we recommend him to our colleagues.

He was a graduate of Brigham Young University, cum laude, in 1966, and he has a law degree from the University of Chicago Law School in 1969.

He has had a distinguished career in the practice of law. After law school, he joined the international law firm of O'Melveny & Myers.

In 1972, Mr. Smith formed his own firm, Smith Crane Robinson & Parker, one of Southern California's premier law firms specializing in complex transactions.

Mr. Smith has served in public services. In 1988, he served as Commissioner of the California Fair Employment and Housing Commission where he remained until 1991.

The American Bar Association gave Mr. Smith a "substantial majority well qualified" and a "minority qualified" rating.

Beyond these excellent credentials, he comes with a strong recommendation from somebody who knows him very well, and that is our distinguished colleague, Senator GORDON SMITH from Oregon.

I am pleased at this time to yield the floor either to Senator SMITH or to the senior Senator from California.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will be 5 minutes each to the Senators from California and 5 minutes to the Senator from Oregon, and 5 minutes to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The Senator from California is recognized.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Thank you very much.

Mr. President, I am very pleased to be here as a member of the Judiciary Committee and as a Californian to indicate my support for the confirmation of Milan Smith to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals. It is a fine occasion to be able to come here and represent that we have a very competent man to become an appellate court judge.

Mr. Smith has a long and distinguished legal career in our State. The chairman of the committee pointed out some of this. After graduating from the University of Chicago Law School in 1969, Milan Smith moved to Los Angeles where he has been an important part of the legal community ever since.

Mr. Smith founded the law firm known as Smith Crane Robinson & Parker in 1972, and over the last 34 years with Smith Crane Robinson & Parker he has engaged in a wide-ranging legal practice in business and real estate law.

After reviewing his extensive record, a majority of the American Bar Association rated him "well qualified" to serve as a judge of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals.

He has demonstrated an impressive and enduring commitment to serving the public, from presiding over the Governing Board of the Los Angeles State Building Authority to acting as vice chairman of Ettie Lee Homes for Youth.

As many of you know, Milan Smith is the older brother of our esteemed colleague, Senator GORDON SMITH. I know the Senator from Idaho was just talking to Senator SMITH and saying: Isn't it nice that California is getting a Californian.

We are having a little tussle over another judge which the Senator from Idaho believes should be an Idaho judge, and the Senators from California believe should be a California judge. So that issue has not yet to be joined, but it certainly will.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield only for a moment?

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Certainly.

Mr. CRAIG. It is important to recognize that we are getting the Smith from California, and we are asking that we get a Smith from Idaho.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. California would prefer having two Smiths. But we will talk about that another day.

The Smiths' maternal grandfather, Jesse Udall, was the chief justice of the Arizona Supreme Court. So Milan Smith stands poised to follow family precedent in serving on one of our Nation's highest courts.

I congratulate him on this nomination. I urge all of my colleagues to vote for him. I say to his younger brother, who is sitting here in the Chamber, that it is a wonderful day for both Senator BOXER and for me to be able to see you so happy. I know what it means to you and how great it is to have such a fine legal mind in your family. We offer you our best congratulations, as well.

Thank you very much, Mr. President. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, this is a special day for all of us who are on the floor presently because this date has been coming, in my opinion, for far too long. We could have done this 4 years ago, but sometimes it takes a while for good things to happen.

We will not look back, we will look ahead.

I say to my colleague, Senator FEINSTEIN, that we are very fortunate because we worked hard to set up a system for our district court nominees which is working beautifully. We don't have rancor in California over judges—we really don't.

This nomination of Milan Smith is also an opportunity to bring everyone together around a fine man, someone who will be, I believe, a very fine judge. Why? Because Mr. Smith is highly respected by those who know him and know his work. I am confident he will discharge his responsibilities with dignity, integrity, and intelligence.

After law school, Mr. Smith joined the firm of O'Melveny & Myers and later started his own law firm where he is the managing partner. His work in the private sector has given him a wealth of experience and has earned him respect from his peers.

Mr. Smith's career goes beyond the private practice of law. He has dedicated a significant amount of time and energy to public service, as well. In 1984, then-Governor Deukmejian appointed Mr. Smith to the governing board of the Los Angeles Service Building Authority where he served as president until 1992. Since then, he has acted as the Authority's general counsel.

He also was appointed as a member of the California Fair Employment and Housing Commission. He joined the Fair Employment and Housing Commission in 1988 and worked for the next 3 years to protect the rights of the disadvantaged. It says a lot about Milan Smith. This was something he wanted to do: protect the rights of others who are less fortunate than he.

During that tenure, Mr. Smith worked with legislators to reverse a Supreme Court of California decision limiting the commission's power to reward and collect damages for victims of discrimination. Because of Mr. Smith's hard work, passion, and compassion, the California Legislature passed a bill restoring the commission's authority to award damages to victims of discrimination.

When then-Governor Wilson vetoed the bill, Mr. Smith resigned in protest.

We all know a lot of fine people, but it takes guts to stand up and say: I submit my resignation. That shows courage and independence of mind. Here is Milan Smith, standing up to a Governor of the same political party. That is hard to do. I am sure it was painful. I am sure it was terrible. But he did it.

In his resignation letter, Mr. Smith said:

Despite my generally conservative political views, I've come to know much more of the sexual harassment, bigotry and mean spiritedness abroad in the land. To continue to sit on the FEHC when we can do nothing to fairly compensate genuine victims of unlawful sexual harassment, for example, would be unconscionable to me.

Again, those words are eloquent. They are courageous. They show the kind of leadership we need in a judge. We need someone who is fair, someone who truly understands the rights of all Americans, and certainly of all Californians. Mr. Smith gained my profound respect by refusing to sit quietly in the face of what he believed to be injustice. It gives me confidence that as judges sit around and discuss cases that have come before them, he will be motivated by a fierce sense of independence. He will not fear standing up and will be counted when the moment comes.

I am absolutely thrilled about this nomination. The Ninth Circuit will benefit greatly with the addition of Milan Smith. I strongly support his nomination. I had written a letter in favor of this nominee 4, maybe more, 5 years ago. This is a wonderful day for me, personally. I know Senator FEINSTEIN feels that way. My colleague feels that way, and I think most of our colleagues feel this way. It shows we can reach across party lines and come to a point where we can compromise. I am sure Mr. Smith isn't going to do everything I want or everything that Senator FRIST wants, but this is a wonderful choice today.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proud Senator from Oregon.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, it is an honor to be here today, a special day for me, I know for my brother, and all of our family.

Let me begin my remarks by expressing to Senator FEINSTEIN and Senator BOXER my heart felt appreciation for their kind words about my big brother. Let me tell them what a pleasure it has been to work with them on coming to this hour in which the Senate will vote on his confirmation.

I would be remiss if I also did not give special thanks to Senator FRIST and Senator REID, the leaders of this Senate, for their courtesy to me in making this moment possible. Also, to Senator SPECTER and Senator LEAHY, Senator HATCH who chaired the hearing for my brother, all have been his champions, as well, in this very difficult process.

Finally, most profoundly I thank President Bush for his confidence in my brother, for his courtesy to my family, and to all of his staff, specifically Harriet Miers, who have been wonderful throughout this journey. I am profoundly thankful to them.

I have been in this Senate now for a decade. There are times when I feel a certain electricity, a certain excitement to be here. As I reflect upon my memories of service and the hundreds of votes I have cast, some stand out more than others. But those that stand out most for me are those occasions when we watch the operation of the Constitution of the United States.

This is one of those moments. Those special times are when the branches of our Government come together and we watch the Constitution literally in operation.

What I am talking about in a broader sense is the rule of law. The rule of law stands in great contrast to the rule of man. The rule of man has been responsible for much of the blood and carnage and horror on this Earth. But it is the rule of law, however imperfect it is, to which we are all bound and to which we are all obligated to give obedience. The rule of law—equal protection, due process—involves principles which, fortunately, we in America are able to take for granted in large measure but which are at the center of a good and decent society that the American people have created in this country.

Today we are watching the three articles of the Constitution in play. Article I establishes the Congress, specifically, the Senate, charged with providing advice and consent on nominations to the courts. Article II, the President has nominated Milan D. Smith, Jr., for this position on the Ninth Circuit. Article III is about the court's responsibility in dispensing equal protection and due process of law. This is one of those moments when these three branches of Government intersect in the Senate.

For me, it is a very special moment, not just because of my responsibilities as a Senator, my understanding of the Constitution, but because it is a profoundly proud moment for my family.

I could speak about my brother in many contexts. My colleagues from California have done that already. I could speak of our mother, Jessica Udall Smith, who is the descendent of David King Udall, who is one of the drafters of the Arizona State Constitution. I could speak of our grandfather, Jesse Udall, who was the chief justice of the Arizona Supreme Court for many decades. I could certainly speak of the heritage we received from our father, Milan D. Smith, and his service in the Eisenhower administration, his many discussions with us about politics, and the importance of public service.

What I could also speak about is Milan's preparation. His academic credentials are sterling. I could speak about his studies at Brigham Young University, the University of Chicago Law School, and I could say many things that would make clear about him and to others his preparation for this moment in this great position.

But what I will do is share with you, the whole Senate, what I wrote about my brother in introducing him to the Judiciary Committee. I only quote a part of it:

Milan, Jr., is the eldest child of Milan Dale and Jessica Udall Smith's ten children. I am the eighth in that number and Milan's youngest brother. In my 54 years of life, Milan has been an example and force for good in our family, and, since the death of our parents, has been truly a family leader and friend to us all through times of tears and cheers.

For as far back as my memory serves, I have been witness to a concourse of people who have sought him out for his wisdom and judgment, for counsel and comfort on matters great and small. These have included my parents, myself, and all of my brothers and sisters, cousins, and kinsman from far and wide, his own six children, and of course, his legions of legal clients over many decades. Without respect of persons, he has been a wise friend and a good shepherd to all.

His academic preparations and provident life speak for themselves. But, in sum, what I can say is that he is one of the wisest men I have ever known. He has an understanding heart, a heart for judgment, he is possessed of the spirit of discernment, between good and bad, right and wrong, the just and the unjust. I cannot think of a time or a court, when a man of his quality and preparations are more sorely in need than this one, at this time, in our time.

Mr. President, I am honored to be here today to speak about my big brother. I urge his confirmation to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals.

That brings us to the point where it is my privilege to ask for the yeas and nays on behalf of Milan Dale Smith, Jr. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Milan D. Smith, Jr., of California, to be United States Circuit Judge for the Ninth Circuit? On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative bill clerk called the roll.

Mr. DURBIN. I announce that the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. ROCKEFELLER) is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate shall resume legislative session.

COMPREHENSIVE IMMIGRATION REFORM ACT OF 2006

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will resume consideration of S. 2611, which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2611) to provide for comprehensive immigration reform and for other purposes.

Pending:

CORNYN (for ISAKSON) amendment No. 3961, to prohibit the granting of legal status, or adjustment of current status, to any individual who enters or entered the United States in violation of Federal law under the border security measures authorized unless title I and section 233 are fully completed and fully operational.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, may I remind my colleagues, as announced yesterday, that the majority leader has authorized strict enforcement of the 15-minute voting rule and 5-minute extra and on stacked votes 10 and 5. We have a great many amendments and a lot of work to do to finish this bill before Memorial Day. We are about to proceed to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia, Mr. ISAKSON. Senator CRAIG has asked specially for 5 minutes to talk about the President's speech. We are not going to be able to accommodate discussions beyond the Isakson amendment, except for Senator CRAIG. After the 5 minutes, Senator ISAKSON will be recognized to make the opening argument on his amendment. We do not have a great deal of time under the order to proceed with the two votes at noon. So let us use the time as expeditiously as we can.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, we resumed yesterday what I think most of us believe is a historic debate in consideration of comprehensive immigration reform. This body debated immigration reform and brought forth a resolution in 1986. We did it once again in 1996. And here it is, 2006, and we are back, frustrated in some ways, angered in others, that there may be as many as 12 million illegal immigrants in our country, illegal foreign nationals who came in a relatively uncontrolled or unenforced fashion.

Last night I heard, and America heard, our President deliver what I believe was one of the most comprehensive approaches toward dealing with this issue. First and foremost, he recognized what the Congress did not recognize in 1986, nor did we recognize it in 1996. No matter how comprehensive our reform is, it will not work, unless this Nation controls and secures its borders and, therefore, devises programs that allow a reasonable number of foreign nationals to come into our economy on an annual basis to help us grow and help us continue to be the great immigrant Nation we are. Then the President, beyond his approach toward securing the border, talked about a variety of other approaches.

Let me talk only about border security. A good number of us began to work with the White House several months ago, and our message was quite simple. We didn't believe the Congress could fashion comprehensive immigration reform, that the politics of the day were too contentious, unless we had convinced the American people, first and foremost, that primarily our southern border would become more secure, that the flood of humanity coming across it on an hourly basis was stopped, and that the comprehensive bill that would then be fashioned would recognize the needs of our economy and bring workers to our economy in a reasonable fashion. The President gets it. His speech last night said it. While the work the Judiciary Committee and the Senate have done do beef up border control, you don't get there overnight. You don't invest billions of dollars and stand up a virtual wall, and a real wall in some places, in a 24-hour period. The President, understanding that, is now engaging the four border States along our southwestern border, with the complement of the National Guard, not to enforce but to facilitate the Border Patrol, which is legally trained and deputized to do what is necessary in the area of border enforcement.

Securing our southwestern border is critical. One AP reporter asked me last night: Isn't this political?

I said: It is not political at all. The President simply gets it. If this Senate doesn't get it, shame on us. We can't write a bill in any fashion, Democratic or Republican, that works unless our borders are secure, and the law plays against the border in allowing an orderly approach through that border on a daily and an annual basis.

Yes, our economy needs immigrant workers. We will need several hundreds of thousands a year, if we expect our economy to continue to grow as it has, to prosper. But we want them to come to work. And those who might want to stay ought to get in line and apply for citizenship and do as all other Americans have done in the past who were born in a foreign country, who came here and became an American. They assimilated. They learned our culture; they learned our history; they learned to speak English; and we accepted them with open arms. It is the vitality of our country. We have always accepted an orderly amount of the world's humanity to become Americans. But we did it in a controlled and responsible way. That is what our President said last night. We ought to applaud him for an immediate approach to a problem while we work out the long-term approach. That debate is here today. That debate is here for the balance of the week, to build a comprehensive reform package that plays up against a secure border that our President proposed to us last night and that we should rush to help him implement for the sake of this country.

I thank the chairman of the Judiciary Committee and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, we now have 1 hour equally divided. On this side, the time is under the control of Senator ISAKSON, who has signified that there will be 5 minutes for Senator CORNYN, 5 minutes for Senator ALEXANDER, 5 minutes for Senator CHAMBLISS, and we will try to find time for Senator THUNE as well. We will alternate back and forth. Time is under the control of Senator ISAKSON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. KENNEDY. Parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President: How was that time allocated? Was that morning business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Idaho was allocated to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KENNEDY. I see. How much time on each side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has 34 minutes. The Senator from Georgia has 27½ minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. ISAKSON. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry: It was my understanding that the time of the distinguished Senator from Idaho was not a part of the debate but was to precede our debate, and we were supposed to equally divide the remaining time. Am I incorrect?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time was allocated to the Senator from Pennsylvania as the bill was laid down, equally divided.

Mr. ISAKSON. So we have how many minutes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is 27½ minutes.

Mr. SALAZAR. Parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado will state it.

Mr. SALAZAR. My understanding was that under the unanimous consent agreement that had been entered into by the floor managers, the next hour would be divided equally between the Senator from Georgia in relation to his amendment, as well as the amendment that I would be offering following the Senator from Georgia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time following the vote between now and 12 o'clock has already been equally divided.

Mr. KENNEDY. So we have 34 minutes.

Mr. SALAZAR. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. ISAKSON. Mr. President, I appreciate the statement of the Senator from Colorado. I thank the Senator from South Carolina, the Presiding Officer. I thank Senator SPECTER, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, for the untiring efforts he made on the bill and the courtesies he has shown to me. I thank leader HARRY REID for accommodating us and allowing us to come to the floor and have a debate. I particularly thank LINDSEY GRAHAM and JOHN MCCAIN for seeing to it that all of us who had amendments to offer had a chance to negotiate the time to do that. I especially thank my staff, in particular, Mike Quiello, for the work he has done on this issue over a long period of time.

Mr. President, to set the stage for my remarks on my amendment, let me, first of all, tell you a little bit about myself. I am a product of the legal immigration system of the United States. My grandfather came here in 1903 and went through Ellis Island. There is nobody who has greater respect for the hope and opportunity and the laws of our country than do I. I was in the construction industry, and I know the great contribution the workers made to construction and to tourism and to hospitality services and to agriculture.

I, also, know the issue before us is now the most important issue domestically before the United States. When I ran for the Senate in 2003 and 2004, the most commonly asked question after Iraq was: What are you going to do about illegal immigration? In the first speech on any issue I made as a Senator, I made the statement that I thought illegal immigration was the No. 1 domestic issue in this country.

I rise to tell you my mind has not been changed. I think neither have the minds been changed of the American people because you have seen the intensity of the interest of all Americans in border security and immigration.

My amendment is very simple. It says that before any provision of this Immigration Act could grant legal status to someone who is here illegally is in effect, the Secretary of Homeland Security must certify to the President and the Congress that every provision for border security and enforcement contained in title I and section 233 of title II is in place, funded, and is operational.

There is a simple reason for that. In 1986, this Congress, under President Ronald Reagan, passed a border security and amnesty bill for the 3 million illegal aliens who were in this country. We enforced the border and granted amnesty. And 20 years later, there are 11 million to 13 million illegal aliens who have come because of the promise of this country and its opportunity but also because we have given a wink and a nod to the security of our borders.

I want to emphasize that I am not just talking about something I am thinking about or that I read. I have been to our border. I took a codel with Senator COLEMAN in February. We went to Fort Huachuca in Arizona and saw the unmanned aerial vehicle working and identifying those coming across the border and sealing a 150-mile stretch. In San Diego, at the border with Juarez, we saw where the barriers at Smugglers' Gulch have effectively stopped the people coming through that gully and immigrating illegally into this country. We went up and down the border and saw the bits and pieces of security that worked. We also saw the over 1,500 miles of the border that are not secure—the 1,500 miles that have allowed people to come here either through smuggling or through their own volition or by paying bribes to get here, to get into our workforce, to overcrowd our schools, to stretch the services in our emergency rooms and put great pressure on our civil justice system.

It is time that we seal the border and secure it so that the promise of legal immigration works and illegally entering this country is not the preferred way to cross on our southern border.

I commend the President for his remarks last night. The President last night said, in order, the five important things we must do. The first thing the President said is to secure the border. With this amendment, with our commitment and with the President's commitment, securing the border will take place. Then we can grant a program to those who are here illegally, with the sincere knowledge that we know no more are coming. If we grant programs and status to those who are here illegally and look the other way, the next time we bring this up in 10 or 15 years, it will not be 12 million, it will be 24 million and, worst of all, we will have lost control.

Last night, the President said we are a nation of laws. And we are a nation of laws. I submit to you that when laws are enforced, and they are enforced soundly, laws are obeyed and they are respected. We have not enforced our border and, therefore, its security is not respected.

So I call on all of our colleagues, Democrats and Republicans alike, everybody who is interested in a comprehensive reform of our immigration policy and our immigration system, to think what comes first. And what comes first is securing the border. After that, the American people would be willing to work with us on programs to grant status. But in the absence of securing the border and making that commitment, we are not going to have the cooperation of the American people. We are not going to have comprehensive reform, and a growing problem in this country will grow even greater.

My last point is there may be some who say you cannot secure the border or it is going to take too long. Listen, this country put a man on the Moon in 9 years, and we responded to the terrorist attacks within 3 weeks. This country can do anything it sets its mind to do. We know how to do it. In incremental places, we do it now. It is time we put in the additional 6,000 border security agents, put the UAVs in the air, put the ground sensors on the ground, put the prosecuting officials along the border in those jurisdictions to see to it that the law is enforced and prosecuted, and it is time that we build the barriers in those areas that are easy smuggling corridors. We must make a commitment to ourselves and the American people.

The Senator from Colorado is going to offer an amendment side by side. I read the amendment. It gives the President the authority to authorize sections 4 and 6, which are the status sections, whenever it is in the best interest of the national security of the United States. That is well and good, but that has nothing to do with security on the border. If we don't adopt the Isakson amendment to secure the border, then we will have given a wink and a nod one more time to those who would come here illegally. We will have said to our local governments, school systems, emergency rooms, and law enforcement officers that we don't care.

Mr. President, I think we do care. I urge support for the Isakson amendment to the immigration bill. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUNUNU). Who yields time?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Colorado.

AMENDMENT NO. 3994

Mr. SALAZAR. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 3994 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Colorado (Mr. SALAZAR) proposes an amendment numbered 3994.

(Purpose: To prohibit implementation of title IV and title VI until the President determines that implementation of such titles will strengthen the national security of the United States)

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. ____ . NATIONAL SECURITY DETERMINATION.

Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the President shall ensure that no provision of title IV or title VI of this Act, or any amendment made by either such title, is carried out until after the date on which the President makes a determination that the implementation of such title IV and title VI, and the amendments made by either such title, will strengthen the national security of the United States.

Mr. SALAZAR. Mr. President, as we come back to the floor of the Senate today to take up this issue of national security and the national urgency on workable immigration law, I want to first say that I applaud my colleagues both on the Democratic and the Republican sides who have been working so hard to move forward with a comprehensive immigration reform package.

I also want to say thank you to the President of the United States of America for his statement last night to the Nation, in which he appealed to the best interests of America to come together and develop a comprehensive immigration reform package. I believe it is worthwhile to quote again from what the President said last night.

Tonight I want to speak directly to Members of the House and the Senate. An immigration reform bill needs to be comprehensive because all elements of this problem must be addressed together, or none of them will be solved at all. The House has passed an immigration bill. The Senate should act by the end of this month so that we can work out the differences between the two bills and Congress can pass a comprehensive bill for me to sign into law.

Again, he said we need to work on this problem together, on all of its elements, or none of the elements will be solved.

Mr. President, amendment No. 3994 is an amendment that takes a very different approach from the Senator from Georgia, my good friend, Senator ISAKSON. As chairman Specter noted on the floor yesterday, the proponents of the Isakson amendment take the view that we ought to have all our border-strengthening and security measures in place before we address any aspect of this problem. I don't think that that is an effective approach.

In the past, for the last 20 years, when we have tried to approach immigration issues by only looking at one issue at a time, we have failed. We have continually thrown money at a problem to increase border security through funding. Yet our borders continue to be porous and broken, and the lawlessness that comes with that is something we see across America. I don't believe we should let this crisis fester. I don't believe we should continue to tolerate those being in the shadows of society, the 11 million undocumented workers in this country today. I don't believe we in the Senate should stand in the way of a comprehensive immigration reform that has extensive bipartisan support in this body.

It is very clear to all of us today that the current situation is inadequate and there is a lot of work that needs to be done. I want to move ahead on all fronts and take the comprehensive approach that has been discussed on this floor, and a comprehensive approach which the President himself has endorsed.

National security is at the heart of a workable immigration law, and we should not allow an immigration law to go into effect if it will not address the national security interests of the United States. That is at the heart of my amendment. My amendment is a very simple amendment. As the clerk read that amendment, it was very clear and straightforward, and it simply requires the President of the United States to make a determination that the national security of the United States will be strengthened by the following programs: Title IV, which includes the new guest worker program, and title VI, which includes the provisions relating to the 11 million undocumented workers who are living in the shadows of America today; and it also includes the bipartisan changes to immigration that have been forged in this body by leaders such as Senator CRAIG and Senator FEINSTEIN on agriculture jobs and the DREAM Act, which is another bipartisan measure. Under our amendment, those provisions of the bill cannot be implemented unless and until the President of the United States finds that it is in the national interest and for national security that those provisions of the legislation be implemented.

Senator ISAKSON's amendment, on the other hand, is designed to weaken this comprehensive approach. The approach of my friend from Georgia would focus only on border enforcement. When we look at the history of the last 20 years, approaches that have focused on border enforcement only have been approaches that have not succeeded in dealing with the issue of immigration.

I agree with President Bush that we need to address this issue in a comprehensive manner, and I urge my colleagues to support amendment No. 3994.

At the end of the day, it seems to me that those of us in this body who recognize the importance of this issue need to understand that the stool has to have three legs for us to develop comprehensive immigration reform.

First, we need to secure our borders. In the legislation we have proposed, there are multiple provisions that deal with the strengthening of our borders, including the doubling of the number of Border Patrol officers, bringing in new technology that would allow us to make sure we know who is coming and going across our borders, and a number of other provisions that are intended to ensure that our borders become secure.

The second leg of that stool is making sure that we are enforcing our immigration laws within our country. We have not done an adequate job of enforcing our immigration laws in this country. The President acknowledged that reality as well. Our legislation will make sure that we are enforcing our immigration laws within the interior of our country.

The third leg on that stool is to make sure we are addressing the human and economic reality of the 11 million people who currently live in an undocumented status in America today.

Sometimes when we get into these debates on the Senate floor, it is a discussion about policy, but it is also important for us never to forget why we are here, and never to forget that there are, in fact, millions of human beings who are very much affected by the current system of lawlessness on our borders.

Sadly, last year, over 300 people died trying to cross the border. In my own community, over the last several Sundays, I heard a Catholic priest talk about how it is that people were dying of thirst and hunger in the deserts of Arizona and places such as Texas. I heard my colleague, my friend from Arizona, Senator JOHN MCCAIN, speak eloquently and passionately about this issue.

Since 1998, more than 2,000 men, women, and children have lost their lives crossing the border between Mexico and the United States. That is not what we are about in America. Anywhere else in America if we had 2,000 people dying, the people of America would be standing up and saying we must do something to correct this problem and to correct it in a way that is going to work. That is why a comprehensive solution is needed in this situation. That is why my amendment No. 3994 was proposed. It will help us move down the road to developing that comprehensive immigration reform package.

I thank the Chair, and I yield the remainder of my time to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator will yield for a question. Is it the Senator's understanding that if we accept the Isakson amendment, we will continue to have this culture of illegality in the United States? If we accept the Isakson amendment, we will still have the hiring by employers of illegal aliens, we will be driving wages down, we will still have a whole culture of illegality, we will have people in the shadows, we will have people whose names we don't know because we are unable to bring people out into the sunlight and understand who is actually here in terms of our national security? Does the Senator from Colorado not believe that this is really—the Senator from Colorado, as I understand it, has been a strong supporter of border security, provisions that are in the underlying bill. He has been a strong supporter to make sure that this is a key element in our total immigration strategy: a strong border and that we deal with the dangers of our border, but to understand that if we are going to be able to deal with the dangers of our border, we are going to also have to deal with enforcement in this country of employers. We are also going to have to deal with the adjustment of the status of those who are here. Is that the position of the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. President, I want to understand clearly, he is not taking a second step to anyone, is he, in having a strong border enforcement; am I right?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado has the floor.

Mr. SALAZAR. Mr. President, my friend from Massachusetts is correct. We stand firmly for the proposition that we need to absolutely secure our borders. Indeed, if we fail to address the reality of 11 million people living in the shadows of the United States today, we will have failed to achieve the national security objective.

If one thinks about what happened in the days after 9/11, our Government ought to know who is living in our society. We cannot know that when we have 11 million people living in the shadows. Those people need to be brought out of the shadows, they need to be brought out into the sunlight, they need to be registered, they need to pay a fine, they need to learn English, and they need to do the rest of the things we talk about in this legislation.

The very fundamental principle of an immigration law to provide us with national security in America will be altered if we are not able to move forward with the implementation of those provisions of the law.

The proposal which my good friend from Georgia has proposed, the Isakson amendment, would essentially gut the sense of our comprehensive immigration reform bill because we would not be able to deal with that reality and we would not be able to deal with the guest worker program that the President of the United States is proposing.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further, therefore, the Senator from Colorado, with his amendment, believes that he offers a path that is going to protect our national security in the most effective way because we will gain information, we will gain knowledge, we will understand the people who are here and will know their names, will know their addresses, will know where they live, and they will be part of our society.

Secondly, I understand that he believes that without his amendment, we are still going to have this culture of illegality where we have employers hiring undocumented workers. The Isakson amendment doesn't do anything about that, as I understand. If we adopt the Isakson amendment, we will still have the exploitations of undocumented workers, and we will also have the conditions where we are driving wages down, which drives wages down for Americans. Does the Senator not believe that will continue to be the result unless we do a comprehensive approach?

Mr. SALAZAR. Mr. President, I agree with my friend from Massachusetts. In fact, that would happen. We would have 11 million workers who probably would continue to work as they have been working now, for some of them decades in this country, and that the system of illegality in terms of employers hiring undocumented workers is simply a system that is going to continue into the future unabated. That is why it is so essential that we move forward with this issue in a comprehensive approach.

Last night the President was absolutely correct in his statement that we cannot deal with this issue of immigration reform in a piecemeal manner. We have to deal with it in a comprehensive manner that addresses the issue of 11 million undocumented workers who are in this country today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Colorado has expired. Who yields time?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield 4 more minutes, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado is recognized for an additional 4 minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, as I understand the Senator from Colorado, his position, quite frankly, is much more consistent with what the President talked about last night, am I correct, where the President talked about a comprehensive approach to deal with the challenges of illegality. And his position is that we ought to look at it in a comprehensive way, and the best way to deal with illegality on the border is to also deal with illegality in employment and deal with legality and illegality in adjusting the status in terms of earning the right to remain here; am I correct?

Mr. SALAZAR. Mr. President, my friend from Massachusetts is, in fact, correct. We need to deal with the entire set of immigration issues today, including the illegal hiring of people in this country. The provisions we have set forward in this bill will allow us to, in fact, bring those people who are here illegally and who are undocumented out of the shadows so we can address the national security interests.

My amendment requires the President of the United States to basically say that before the guest worker program is implemented, the President has to determine that it is in the interest of national security for us to implement those provisions; that before we move forward with the program that addresses the reality of 11 million undocumented workers, the President of the United States shall acknowledge and make a statement that, in fact, it is in the national security interests of the United States of America. That is why this amendment is a much better, preferred approach than the amendment which is being offered by my friend from Georgia.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, finally, I have my differences with the President, but I agree with the Senator from Colorado. We support that judgment and that decision and his ability to make that judgment and decision. That is what the Senator from Colorado supports, and I do, too.

I retain the remainder of my time.

The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. ISAKSON. Mr. President, how much time remains on both sides?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia controls 20 minutes, and the Senator from Massachusetts controls 17 minutes.

Mr. ISAKSON. Mr. President, I think the distinguished Senators, Mr. SALAZAR and Mr. KENNEDY, who are both Senators and lawyers and understand smoke and mirrors. I think they understand the enforcement of the law. The Isakson amendment calls for us to enforce the laws that have been brought about because of the lack of enforcement, which is why this bill is on the floor of the Senate now.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senators CHAMBLISS, CORNYN, ALEXANDER, DOMENICI, and SANTORUM be added as original sponsors of the Isakson amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ISAKSON. Mr. President, I am pleased to recognize for 10 minutes the Senator from Texas, Mr. CORNYN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. CORNYN. Mr. President, there is no doubt that trying to fix our broken immigration system is a complex issue. Frankly, part of what we have been trying to do is to find solutions that thread the needle and shrink the gap between the approach of the House of Representatives, which is primarily an enforcement-only bill, and comprehensive immigration reform that I believe is supported by most of us in the Senate, including myself.

I differ with the sponsors of the bill in the Senate, and I intend to offer amendments that will, I believe, improve it, while retaining its comprehensive nature. I believe it is simply surreal to suggest that what the amendment of the Senator from Georgia does somehow retreats to the House position and is an enforcement-only approach.

Indeed, I think the Senator from Georgia has struck upon an ingenious way to thread the needle by saying, yes, we believe that border security is important; yes, we believe that we ought to produce the computer systems, hire and train the people, create the databases which will actually make this reform work, rather than put the cart before the horse and say, with the stroke of a pen, that 12 million people who are living out of legal status are suddenly legal; and, yes, we are going to have 325,000 new people each year come into the country, regardless of whether our economy is in a boom or a bust and possibly compete with Americans for those jobs.

What the Senator from Georgia has done is say let's put the horse in front of the cart, not the cart in front of the horse. Let's do first things first. Let's make sure this will actually work.

Last night the President talked about sending 6,000 National Guard troops to help the Border Patrol secure the border, recognizing that it takes time to train Border Patrol agents. We now train them at the rate of 1,500 a year, and we can't all of a sudden secure the border because we can't all of a sudden train enough Border Patrol agents. We can't all of a sudden, with the wave of a magic wand, build the infrastructure that is necessary. We can't, with the wave of a magic wand, issue the request for proposals to actually let the contracts that will allow the construction of the computer systems and the databases that will actually make this work. We can't, with the wave of a magic wand, say we are going to create a secure identification card which will allow employers to verify the eligibility of prospective employees. It is going to take a little bit of time.

But that is not the same thing as saying, as the Senator from Colorado has said, that somehow we are going with an enforcement-only approach.

I support a comprehensive immigration reform plan that is built on a foundation of border security, that says we need to have worksite verification, that we need to have a secure identification card so that employers can determine whether in fact a person is eligible to work. I believe we ought to have sanctions against employers who cheat. I believe we ought to have a temporary worker program, not like the proposed guest worker program in this underlying bill, and that will be the subject for future amendments.

The message we need to send the American people is that we are actually serious about making this proposed comprehensive immigration reform system work. If we adopt the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, it will send a message that we are not serious about making sure we have the infrastructure and the people and the systems and the cards in place that will actually make this comprehensive reform work.

The American people have already been burned once very badly when it comes to comprehensive immigration reform. In 1986, when President Ronald Reagan signed an amnesty, the tradeoff was supposed to be worksite verification and employer sanctions for employers who cheat. But the Federal Government never did what it was supposed to do by providing the means for employers to actually make that determination in a way that had some integrity. Now I believe the American people are looking at us skeptically, wondering whether we are going to try to pull the rug out from under them again.

The American people can be amazingly tolerant, they can be amazingly forgiving, but they won't be mocked, and they will not believe us unless we build some confidence into the system by saying we are going to take care of helping to secure the border, we are going to provide the means to enforce this system, before we are going to implement a 12-million person amnesty which will put a tremendous load on the men and women who are supposed to administer this system. Can you imagine how long it will take to make this happen? All this does is say let's do first things first, rather than put the cart before the horse.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Who yields time? The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, my friend and colleague from Michigan has a special request. We know it is not completely consistent with the subject matter at hand, but we are willing to yield time, Senator SALAZAR and I, out of our time, so we are not going to delay the proceedings of the Senate. This is an important matter.

I yield 4 minutes, if that is sufficient time.

MEDICARE PRESCRIPTION PART-D BENEFIT

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, I thank my colleagues who are managing this very important bill and Senators KENNEDY and SALAZAR as well. We are engaged in an important debate right now, but there is another important debate going on around every kitchen table and in every senior citizen center right now, which is what is going to happen today after they can no longer sign up for the Medicare prescription Part D benefit.

We know that for about 3 million low-income seniors, they are going to be allowed to continue to sign up until the end of the year without penalty. But for the 3 million to 5 million seniors who are not in that category, they are not allowed to continue to sign up, and there will be a penalty between now and November when they can sign up again.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of a bill which I will send to the desk now which extends the enrollment deadline for Medicare Part D, waives the late enrollment penalty, provides the option for a one-time change of plan during 2006, and provides increased funding for State health insurance counseling and assistance programs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I am hearing this for the first time. I must object until I take a look at it and consult with some people on this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. SPECTER. For current purposes, I do object.

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, if I might just continue, there are three important pieces in this bill. They are certainly not new to us. I appreciate we are in the middle of another important discussion, but we have had an ongoing discussion with seniors all across America who are concerned about this issue. If not this entire bill, I ask unanimous consent to pass a bill that would at least extend the enrollment until the end of the year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I am constrained to object again until I have had a chance to examine the specifics as to what the Senator from Michigan is offering.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. SPECTER. May I add that I have joined with other Senators in seeking to have an extension of the date. So I am in agreement with what I believe to be the thrust of what the Senator from Michigan seeks to accomplish. But speaking for myself, I would have to know more and examine the documents before I could refrain from objecting. And on behalf of others on this side, as the manager of the bill, it is incumbent upon me to give them an opportunity to examine what the Senator from Michigan wants to do. So I am constrained to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The Senator from Michigan has 1 minute remaining.

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, I then ask, because of the seriousness and sense of urgency, that we have unanimous consent at least to pass the bill containing only the part that waives the late enrollment penalty that starts today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I again object for the reasons I said. I will be glad to have the effort of the Senator from Michigan renewed later today when I have had a chance to examine it and others have had a chance to examine it. But on this state of the record, hearing it for the first time and being surprised by it, we need time to study it and time for others to consider it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The Senator has 10 seconds remaining.

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, I appreciate the position of the Senator from Pennsylvania, but I ask unanimous consent to pass the bill containing a provision which provides at least a one-time change of plan during 2006.

Mr. SPECTER. Objection, without restating all my reasons.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The time of the Senator has expired. Who yields time?

The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. ISAKSON. I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, Mr. ALEXANDER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the Chair please advise me when 60 seconds remains.

Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Georgia and congratulate him on his amendment.

The President talked last night about what we need to do to secure our borders. He took an important step forward. He committed to doubling the number of Border Patrol agents during his time as President. As that is ramped up, he said he would ask the National Guard to help us fill the gap. Guard members would help by operating surveillance systems, analyzing intelligence, installing fences and vehicle barriers, building patrol roads, and providing training. As a former commander in chief of the Tennessee National Guard when I was Governor, the proposal sounded to me eminently sensible.

The President also talked about using high-technology verification cards, ways that employers could do a better job of making certain the people they hire are legally here. He talked about Federal-State cooperation being improved with State and local law enforcement.

All of this will take some time, but we need to do whatever we can in the Senate to ensure that the President's commitment to secure the border succeeds. That is why I joined with Senator GREGG and others last week to add $1.9 billion to the Border Patrol during our debate on the emergency supplemental bill. That money will help replace outdated vehicles that are breaking down and purchase new boats and other equipment. That is why I am co-sponsoring the amendment of Senator ISAKSON today. Senator ISAKSON's amendment says clearly: Border security must come first.

Under this amendment, we can still pass, I believe—and I will ask the Senator this question when my time has expired—we can still pass a comprehensive immigration bill, but we can't adjust the legal status of those illegally here until the border is secure. We have no business passing a comprehensive immigration bill without making sure first that the border will be secure. Upholding the rule of law on our border is as important as defending our freedom in Iraq. A nation that loses control of its own borders is a nation that will not likely exist for long.

Last year, more than half a million new citizens became Americans. They had waited 5 years, learned English, pledged allegiance to our country, had fore sworn allegiance to the country from which they came, and learned about our Constitution and laws. They know the principles that unite us as Americans—not our race, not our ancestry, but principles. Among those principles are equal opportunity and laissez-faire. We thrive on immigration in this country. But among those principles, too, is our unity. And first among those principles—at least none is more important—is the principle of the rule of law. Those half-million new citizens know that they are free to drive here across the country but not to run stop lights; that they are free to make contracts in this economy but not to break them; that they are free to own a gun under the second amendment but not to shoot someone.

We thrive on legal immigration, but we cannot tolerate illegal immigration.

I would like to ask through the Chair, if I may, a question of the Senator from Georgia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator has 30 seconds remaining.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Through the Chair, my question to the Senator from Georgia is this: I favor a comprehensive immigration bill. I would like to see border security. I would like to see legal status for students who study here, for skilled people who help win Nobel Prizes here and improve our economy. I would like to see a comprehensive immigration bill that includes help for people legally here to learn English and learn our history and unite us as Americans. But, Senator ISAKSON, am I correct that if we pass your amendment, it is still true, is it not, that we can pass a comprehensive immigration bill that includes all of these provisions I just described? The only difference is, as I understand it, that we may not adjust the legal status of those illegally here until the border is secure? Am I correct about that or am I wrong about that?

Mr. ISAKSON. The Senator is absolutely correct, and the premise is you don't want to create an attraction for more to come until the border is secure and we know we put an end to it.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, The Isakson amendment is designed to tear apart the interwoven fabric of a bill that many of us have worked so hard in a bipartisan manner to pass in the Senate.

The Isakson amendment asserts that there can be no guest worker program and no legalization path for undocumented immigrants currently in the United States until security at the borders is guaranteed. Sounds good, until you realize that comprehensive immigration reform consists of several interrelated steps, each depending on the rest in order to maximize the prospects of the overall plan to get the job done. This amendment is a prescription for failure, by ripping a comprehensive plan apart. That is why this amendment has been described as a "poison pill" that would undermine the bipartisan bill before the Senate.

The Senate recently passed the Defense supplemental appropriations bill, a bill that included nearly $2 billion for border security. It seems that what Senator ISAKSON wants the Senate to do is to wait until all of those funds are expended, and then assess our security. Many of us have been fighting for years to improve border security by targeting more resources for technology on the borders and by adding additional Border Patrol agents. The Bush administration repeatedly failed to fulfill Congress's directives in recent years, but I was pleased to hear the President say last night that he now supports increasing the number of Border Patrol agents by 6,000. He made a statement last night that was stronger and displayed a stronger commitment than we have heard from him previously, and I hope he plans to follow through on his words.

The President also spoke about the need to simultaneously implement guest worker programs and a path to earned citizenship for the undocumented. This is similar to the comprehensive approach that those of us who supported the Judiciary Committee bill, and then the Hagel-Martinez compromise, still believe is necessary to reform our broken system and to secure our borders. Do Senator ISAKSON and the supporters of his amendment believe that the President is taking the Nation in the wrong direction? I find it troubling that with such strong bipartisan support for S. 2611 in the Senate, and the leadership of the White House on the core principles of the bill, these Senators refuse to join in constructive efforts to enact comprehensive reform. From the beginning, many voices outside of the Senate have been intent on bringing down this bill.

Senator SALAZAR has offered an alternative that supports the principles of S. 2611 and that reflects the goals laid out by the President in his statement last night. I urge all Members of the Senate to vote against the Isakson amendment and for the Salazar alternative. We must work toward comprehensive solutions that secure our borders and strengthen the Nation, not piecemeal gambits that undermine the efforts of bipartisan progress toward a Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired. So 8½ minutes remain under the control of the Senator from Georgia, 12½ minutes under the control of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Who yields time? The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield 4 minutes to myself, 4 minutes to the Senator from Illinois, and 4 minutes to the Senator from Colorado.

I ask the Chair, when I have 30 seconds left, to be informed.

Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from Georgia does nothing with regard to the National Guard. I have listened to the debate and discussion about the National Guard. Frankly, the way the President described it last night, the Guard would be very limited. They have mainly a supportive kind of proposal. I have real concerns because in my State the Guard is very busy today with the flooding we have in part of Massachusetts. But we are open, at least I am open, on this issue. This amendment has nothing to do with that.

The fact is that those of us who oppose the amendment of the Senator and support Senator SALAZAR's amendment believe in strong border security. But we also read history. We know the record on the border. Twenty years ago, we had 40,000 people who were coming in here illegally; 10 years ago, it was 400,000. Do you know what we did? We spent $20 billion over the last 10 years, we have increased border guards by 300 percent, and guess what: We have doubled the numbers to 800,000 today—to 800,000.

What is the answer to that? The answer to that is we need tough border security, but we need tough law enforcement here in the United States, and we have to deal with the legality or adjustment of status for those who are here, prepared to pay a penalty, work hard, play by the rules, participate in the armed services of our country, and then join the end of the line for those people waiting to come into the United States—at the end of the line, and 11 years from now be able to achieve citizenship.

The fact remains, if you only do one of the proposals—and this the President of the United States understands and spoke to very clearly. I have my differences with the President, but he is absolutely right. He understands history. He is a border State Governor, and he knows you can't do this by itself, only at the border. The fact is, in the bill that we support, we increased by 12,000 the border patrol. We create a virtual fence.

If the Senator from Georgia has additional national security matters that they think can be added, we are glad to consider them. But we are dealing with the recognition that you have to have a comprehensive approach if you are going to gain control of the borders. History teaches us that. We have had hours and days of hearings about that. All you have to do is look at what has happened to the border in the last years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 30 seconds remaining.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, as has been pointed out, it is a three-legged stool: tough border security, tough legal enforcement here in the United States, and a recognition of our humanity and decency and our immigration background. If people are prepared to pay a penalty, play by the rules, work hard, and stay free from any trouble with law enforcement, at the end of the line they can earn American citizenship. That is the way to go, and the Isakson amendment short circuits that process.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. ISAKSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts has made the most eloquent statement in favor of this amendment I have ever heard. He put on the record exactly what we raised in title I, section 133, to secure the border. I appreciate his comments.

I am happy to yield 4 minutes to the Senator from Georgia, Mr. CHAMBLISS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. CHAMBLISS. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of the Isakson amendment and am proud to be a cosponsor. The American people have heard Senators from both sides of the aisle and across the political spectrum come down to the floor of the Senate to talk about the 1986 Immigration Reform and Control Act and how it did not solve the problem of illegal immigration. This was the first attempt by Congress to address the issue of illegal immigration in a comprehensive way. The Immigration Reform and Control Act was the product of a number of compromises, the main one being legalizing the illegal population in exchange for stronger enforcement of our immigration laws both at the border and inside the country.

However, we all know now that the 1986 legislation, which closely mirrors S. 2611, did not work and, in fact, invited further illegal immigration, resulting in the critical situation we face regarding illegal immigration today.

As the Senate considers S. 2611 we are operating under the assumption that there are around 11 million illegal immigrants who will take advantage of an amnesty. But the fact is that we simply do not know how many illegal immigrants are in the U.S. some venture to guess that there are 20 million or more.

However, once again we find that many in the Senate are willing to make the same compromise that was made in 1986: legalize an unlimited amount of illegal aliens in exchange for increasing border security, interior enforcement, and worksite enforcement.

I personally do not agree with this approach. I do not believe that we should provide illegal immigrants with a new path to citizenship through this bill or any bill. I do not think it is the right way to address the presence of a large number of illegal immigrants.

While I do not believe in providing a new path to citizenship for illegal immigrants, the Judiciary Committee disagreed. As a result, the Senate is now considering a bill that will provide a pathway to citizenship for illegal immigrants. If we are willing to travel down the same path that proved not to work before, shouldn't we ask ourselves what didn't work with the 1986 amnesty that will work today? What has changed?

I think one of the main problems with the 1986 amnesty bill was that it ended up being one sided—the government adjusted the status of millions of illegal immigrants but the promise of greater border security, interior enforcement, and worksite enforcement never materialized.

That is why Senator ISAKSON's amendment is so critical. It says that we cannot implement any program to grant legal status to an illegal immigrant provided in this bill until the Secretary of Homeland Security certifies in writing to the President and to Congress that the border security measures in this bill are complete and operational. This is a very simple amendment.

I do not see how any Senator who is serious about border security and enforcing our immigration laws can disagree with Senator ISAKSON's amendment. It is that we ensure, before we take the same path we did in 1986, a path I disagree with, that we remedy one of the fatal flaws of the 1986 Immigration Reform and Control Act.

Disagreeing with this amendment sends the message to the American people that we are more eager to give illegal immigrants a path to citizenship than we are to secure our borders from further illegal immigration and the smuggling of illegal drugs and weapons. I know that is not the message my constituents in Georgia want to hear.

Regardless of where Georgians stand on dealing with the current illegal population, the constant refrain I hear from folks back home is: secure the border. If we do not secure the border and have serious interior and worksite enforcement, then we have accomplished nothing. The American people demand no more and deserve no less.

I am proud to cosponsor this critical amendment, which will show the American people that providing an amnesty to millions of illegal immigrants is not more important than securing our borders. I urge my colleagues to support the Isakson amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts controls 9 minutes, the Senator from Georgia controls 4 minutes 20 seconds.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I yield 4 minutes to the Senator from Illinois.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I listened carefully to the President's speech last night. He gets it. As you listen to the debate on the floor from both sides the aisle, more and more Republican and Democratic Senators get it. They understand it now. It isn't just a matter of getting tough. It isn't just a matter of enforcement. It is a matter of enforcement and a process that results in comprehensive immigration reform.

If it were just a matter of making it tough to cross our borders, you would assume we would have moved toward solving the problem. But it hasn't happened. In the last decade, we have doubled the number of Border Patrol agents. They have spent eight times as many hours patrolling the border in that 10-year period of time, and during that same period the number of undocumented immigrants coming into the United States has doubled—despite this dramatic increase in resources. Enforcement at the border is not stopping the flow.

The comprehensive bill says you need to do three things. You need border enforcement. I support what the President said last night. I think sending the National Guard, if we can get all the details, on an interim basis is a good thing to move toward enforcement. But you also need to have enforcement in the workplace so there is no magnet for these people to move into the United States. And you need to deal honestly with the 11 million or 12 million who are here and bring them out of the shadows so that we know who they are and where they are, whether they are working and whether they pose any threat to this country. It is a comprehensive approach.

Senator ISAKSON is stuck on the first issue—just enforce the borders and do nothing else until you have enforced the borders. But we have learned that is, in and of itself, not successful. You need to have a comprehensive approach—enforcement at borders, enforcement in the workplace, and a process that brings these people out of the shadows.

Senator SALAZAR has offered a reasonable alternative. He says leave it to the President of the United States to certify that it is in the best interest of our national security to move forward with this process. That puts a mind on the job that we need. It isn't just a simple certification of enforcement; it looks at the whole picture. Until you look at the whole picture on immigration, we will continue to have politicians debate it back and forth, with their 30-second ads flying in both directions, and nothing is going to happen.

This is a unique opportunity in our history to move forward with comprehensive immigration reform, something that will finally work.

Twenty years ago, when we granted amnesty, we thought it was the end of the issue. We were wrong. We have seen a dramatic increase in illegal immigration into the United States. Now, 20 years later, let us not repeat the mistake with a simpleminded, linear approach that says if we just get tough on the border, everything will be fine. You have to do the whole package. The President argued for that last night.

Part of that enforcement in the workplace is a tamper-proof ID card using biometrics so we know who that employee is, where they live, what their background may be, and finally a process—a long, tough process—where those who are here undocumented can earn their way into legal status. It may take them 10 years, it may take them 12 years, but in that period of time, they have to learn English, they have to work, they have to pay their taxes, they have to pay any fines they owe this Government for coming into this country, and they have to show they have a demonstrated knowledge of our history and the way our Government works. They have to report every year so we know that they are keeping up with their requirements. And if they stick with it for 10 or 12 years, they will reach legal status. It is not amnesty, but it is a sensible part of comprehensive immigration reform.

I urge my colleagues to support Senator SALAZAR and oppose Senator ISAKSON's amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I yield the remaining time to the Senator from Colorado.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado is recognized for 4 minutes 20 seconds.

Mr. SALAZAR. Mr. President, let me reiterate that the approach which was outlined by the President, which the bipartisan coalition of Senators has been working on, is a comprehensive approach. History has shown that when we take only one aspect of immigration reform, we fail. We failed in 1986. We failed at different efforts over the last 20 years. This time, we have to get it right.

The President of the United States is right when he ultimately stated last night that we need comprehensive immigration reform. The proposed amendment by my colleague from the State of Georgia, and my good friend, essentially would take what are the 54 provisions of title I in this piece of legislation we are currently considering, going from section 101 all the way to section 154. It essentially would say that we are only going to be about a border enforcement bill without dealing with the other aspects of the legislation which is proposed. He would leave on the side what we do to bring the 11 million people who are here out of the shadows and get them registered in a system where we can monitor them, make sure if they are criminals they are deported, make sure if they are law-abiding citizens we put them in a kind of guest worker program that will work, and his provision essentially would gut this bill.

The proposal of my good friend from Georgia is no different in most respects from what came out of the House of Representatives. It is a border-enforcement-only bill. It has been said time and time again that if we are going to address the issue of immigration reform, we need to do it in a comprehensive manner. We need to move with border enforcement, and our legislation does that. The President's statement last night that in the meantime we will go ahead and have the National Guard assist us in making sure we are securing our borders needs to be followed.

Second, we need to make sure we are enforcing our immigration laws within the interior of our country. Our legislation proposes to do that.

Third, we need to deal with the reality of the bill and the elephant in the room—the 11 million people who are living here in the United States today. We need to bring them out of the shadows. My friend from Georgia would propose to leave them in the shadows for an indefinite period of time, whether it be 5 years, 20 years, or 30 years, whatever it might be. That will not work. We need to move forward with comprehensive immigration reform today.

I urge my colleagues to oppose the Isakson amendment and to support the amendment which I have offered.

I yield my time back to the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ISAKSON. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute 30 seconds to the Senator from South Dakota, Mr. THUNE.

Mr. THUNE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my name be added as an original cosponsor of the Isakson amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. THUNE. Mr. President, I would like to speak in support of that amendment this morning.

This approach is a very sound concept. In fact, as we get to the debate about immigration, clearly the first and most important issue to deal with is the issue of border security, and the people across this country are asking us to deal with it. Frankly, until we deal with that issue, we can't move on to the next issue of dealing with the 12 million people who are here already. Until we give the American people the confidence that we are serious about enforcing the border, that becomes an irrelevant conversation. This is a very simple concept.

I have supported the Isakson amendment since he first introduced it. We discussed this issue several weeks ago when he had his amendment filed and pending. I am glad we will have an opportunity to vote on it. I believe it is a very sound approach. It simply says that until we do these things, we can't do these things. The first and foremost paramount responsibility here is border security.

We need to enforce our borders. The Isakson amendment makes that abundantly clear.

Again, before we can deal with the other issues in this debate, I believe the American people expect us to have a secure border and one that is enforced and one that we are serious about in getting our illegal immigration stopped.

I yield the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I will take the last minute 20 seconds.

We ought to learn from history. What we learn from history, from the studies on the border and listening to those hearings, is that just trying to build up the border and add the fence down there is not going to solve the problem. If you read from history, as has been pointed out by Republicans and Democrats, if you just grant amnesty, it doesn't solve the problem.

We have crafted a balanced program which will have strong national security, strong border protection, and also have strong enforcement in terms of employers and recognize that those individuals who are here working hard, playing by the rules, and paying the fines, we will have the ability to adjust their status.

You have to have the three legs of the stool. History teaches us that. The Isakson amendment will take two of those important legs away. It doesn't make sense if we are interested in national security, and it doesn't make sense if we want to have real immigration reform. The President understands it. I hope the Senate will.

The President understands it. I hope the Senate will.

Mr. REID. Is all time expired?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURR). The Senate majority still has 2½ minutes.

Mr. ISAKSON. Facts are stubborn figures. Senator KENNEDY said we should learn from history. He served in 1986, when we passed a bill that promised border security that did not deliver and granted amnesty that did not deliver, and we ended up quadrupling the number of illegal aliens in the United States.

Facts are also stubborn because every word he said about the Isakson amendment is inaccurate. He did not discuss a single word of the 614 pages, except to say before you grant legal status to people here illegally, we must have border security so we do not repeat the tragedy of 1986.

In Deep South Georgia, we have an old saying: If you want to get the mud out of the spring, you have to get the hog out of the water. The hog in the water in this debate is those who have been trying to obfuscate everything we are trying to say.

Simply, we want the same thing. We want comprehensive reform. That begins with what the President said last night: Border security first. The President said last night that we can do it by 2008. Ask Congress for the money. This is an authorization. I want a commitment.

If we do not commit to the people of the United States of America—our school systems that are overcrowded, our health care and emergency rooms that are challenged, our civil justice system is challenged—and see to it that we get a border that is secure so we can manage our legal immigration in the future, history will be the teacher that we had in 1986.

Facts are stubborn things. The fact is, the Isakson amendment on this comprehensive reform says what the President said last night, that securing the border first is job one. I submit anything that anyone says that is the opposite means they want to repeat the tragedy of 1986.

I ask my colleagues to sincerely search their heart and soul for their constituents and vote in favor of this amendment. Let's have comprehensive reform that begins with a secure border.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is expired.

Mr. REID. I will use my leader time.

10,000TH VOTE FOR SENATOR LEVIN

Mr. REID. Mr. President, on the next vote cast, we are going to vote on the Isakson amendment, and then we will vote on the Salazar amendment. On the Salazar vote, the distinguished senior Senator from the State of Michigan, CARL LEVIN, will cast his 10,000th vote.

It is very difficult in a short period of time, or a long period of time, to convey to the American people and to this Senate the personality of CARL LEVIN. I have had the good fortune of serving in Congress now for more than two decades. Prior to that, I had the good fortune of representing the State of Nevada in other positions in government. CARL LEVIN is a unique individual. I have never served with anyone whom I had greater respect for his ability to understand an issue.

There are so many instances. I can look at the last time we did the Defense authorization bill. We worked very hard to get 45 Democratic Senators to have an amendment that we could agree on that we would put forward our position on the intractable war in Iraq, led by CARL LEVIN. In numerous meetings we held in my office, we came up with an amendment. He would come back each time with his handwritten notes that this needed to be changed or that needed to be changed.

To show his integrity and how people feel about him on both sides of the aisle, when we finished our difficult work, he called me within an hour and said: Would you mind if I discussed this with Senator WARNER? I said: Of course, not. Within a few minutes, Senator WARNER was a cosponsor of that Democratic amendment. It was not a Democratic amendment, as we thought it was, it was an amendment for the Senate, and it passed overwhelmingly in the Senate.

With the Schiavo case that came before the Senate, a very difficult matter that came before the Senate, we were out of session. CARL LEVIN was in town. He worked on this, as many will recall, during the recess. We went back and looked at it some more. CARL LEVIN was changing parts of this. Changes were agreed upon by the Senate, and when this matter went to the Eleventh Circuit, the reason they decided the way they did is because of what LEVIN did to this matter before the Senate.

These are only two examples I came up with as I walked into the Senate. The instances are too numerous to mention, but it is not difficult to mention what a difference he has made in the Senate and in our country.

Here is a man who has an exemplary family. His wife Barbara is one of the loveliest, kindest, finest people, with one of the best smiles I have ever seen on a person I have ever known. He has three daughters.

To try to convey the kind of man he is, I was thinking about running for the Senate. I was a Member of the House of Representatives. I came to visit CARL LEVIN. One of the first things I said to him after I said hello, I said: I served in Congress with your brother, Sandy. CARL LEVIN said to me, in the most positive, affectionate way about his brother, he said: Yes, he is my brother, but he is also my best friend.

That is CARL LEVIN, a man who was born in Detroit, MI, who has an outstanding educational background. He was a law professor. He practiced law. He now joins a distinguished group of Senators. CARL LEVIN will shortly cast his 10,000th vote. Senators SARBANES, LUGAR, and HATCH are in that category. Over 12,000 votes for Senators LEAHY, BIDEN, and DOMENICI. Over 14,000 votes for Senators STEVENS, INOUE, and KENNEDY; and Senator BYRD has over 17,000 votes. One, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, he is in the top ten. And that is the same reason that Time magazine announced that CARL LEVIN was one of the best Senators in the United States. I agree with Time magazine. Congratulations, CARL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. I ask unanimous consent for 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, first, let me thank the Democratic leader for everything he said and for everything he stands for and who he is.

This is a moment I have not looked forward to in terms of responding to what I knew was forthcoming. Basically, I don't feel 10,000 votes old. The Senate has changed a lot in the last 27 years. Some things have not changed. The trust and the affection and respect we feel for each other is still the basis of our operations. That has not changed.

This Senate is still, surely, the singular place in the world, where men and women can give their own lives and do so with respect for the rights of the minority to debate, to deliberate, and, yes, to delay, if that is important to making an issue clear.

The resilient strength of this Senate makes it almost impossible for someone to serve without sensing the majesty of this place and the special responsibility we all have as caretakers of the Senate.

In addition to my leader, I thank all the leaders of this Senate for making it what it is and keeping it what it is so be. I thank all my colleagues for all of the courtesies they have shown me over the years.

Let me thank my family for the constancy with which they have supported me and thank my staff for all the help they have provided to me. We all know we cannot function without family and staff giving us the total support.

I thank our leader for mentioning my wife Barbara and our three children. I would only add four grandchildren to that. Other than that, he did cover the waterfront so well for us, and I am grateful for that.

Finally, let me thank the people of Michigan who have honored me for all these years with their trust and what is the responsibility that we all bear to our State and to our people.

I look forward to working with each of you, my colleagues, in the future as we have in the past. And a special thanks, again, to you Senator REID for the feeling and passion with which you do your work and in speaking those words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the Isakson amendment No. 3961.

Mr. KENNEDY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. And I ask for the yeas and nays on the following amendment, on the Salazar amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SALAZAR. I ask unanimous consent Senator MARTINEZ be added as a cosponsor to amendment No. 3994, which is my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment (No. 3961) was rejected.

Mr. CONRAD. I move to reconsider the vote and to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I voted to support the Isakson amendment which would have delayed the implementation of the amnesty provisions of this bill until the Secretary of Homeland Security had certified that the bill's security measures are fully operational.

I oppose amnesty for illegal aliens—absolutely and unequivocally. Therefore, I support those measures, such as the Isakson amendment, that would prevent the amnesty provisions of this bill from taking effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

CONGRATULATING SENATOR LEVIN

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, before we proceed to the next vote, I want to acknowledge that this is a historic vote for us in Michigan because our senior Senator CARL LEVIN will be casting his 10,000th vote. We are so proud of him in Michigan. He stands for all that we believe in and serves with dignity and is respected by everyone here. I want to mention he is the 25th Senator in the history of our Senate to cast 10,000 votes.

I went back to research his very first vote. I thought this was an example of a historic moment. He cast his first vote on February 22, 1979. It was in favor of a Byrd motion to table a Stevens amendment to S. Res. 61 which was a postclosure rules change resolution. It was very profound, and he has been profound ever since.

Congratulations to Senator LEVIN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I join the minority leader in congratulating our colleague, Senator LEVIN, on his 10,000th vote. His 28-year tenure has been marked by vote after vote. It represents his integrity, his character, his leadership. He cast his vote in some of the most significant consequential debates of this country.

Senator LEVIN has been that tireless advocate for our military, our military families. His work with Chairman WARNER on our annual defense authorization bill provides that critical support for our troops in the form of both equipment and readiness. In 2004, the National Guard Association of the United States presented him with the Harry S. Truman Award for distinguished service in support of national defense. The awards go on and on and on. This is only one of the many awards he has received for his unflagging support of our military. I commend and thank Senator LEVIN for his tremendous contributions to this country and for his long and distinguished service to the people of Michigan.

(Applause, Senators rising.)

Mr. KENNEDY. I move to reconsider the vote, and I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I believe when we return at 2:1 p.m., we will go to Senator DORGAN's amendment, followed, hopefully, shortly thereafter by the Bingaman amendment, depending on the outcome, for the notification of the Members.

I thank all of our colleagues for their cooperation for a good morning's debate and discussion.

I yield the floor.

RECESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will stand in recess until 2:15 p.m.

Thereupon, at 1:02 p.m., the Senate recessed until 2:16 p.m. and reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. VOINOVICH).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, it is 2:15. We are reconvening. We are about ready to proceed with the bill. We have quite a number of Senators who have stated an interest in filing amendments. We urge them to come to the floor so we can get a queue and proceed to consider the amendments and dispose of the bill.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, is the Senator asking an inquiry at this point? I did not hear the inquiry.

Mr. SPECTER. We are ready for your amendment, Senator DORGAN, if you are prepared to offer it.

Mr. DORGAN. I will be laying the amendment down in just about a minute. I am reviewing one piece of it. I will be laying the amendment down in about a minute.

Mr. SPECTER. While you are undertaking those last-minute preparations, would you give some consideration to a time agreement, an hour equally divided?

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I will do that, but I will not do it at the moment. I want to perfect the amendment and begin discussions, see how many on my side and perhaps your side wish to agree with respect to the time.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from North Dakota.

AMENDMENT NO. 4017

Mr. DORGAN. I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN] proposes amendment numbered 4017.

Mr. DORGAN. I ask unanimous consent the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To prohibit aliens who are currently outside the United States from participating in the H-2C guestworker visa program)

On page 250, between lines 13 and 14, insert the following:

“(1) ELIGIBILITY FOR DEFERRED MANDATORY DEPARTURE STATUS.—The alien shall establish that the alien is eligible for Deferred Mandatory Departure status under section 245C.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I have offered an amendment. I will describe very briefly what it does. It essentially strikes the guest worker provision, as it is now known. Guest worker is described in other ways—future flow, guest worker. It strikes that provision, but it does it in a way that would not interrupt the underlying bill's decision to have those who are here for 2 to 5 years to step outside this country and step back in. It would not affect those folks, but it would prevent the guest worker provision from being operative in a way that would allow those who are now living outside of our country, who are not in this country, living outside of the country, to come in in future years under this guest worker provision.

The guest worker, future flow—all these titles that are used by the President and by people in the Senate, it is kind of like Mr. Roger's Neighborhood. These are wonderful-sounding terms—future flow. I didn't know what that was until I learned or heard some of the descriptions of future flow. What that means is we are going to provide a circumstance where we try to get control of immigration but at the same time allow others who are now outside of our country to come into our country under a guest worker provision.

Let me describe the circumstances, especially on the southern border, for the moment. Last year, we believe there were 1.1 to 1.2 million people who tried to come into this country but were apprehended and stopped and prevented from coming in illegally. We also believe that in addition to the 1.1 million or so who were stopped and not allowed to come into this country illegally, there were another probably three-quarters of a million people who came illegally across the southern border.

In addition to that, about 175,000 people came in legally across the southern border—those who had children here under the quotas or other circumstances and came into our country legally. So 1.1 million were apprehended and stopped, about three-quarters of a million came illegally, and about another 175,000 came legally into this country.

We are at a time where, if you read the paper every single day, what you see is the new corporate economic strategy. In fact, Tom Friedman wrote a book, “The World Is Flat.” Of course, the world isn't flat. That sells a lot of books, but the world isn't flat. The proposition of “The World Is Flat” is that there are now 1 billion to 1.5 billion people around the rest of the world willing to work for a very small amount of money, so those who want to produce products can move those jobs now to China, India, Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, and produce for a very small amount of income. So they pay pennies: 20 cents an hour, 30 cents an hour, 40 cents an hour to produce the product. They ship the product into the United States to sell. Then they run the income through the Cayman Islands so they don't have to pay taxes.

Even while this strategy of shipping good American jobs overseas is underway by some of the largest corporate interests, those interests also want not only to ship those jobs overseas, they want to import cheap labor at home. That is the strategy: export good American jobs and import cheap labor. That is probably a good strategy for profits, I am guessing, but it is an awful strategy for this country. That is not the way we built this country. The broad middle class that burgeoned in this country in the last century happened because of the good jobs that paid good wages and had health care benefits and retirement and so on. That is what helped create a middle class in this country. And the presence of that middle class in this country, the middle-income workers in this country, has made this country something very unusual on the face of the Earth.

Now we see a new strategy. The world is flat, we are told. That flat world means you can get rid of American jobs, move them to China. I have told the stories forever, so I will not again, but Fruit of the Loom underwear, you know, the underwear with the dancing grapes telling us how wonderful Fruit of the Loom is, they are gone; Levis, they are gone; Huffy bicycles, gone; the Little Red Wagon is gone; Fig Newton cookies is now Mexican. I could tell stories forever about exporting American jobs, but the corollary to that is that is not enough. Exporting good American jobs is not enough. Now it is importing cheap labor.

Alan Blinder—no radical economist, former Vice Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board—Alan Blinder just wrote a piece. He said there are somewhere between 42 million and 54 million American jobs that have the potential to be outsourced. He said not all of them will be moved abroad in search of cheap wages. But, he said, even those that stay here are going to have to compete with cheaper wages, with lower wages abroad. So that is the future. That is the strategy. That is the new corporate approach—aided and abetted, I might say, by the Congress with these trade deals.

In addition to that which is threatening American workers, we have the back side coming in: illegal workers. Yes, they are illegal. When they come into this country, they are illegal if they don't come through a legal process. They come in and compete with subpar wages with American workers.

Let me just ask the question for a moment: What would happen in this country if tomorrow we had no immigration laws at all? If we said: Look, we are the United States of America. We are a great country. We say to the rest of the world: Welcome. Come here, stay here, live here, work here. Just come on, come to America. You are welcome. There are no longer any immigration laws at all.

What would be the result of that in a world in which one-half of the population lives on less than $2 a day, in a world in which one-half of the population hasn't even made a telephone call? What would be the result of our saying we no longer have any immigration laws; we invite the rest of the world to come to this country?

It is interesting. There have been polls done in other countries: How many of you would like to immigrate to the United States? It is massive numbers of people. We would be awash in people. So it is not selfish for our country to be somewhat protective of our standard of living, somewhat protective of our jobs and our interest in retaining a middle class that lives well, that has a job in order to work at a decent wage, has health care, has retirement. It is not selfish for us to do that.

There are many voices speaking for immigrants. I don't want in any way to diminish the dignity or the worth of immigrants. I come from immigrants. I assume most of the people serving in this Chamber come from immigrant parents, grandparents or great-grandparents.

I don't want in any way for this debate to inflame or in any way diminish the worth or dignity of immigrants. I don't want us to inflame passions against those who have tried to escape poverty in their own countries to come to the United States to escape misery and poverty. But we in America have a responsibility as well to our citizens, and there is precious little talk about them in this Chamber these days. We have built the strongest economy in the world. Now we talk about immigration. I don't think that we can talk about immigration without talking about American jobs, about salaries, workers' benefits, and opportunities for those who are here legally. Yes, I am talking about all the American workers. That includes Hispanic workers, African-American, Asian, Caucasian, all American workers.

I will show some charts in a few moments to discuss what is happening to them.

We have gotten a lot of people speaking up for those who are immigrants, many who have come here illegally.

Let me speak for a moment on behalf of American workers, and let me talk for a little bit about what has happened to the American workers.

We are told by the President and by others, including debate in this Chamber, that Americans don't want these jobs, so we need the illegal immigration to occur. And now we would make it legal, and now we would have additional guest workers to occur because Americans will not take these jobs.

Seven percent of the transportation workers are illegal, but 93 percent are legal.

Americans will not take those jobs?

Ninety-one percent of the jobs in manufacturing are U.S. citizens, legal workers, and 9 percent are illegal workers.

Construction: 86 percent of the people who work construction in this country are American workers, legal workers, American citizens here legally. And we are told that Americans will not take these construction jobs? I don't think so. Of course, they will.

The evidence is pretty substantial. The question is: What has been the impact on American workers of illegal immigration?

We talk about this, as I said, as if it is kind of "Mister Rogers' Neighborhood"—it is all feel-good, easy sound bites, soft words, future flow, guest workers.

Let me talk about a study by Professor Borjas of the John F. Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University in 2004. He said the impact of immigration from 1980 to 2000—and principally we are talking about legal immigration, the impact by ethnicity of U.S. workers—has cost the average American worker $1,700 in lost wages per year.

Whom does it hurt the most? It hurts the Hispanic workers in this country, those who are here legally. It hurts the African-American workers. It hurts Asian workers. It hurts all American workers.

This is not a painless or pain-free exercise to have millions and millions of people come through the back door into this country illegally to assume jobs. It is not painless. The American people are paying the cost of that. The American workers are experiencing the problems as a result of it. The problems are lower wages.

Let me describe what has happened to income in this country. As we can see the changes in after-tax earnings by income bracket, the top 1 percent are doing well. It is the case of the top fifth. The people at bottom are hurting, with very little income increase at all.

What is happening is we have now the development of the "haves" and the "have nots." At least a portion of that, in my judgment, a significant portion of that imbalance comes as a result of public policy in this Chamber from people who believe that as the economy works when we put something in at the top—and it is called classic trickle-down economics—put something in at the top, it filters down, trickles down, and pretty soon everybody gets a little damp. It is not true. It doesn't work.

I would like to show some additional charts about what we are dealing with.

When we talk about guest workers and future flows, let me describe it specifically with respect to the bill that is on the floor. The bill on the floor says we have 11 million to 12 million people who have come here illegally. We are not sure how many, we need to find a status for them. And it develops three different categories for them. But it also says, in addition to all of that, there are other people living outside of our country whom we want to invite in, in the future, 325,000 a year, and over 6 years with a 20-percent escalator each year that is in this bill you are talking about the potential of 3.8 million additional people.

This piece of legislation says: By the way, let us invite another 10 million people here in 10 years.

That is the way it grows, with 325,000 and the 20-percent escalator.

Is that what we should be doing in our country? Is that the strategy that makes sense?

This country is unusual on this planet. We live here with about 6.3 billion neighbors. We circle the Sun, and in this spot on the globe there is illumination of having developed something extraordinary in the world. I have described the time when I was on a helicopter that ran out of fuel in the mountains and jungle area between Honduras and Nicaragua. We landed under power, but the red lights were on and the bells were ringing and we were not going to fly anymore. We were stuck there for some many hours until we were found. The campesinos from the mountains came to see who had landed. We had an interpreter with us. I was asking them, through this interpreter, a little bit about their lives, what they would aspire for their lives. A young woman was there with three or four children. I said: What is it you aspire for your life?

I want to come to America. I want to move to the United States.

I asked: Why?

Because that is the area of opportunity. The United States is an area of opportunity. It is jobs. It is for me and my children to have jobs in the future.

We find that virtually in every part of the world. So as a result of that, we have had to have immigration laws. Twenty years ago, we had this same problem; that is, illegal immigration overrunning this country.

It has a direct impact, as I have shown, on American workers, something not much discussed in this Chamber today. But it has a direct and a detrimental impact on American workers. That includes Hispanic workers who are here legally and have been here a long time. It diminishes their wages. But 20 years ago we had this debate.

The debate when I was serving in the House at the time was: How do you deal with immigration? The answer was simple. Senator Simpson was on the floor of the Senate, Congressman Mazzoli was in the House, and a piece of legislation passed and was signed into law called the Simpson-Mazzoli bill. There was great celebration because this was going to solve the immigration problem.

How would it solve the immigration problem and employer sanctions? The proposition was that the lure for people to come to this country is to find a job. If you shut off the jobs and you say to the employers: Don't you dare hire illegal workers, don't you dare bring people through the back door and pay them subpar wages because they are illegal. If you do that, you are going to be hit with sanctions. This Government is going to penalize you.

Guess what. Last year, I am told there was one enforcement action in all of the United States against a company that was hiring illegal workers. The year before, there were three actions in all of the United States against employers who hired illegal workers.

This Government did nothing to deal with it, nothing.

The other day in North Dakota—they are building an energy plant—I believe it was the highway patrol who picked up seven people, illegal workers. I think six were from Guatemala and one from Mexico. They drove them about an hour north to Minot, ND, to the immigration office. They processed them through the immigration office. They then drove them back to the motel near, I believe, Washburn, ND, dropped them off and said: You are now required to come to Minneapolis within the next month—they gave them a specific date—to a hearing on your case. Of course, they will never be in Minneapolis. We will never see them again. They will never show up again.

It is the process. As some call it, catch and release. You catch them, you let them go, and say: Show up later. Oh, by the way, next time they show up, they will probably be on another job site because this Government does nothing to enforce the law. Now we are told this is a three-legged stool, as if this is a furniture store. All morning I hear three-legged stool. I do not know where the stool came from. I don't know about the three legs. All I know is that you must, it seems to me—if you are going to be dealing with immigration issues—find a way to effectively reduce illegal immigration. You have to do that. You don't do that by turning a blind eye to the issue of employer sanctions.

Say you are an employer and want to bring in a string of illegal agricultural workers and pay them subpar wages, you are going to get in trouble. If you do that, you are not going to solve this problem.

In the President's address last night to the country, I didn't hear a word about that. He is going to deploy the National Guard, an overstretched National Guard. They have been on multiple deployments, in some cases, to Iraq, but no discussion about shutting off the jobs that represent the lure for illegal workers to come into this country—not a word.

It is true that the first step to deal with the immigration issue is to enforce the prohibition on hiring illegal workers.

This issue we are discussing is a big, broad issue. It has legal immigrants coming in who are not citizens but entitled to work under the H-2A program and the H-2B program. We have workers who come in on a temporary basis dealing in agriculture. We already have processes by which people come into this country legally to work. What is being discussed is on top of all of that.

You have a bill that comes to the floor of the Senate that says: All right. Let us take the 11 million or 12 million—whatever it is—who are here illegally and separate them into three groups. One is the group that has been here less than 2 years. They have to go back. The second is the group that has been here 2 to 5 years. They have to go back, and then they can come right back in.

Third is the group that has been here longer than 5 years, and they have the capability of earned citizenship, as will the 2 to 5 million people under certain circumstances.

So that is what is in front of us.

On top of that, as if they put a big old discolored patch on an inner tube, this legislation—and by the way, in addition to dealing with that and trying to get tough on employer sanctions, something I have heard before as all of my colleagues have as well, and responding to those needs—in addition to all of that, we have decided there are not enough people coming into our country, so we want to allow more, up to 3.8 million more in the coming 6 years. These are people who do not now live here whom we want to come in to take American jobs. We are told the reason for that is there will be people attempting to get across the border anyway.

Let us at least recognize they are going to be what are called future flows.

That seems to be giving up on the issue of whether you have good border enforcement. You either have decent enforcement on the border or you don't. If you have good enforcement, why on Earth would you decide that in addition to allowing 11 million or 12 million people who are here illegally to deal with their status internally in this country and decide in addition to that we have decided that, yes, we have quotas for our country. We have immigration opportunities in H-2A and H-2B and many other areas. But on top of that, we have decided we want up to 3.8 million more to come through our doors. Why is that provision in this bill?

I am told it is in this bill because that is the price the Chamber of Commerce extracted for supporting this bill. No one has disabused my plea of that. I am told that is the basis on which the U.S. Chamber of Commerce would support this piece of legislation. Why would they want up to another 3.8 million in 6 years, or far more in 10 years? Why would they want additional guest workers or future flows to come in legally on top of what is already allowed in this legislation? The answer is simple. It goes back to the first chart I showed. It is the economic strategy and the new national world, exporting good jobs and importing cheap labor. The guest worker provisions and the future flow provisions are about importing cheap labor.

Yesterday I mentioned a man named Jim Fyler. Jim Fyler died because he was shot 54 times. He was shot 54 times because Jim Fyler believed strongly that people should have the right to collectively bargain and to organize. Jim Fyler cared deeply about coal miners and the conditions under which coal miners were working: underground, long hours, child labor, bad wages, no benefits. Jim Fyler was one of those folks who, on behalf of collective bargaining, on behalf of forming a union of coal miners, was shot 54 times.

We have gone through all of that in a century—people losing their lives fighting, battling for the right to organize, people battling for the right to work in a safe workplace. We have had the political fights for minimum wages, the fight to prevent polluting the air and water by companies producing products and dumping their chemicals into the water and the air. We have been through all of these fights.

Now the American worker is told: By the way, those fights are over. In fact, you won them for a while, but now you have lost because anyone who wants to produce can pole-vault over that and move their production to China and hire someone for 33 cents an hour, work them 7 days a week, 12 to 14 hours a day, and if American workers do not like it, tough luck: The reason we did it is because you cannot compete.

By the way, for those who still have your jobs and they are not outsourced, look behind you. In the back door, we are bringing in low wage workers. Those low wage workers will work for substantially less money than you are willing to work.

This is about low wage replacement workers, as I call them. It is not guest workers. It is not future flow. It is low wage replacement workers, 3.8 million in the coming 6 years in this bill.

My amendment does two things. One, it gets rid of this future flow guest worker. That does not mean we won't have immigration. We will. We have many other provisions in the law allowing for legal immigration, temporary workers, agricultural workers. That already exists. I eliminate the provision that is above that.

My amendment also accommodates the underlying bill, if, in fact, it passes, and will not interrupt that with respect to the 2- to 5-year people who must step out of the country before they come back into the country and then seek legal status. I have written this amendment so I don't interrupt that, either. Someone mentioned earlier that they thought this would affect that. It does not. This simply affects the piece of legislation that will allow those who never lived in this country, who now live outside of our country, and who, in this piece of legislation, will be told, in addition to all the legal ways you can come to this country, we are going to have a future flow, a guest worker provision that allows you to take American jobs. Why? Because I guess American workers are not available for those jobs or maybe it is because this same body has not increased the minimum wage for nearly 9 years. For 9 years, this body has not seen fit to increase the minimum wage. Maybe there are jobs they have trouble getting the American workers to take. Maybe it is because they have not increased the minimum wage at the bottom of the economic ladder, the bottom rung. The solution to that? Well, we will not increase wages for American workers. Let's not shore up benefits for American workers. Let's instead decide we will bring in additional guest workers from outside of our country.

I will show a chart that describes what these folks are earning. In Russia, it is 51 cents an hour in wages; 37 cents an hour in Nicaragua; 33 cents an hour in China; 33 cents an hour in Bangladesh; 30 cents an hour in Haiti; and 11 cents an hour in India. This is what we want American workers to compete with?

It is one thing to see American jobs moved to those overseas wages. I have spoken at great length and I have almost resisted the attempt to speak at greater length about these companies which have decided to avail themselves of 20-cents-an-hour labor so they can ship their product to the store shelves in Pittsburgh, Fargo, Los Angeles, and Chicago. I have almost resisted that, but I am thinking maybe I shouldn't. Maybe I should discuss at some length the circumstances of moving those jobs overseas. Then, by the way, for those whose jobs have not moved, we have a surprise for you in the back end.

We now have, additionally, guest workers coming in who will work at the bottom of the economic ladder and, as the professor from Harvard has said, put downward pressure on wages in this country.

All I am asking the Senate is this: Maybe we could have some discussion, even as we talk about immigration, about the impact and the effect of this subject on American workers, on workers who are here legally. Yes, those are Hispanics, African Americans, Asians, Caucasians, everyone. Many are struggling. They lose their job and get another job at lower pay. The burgeoning middle class is slimming down because the world is flat. We are, too.

That is total rubbish, of course. The so-called flat world is a rose-colored evaluation of how corporations can simply make more money by having American jobs leave our shores and then sell their products back into our country. I am saying that in the long term, I don't think that works. I don't think that supports or creates the foundation for the sustaining of a strong, robust economy in this country that grows for everyone.

We have dangerous inequalities in this country of ours with respect to income. I have shown a couple of charts about that. We need to have some discussion about the impact on American workers with respect to these policies. That is why I have offered this amendment.

I believe the Senator from Pennsylvania wishes to speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHAFEE). The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from North Dakota whether he is prepared now to enter into a time agreement. There have been no Senators on this side of the aisle who have expressed an interest in debating the issue. My reply will be relatively brief. My suggestion would be that we ought to seek to close off debate—it is now 8 minutes to 3 o'clock—close off debate by 3:15 and move on to another amendment.

I alert colleagues on this side: we are in a position to move forward with the Kyl-Cornyn amendment, which is next on the list. I do not know what amendments will be offered by the Democrats, but I have made an inquiry, and they are making an effort to identify the Senators who will offer amendments and bring them to the Senate. If the Kyl-Cornyn amendment can be worked out, which is a distinct prospect, we would then move to the Sessions amendment. I have alerted Senator SESSIONS. If he can come to the Senate in the next few minutes, that will be helpful. Then we have Senator VITTER's two amendments. Senator VITTER talked to me shortly before noontime. If he can come to the Senate and be available, we are in a position to move ahead.

I inquire of the Senator from North Dakota whether he is in a position to agree to conclude debate, say, in 20 more minutes, equally divided.

Mr. DORGAN. I am not in a position to do that. Forty minutes a side is satisfactory. I have a number of Members who have asked for time to speak on amendments. We are trying to reach them.

I understand the Senator from Pennsylvania has an interest in efficiency and moving forward, but there are a good many jobs that depend on getting these things right. This is an important amendment. I am happy to agree to 40 minutes a side.

Mr. SPECTER. I understand the position of the Senator from North Dakota.

I ask unanimous consent that 80 minutes be divided equally between the Senator from North Dakota and myself as manager of the bill and that the debate be concluded in 80 minutes, unless time is yielded back.

I now have the handiwork of the expert staff. In their form, I ask unanimous consent that there be 80 minutes for debate in relation to the Dorgan amendment, provided that no second degrees be in order prior to the vote, and after the use or yielding back of time, the Senate proceed to a vote in relation to the Dorgan amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SPECTER. I thank the Chair.

By way of reply, I can understand the concerns of the Senator from North Dakota about the loss of American jobs. I compliment him for speaking about this subject with some frequency with some effect in the Senate.

I agree totally with the Senator from North Dakota that we ought not to export American jobs. I also agree with the Senator from North Dakota that we ought to retain American jobs in America to the maximum extent that we are able to do so.

The Judiciary Committee had a hearing and had four witnesses testify. Without going into their testimony in great detail—it is all a matter of record—the net conclusions were that there would not be a significant impact in the loss of American jobs.

It is frequently said that the immigrants handle jobs that Americans do not want. As a generalization, that is true, but not universally true.

We have had considerable suggestions and contentions by Senators from agricultural States about the indispensable nature of immigrant workers. Anecdotally, I have many from my home State come to me and tell me about the need for agricultural workers.

Mr. DORGAN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPECTER. I would on his time.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, let me say quickly, and I appreciate the Senator's courtesy for yielding, my amendment does nothing with respect to agricultural workers. We still have the provisions in underlying law allowing for temporary workers to come in and support the agricultural needs of this country.

Mr. SPECTER. I am not unaware of that, but it goes to the overall point of the experts who testify as to whether we would be taking away jobs American workers would want. The experts further testify that although there was some impact on the wages, there would not be a significant loss in wages.

When the Senator from North Dakota talks about the costs of bringing in 10 million people, that simply is not what title IV does. The title he wishes to eliminate as to any immigrants coming into the country in the future is only open to those now in the country. Title IV provides that there be an annual cap of 325,000, with each guest worker employed for up to 3 years, renewable for an additional 3 years. Then the approach is that those individuals will return to their home country unless they can otherwise qualify to stay here.

The guest workers will enjoy travel privileges in and out of the United States and portability between jobs.

We allow workers to obtain green cards by self-petitioning, if they qualify, and allow students with advanced degrees in science and math to stay in the United States. Title IV exempts workers with advanced degrees in science and math from green card caps, and it increases the annual allotment of H-1B professional worker visas from 65,000 to 115,000, with a fluctuating cap.

Title IV is important as part of a balanced program. If we do not provide for guest workers who can fill the needs of the American economy, then we are going to create a vacuum and a situation where illegal immigrants will come in to fill those needs. But if we calibrate the number of guest workers which can be accommodated by our economy, then we will discourage illegal immigrants from coming in and taking jobs, finding jobs, which would otherwise be filled by the guest workers who come to this country legally.

This title has been crafted very carefully by the Judiciary Committee. There is substantial support for it, as I understand it, on the other side of the aisle, even as there is some opposition on this side of the aisle. But if there are other Senators who wish to come and debate on this side of the aisle, I invite colleagues to debate and move ahead, and perhaps yield back time if that time is not to be used.

I yield the floor.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I yield up to 15 minutes to the Senator from California, Mrs. BOXER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, thank you very much. I thank my colleague, Senator DORGAN, for being such a leader on this particular part of the bill which I have found extremely troubling from day one.

I note that the chairman of the Judiciary Committee said we better not take the guest worker program out because, oh, my goodness, if we do take it out, there will be more illegal immigration. Well, maybe I am wrong on this—I do not think I am—but isn't a basic part of this bill to strengthen the border, the protections at the border? And isn't that part of what we are trying to do so we can stop the flow of illegal immigration—and having done that, allow the 11 to 12 million who are already here, who have clean records, who are willing to step forward, who are willing pay a fine, the chance at earned legalization?

And then there is another piece that deals with specific sectors of our economy, such as agriculture, where we know there are problems with the workforce. With respect to the agriculture industry, we set up a program called AgJOBS, which I credit Senator FEINSTEIN for putting it in the bill. Senators CRAIG and KENNEDY, in a bipartisan effort, have supported this for many years, along with myself and others.

So we had, I thought, a very well balanced bill until we added a guest worker program. In other words, the bill strengthened the border in one section, created a pathway for the undocumented immigrants currently in the country, and then—addressed one area, agriculture, where we know we need these workers and set up a very carefully tailored program. The bill also made adjustments for highly skilled workers such as engineers, and fixed some of the visa programs.

So I thought that was a fairly balanced bill. Then what happened is, another piece was added, which is this really open-ended guest worker program which, in my opinion, will result in a permanent underclass of workers coming into our country.

What disturbs me is what the provision does to the American workforce. You hear: Oh, these are people who will do work that Americans won't do. Now, I would say that is a good argument when it comes to agriculture. But we have taken care of agriculture in the bill. We have the AgJOBS provision. And we have taken care of the 11 to 12 million undocumented workers currently in the U.S. and given them a path for continued employment.

So now, on top of it, we are looking at a program for 325,000 guest workers, each and every year, with an escalator of up to 20 percent added on to that. And what do you create now? A huge underclass of workers who will take jobs away from Americans.

Now, the American people are compassionate. They are understanding. I think most of them want us to do a comprehensive bill. Most of them do not like what is in the House bill, where if you lean over to help someone who may be having a heart attack on the ground in front of you and that person is undocumented, according to the House, you could go to jail. The American people do not like that.

But the American people also know we have not raised the minimum wage in almost 10 long years—which, by the way, I think we ought to darn well do on this bill—and that if you create another, virtually open-ended guest worker program, you are going to hurt the American people at the end of the day.

So you hear the colleagues on the other side saying: Oh, No. 1, if you don't have this additional guest worker program, then people will sneak across the border. No. We are strengthening the border. That is one of the underlying principles of the bill. So that is not accurate.

Now they say: Oh, if you don't do this, we will have jobs that are not filled. Now, what kind of jobs would guest workers do? Remember, we have already taken care of agriculture, so these guest workers are not for agricultural jobs. There are also separate provisions for the most highly educated immigrants, the various visa programs. So what would the guest workers do?

Here are some examples: construction, food preparation, manufacturing, and transportation jobs. Now, these are fields where the vast majority of jobs are held by U.S. citizens and by legal workers. So it is incorrect to claim that the guest worker program, which has been kind of added on to what I think is a good bill, is targeted at jobs Americans will not do. These jobs are good jobs in good industries.

Now, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, in 2004, there were 6.3 million workers employed in the U.S. construction sector, at an average wage of $18.21 an hour or $37,890 a year. Now, when I meet with my working people in California, they are fighting hard for these jobs. They want more of these jobs, not fewer of these jobs. The last thing they want is a guest worker program that is going to provide a big pool of workers who may make far less than this amount and take jobs away from my people.

I support the underlying bill except for this provision. I think this guest worker provision throws the whole thing out of whack.

For the bottom quarter of Americans, who are making an average wage of about $7 an hour, construction work is a dream job. They pray for those jobs. They stand in line hours for those jobs. But what are we doing if the Dorgan amendment does not succeed? We are going to take those jobs away because an employer is going to say: Gee, should I hire an $18-an-hour American worker or, let's see, a foreign worker in a guest worker program who I could pay less? You know what is going to happen.

Now, I think the real reason for a guest worker program is not what we hear about, oh, well, otherwise there will be more people sneaking across the border, or we are short all these workers and we don't have workers for construction jobs, transportation jobs, food preparation jobs, manufacturing jobs, and the like; but it is really to set up, in my view, a permanent number of workers who are prepared to work at very cheap wages. That would be bad for the American workforce.

If we take this guest worker program out of this bill, we will have, my colleagues, a far better bill, a bill that we can all feel good about, a bill that does, in fact, reach out and say to undocumented workers who have worked here 5 years, 10 years, 15 years, 3 years—and they have clean records and they have paid their taxes and they are willing to come forward and pay their fines, and the rest—we will have a good bill for them, we will have a good bill that strengthens the border, which I strongly support and have supported for years, we will have a balanced bill, that includes the AgJOBS piece. But if we do not take this out, we have a bill that I believe is going to hurt many American workers.

So I think the real reason this was put in was to have cheap labor, a cheap labor workforce.

Now, the median wage in Mexico is $1.83 an hour. The typical hourly wage in China is 33 cents. So I ask my colleagues, what does a minimum wage—even if it is not raised, and shame on us that it has not been raised in 9 long years, going on 10 years—what does a $5-an-hour wage look like? Heaven to those people. And we are going to sanction this fairly open-ended program that escalates up to 20 percent a year for what reason other than to provide a permanent cheap labor force? It is very worrisome to me.

There are some businesses that are wonderful, exemplary. There are others that would rather not look at their business as a family but just want to get the cheapest labor they can possibly get. So I cannot support the undermining of U.S. working conditions, and I cannot support a guest worker program that will decrease wages for low-income Americans.

For goodness' sake, I have stood on this floor 1 year—2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9—going on 10 years, fighting to increase the minimum wage. How could I possibly vote to keep in this bill a guest worker program when we have such an opportunity to strengthen this bill by stripping this out. It would leave us with a bill with tighter enforcement at the border, a humane, legal path for people who are living in the shadows—it will make us safer to get them out of the shadows, that is for sure—an AgJOBS program that is tailored to agriculture in a way that makes sense, and all those visa programs that address high skilled jobs? All that makes sense.

I commend the committee for giving us a chance craft such a bill. I would be proud to have as my legacy such a bill. But if we can remove this, what I call this guest worker add-on, if we can remove this, I think we will have a far stronger bill.

I commend my friend, Senator DORGAN. He is—I wanted to say he is dogged, and he is. He is dogged on behalf of working people. And I think he got this just right. I am very glad he has offered us this chance to improve this bill by pulling out the guest worker program.

With that, Mr. President, I yield back the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I would like a brief few minutes.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, how much time is remaining on both sides?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania has 35 minutes. The Senator from North Dakota has 27½ minutes.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I would just ask for 5 minutes in support of Senator DORGAN's amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SPECTER. I ask the Senator, are you for or against the amendment?

Mr. SESSIONS. I am for it. I know Senator DORGAN's time is limited. I would ask for maybe 3 minutes.

Mr. DORGAN. I will yield the Senator 5 minutes.

Mr. SESSIONS. I will try to wrap up briefly.

Mr. President, I believe this section of the bill as drafted is flawed. It goes further than the drafters and the American people or the President would want it to go. I am not sure how we can fix it at this point. I think the way to concentrate everybody's mind and get it fixed would be for the Dorgan amendment to pass.

Let's start over and talk about how we are going to handle this. My staff has looked at these numbers and tried to be as objective as they possibly can to see just what this would allow to occur in America if it were to pass, and I am confident that it includes more than people would think.

First of all, it is absolutely not true that this is a temporary worker program. It is called guest worker, which sounds like "temporary worker," but it is not. A person will come into our country under this program—325,000 the first year. Their employer can apply, the day they get here, the first year, for a green card. A green card gives them permanent residence in the United States, unless they get convicted of a felony or something. They get permanent residence. Within 5 years, they can apply for citizenship. So there is nothing temporary about this so-called guest worker program.

The President mentioned this morning a couple times, I understand—I heard it a bit, one clip on TV—that he favored a temporary worker program. This is not a temporary worker program.

Second, the numbers are extraordinary. Some of you who have been listening to me today are pretty good mathematicians. It is 325,000 the first year. But if that number is reached, automatically it kicks up 20 percent. The next year, if that number is reached, it is 20 percent; the next year, 20 percent; the next year, 20 percent. Those are pretty big numbers. In fact, if it were to stay at that 60 percent level, the numbers would be extraordinary. If you took the congressional resource number, that when a person comes in under this provision as a guest worker and they get a green card and are able to bring in their family, they have calculated 1.2 family members they would bring in for each guest worker. And if you add up those numbers of what we can reasonably expect over a 20-year period, it would be 133 million people. I don't think we will be at 20 percent every year. There are some factors that would show that is not the case. But that is what the bill authorizes, 20 percent automatically, if the caps are reached each year. If it went up at about 10 percent a year, you would still have a very significant increase in just this one program.

When you talk about 100 million people, you are talking about one-third of the current population of the United States being admitted under a low-skill worker program, called a guest worker program, that does not require high-skill abilities.

We need to completely redo it. I believe that; I really do. I urge my colleagues to think seriously about this, what we are voting for. I know the motive and I know the desire to do the right thing. We are a nation of immigrants. We are going to allow immigration in the future to continue. When we do, we will increase legal immigration into this country, and I will support that. But the rate of increase provided for in this provision is unjustifiable and, therefore, I support the Dorgan amendment.

I yield back the remainder of my time to the Senator from North Dakota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Arizona.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I begin by thanking the Senator from Pennsylvania for his continued leadership and incredible effort on this issue. He has invested thousands of hours, and I continue to appreciate the great job he is doing.

I also congratulate the President of the United States for his remarks last night. It is pretty obvious that his remarks were well received. He gave an outstanding depiction not only of the situation in the United States but the need for us to act. As he said near the end of his remarks:

Tonight I want to speak directly to Members of the House and Senate. An immigration reform bill needs to be comprehensive because all elements of this problem must be addressed together or none of them will be solved at all.

The President's comments are exactly right:

All elements of this problem must be addressed together or none of them will be solved at all.

He went on to say:

The House has passed an immigration bill. The Senate should act by the end of the month so we can work out the differences.

... The Senator from North Dakota, my friend, keeps talking about how the 1986 amnesty didn't work. It obviously didn't work. The reason it didn't work is because there wasn't a guest worker program, which is exactly what the Senator from North Dakota is trying to remove from the bill which then would give us 1986 all over again. More importantly, there are certain realities in America today that we are trying to address. Among them, that the American population is growing older. The baby boomers are retiring and leaving in their wake a number of jobs that need to be filled. Restaurants are locking their doors because there is no one to serve the food or clear dishes. Today, fruit is rotting on the vine and lettuce is dying in the fields because farmers can't find workers to harvest the crops.

Why do we need a viable guest worker program? So that we can stop the flood of illegals from coming across our borders, so we can make the present incentive that brings people to cross our borders illegally come to a halt. How do we do that? Our proposal says if an employer advertises a job for 60 days over the Internet, in a broad variety of ways, and no American comes forward to take that job, then a willing worker and a willing employer can join together in a contract that that person can come and work and fill that job that it has already been proven an American won't take. If that person continues to work in the United States, he is allowed to remain in the United States under our proposal.

An equally important aspect is that those who are now south of our border or anywhere else in the world will recognize that even if they cross our border illegally and are able to do so, there will be no job for them because the person who has entered into that contract has a tamper-proof biometric visa, and that is the only document that will be recognized as a valid document in order for someone to obtain employment.

So if someone does cross our border illegally, gets a job—one, he shouldn't get it because he doesn't have that contract but, two, if an employer hires that individual, then, of course, that employer should be prosecuted to the full extent of the law.

It is not an exact parallel, but let me remind colleagues, about 15 years ago we declared a war on drugs. All of us, we were going to stop the flow of drugs from coming across our border and destroying America. Any objective observer will tell you that our progress has been limited, if at all successful. Why? Because there is still a demand for drugs, and they are coming across our borders. People are using them, and there is still a demand.

There is a demand for workers in this country. And these people are coming across our borders, both northern and southern—we seem to concentrate so much of our attention on the southern border, but they are coming across both borders—to feed themselves and their families which they can't do where they are. I would be glad to discuss the failure of the Mexican Government to enforce their border, including their southern border, the need for us to work more cooperatively, the corruption problems, all of the issues that are associated with the issue of people coming across our border. But I predict, even if we had the best cooperation from the Mexican Government, people who can't feed themselves and their families where they are would still try to come to this country to get jobs. And if you can prove that there are jobs that no American will take, why not have a process, a system where someone can come and take it and work?

There are very few of my colleagues who would deny that the overwhelming majority of people who come to this country are honest, God-fearing, hard-working people, some of whom, by the way, have died in the desert in an effort to come, a larger number every year in the Arizona desert. Their only desire is to better themselves and provide better lives for themselves and their families. There are all kinds of other benefits associated with this, as well. One of the reasons why workers come to this country today and stay is because it is so difficult to move back and forth to the families and the homes they came from. If they have a tamper-proof visa, then, of course, on their vacations or even at the completion of their work, they would feel comfortable in returning to the place where they came from. But now, with the difficulty of crossing back and forth over the border, more and more of them remain here, and sometimes there is a criminal element.

Let me make another point. With illegal immigration, with transportation of people across the border who are coming across illegally, terrible things are happening. We have the coyotes who mistreat them, the coyotes who sometimes hold them captive and demand more and more money. There are shootouts on our freeways in Arizona. No State in America understands how terrible this issue is more than the citizens of my State because over half of the people crossing the border illegally are coming across the Arizona Sonora Desert. It is terrible what is going on. The exploitation and the mistreatment of these people who are honest, who are God's children, is terrible. If we could have a viable guest worker program, one that we could enforce, then you would lose this incredible attraction that draws people illegally into our country and, of course, all of the associated bad aspects of it that the citizens of my State of Arizona are so intimately familiar with.

Of course, it frustrates citizens. Of course, it frustrates the citizens of my State to have so many hundreds of millions of dollars in uncompensated health care costs, to have law enforcement requirements and expenses go up, to have all of the problems associated with illegal immigration. But to say somehow that we are not going to satisfy what is clearly, primarily economic immigration—by the way, the Border Patrol statistics say 99 percent of those attempting to cross our Nation's border illegally are "economic immigrants"—then we are going to be faced with a problem. No wall, no barrier, no sensor, no barbed wire will ever stop people from trying to do what is a basic yearning of human beings all over the world, and that is to have better lives for themselves and their families.

I hope and believe we will reject the Dorgan amendment. As the Senator from Alabama said, he wants to go back and start over. There are a number of us who have invested years in this issue.

I thank my colleague from Massachusetts for his continued leadership.

By the way, all of us are very grateful that he survived a very serious aircraft emergency recently. We are glad that he is well and with us.

I hope we will reject the amendment. I hope we will then move on to other amendments and within a relatively short period of time resolve most of the controversial aspects of this legislation.

Finally, I thank the President of the United States for what was greeted, as we know from the overnight polls, very favorably by the American people, his support of a comprehensive resolution of this terrible issue that afflicts our Nation, that of illegal immigration.

I yield the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. Would the Senator be willing to yield 10 minutes?

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I am delighted to yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Massachusetts. But before doing so, I urge other Senators to come to the floor to offer amendments. It is thought that if we focus on the guest worker provisions, we can finish them up this afternoon. Senator KYL and Senator CORNYN actually have precedence, but if they would be willing to yield to the other Senators on guest worker, I think we would finish this entire category. And perhaps we can find a way to work out Kyl-Cornyn in the interim. We will be looking for an amendment from Senator BINGAMAN who wants to reduce the number of guest workers. We have an amendment by Senator OBAMA which is on a related issue, I am told, on labor protections. And we have an amendment by Senator FEINSTEIN on having some sunset provisions. Then it is hoped we can get agreement on Senator KERRY's amendment and be able to accept that. If we could finish this grouping, we would be well on our way.

So if those Senators can come to the floor, we can work out time agreements and proceed in an expeditious manner. Meanwhile, Senator KENNEDY has requested 10 minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Pennsylvania. I want to thank my friend and colleague and the principal sponsor of the major comprehensive legislation.

In addition, I ask the Senator from Arizona, is it not true that you have the advertising for a worker in the United States where there is not an American worker and a willing worker who comes from outside of the country, that they have some important labor protections—protections with regard to the minimum wage, with regard to Davis-Bacon, with regard to service contracts, protections against exploitation of contractors, which were the source of great abuses at the time we had the Bracero issue and question. Is it not true that we have some protections for those individuals and, therefore, the idea that there is going to be a continuation of the exploitation of these workers working in a substandard way is fundamentally addressed? And is it also not true we have some 2,000 inspectors that are included in the underlying legislation that are going to be charged with the enforcement of this provision, which we have never had?

I listened to so many people talk about 1986 and the amnesty. Part of that provision was to have employer enforcement, and it didn't take place—not under Republicans or Democrats. But we have addressed that issue in the McCain-Kennedy proposal. We have 2,000 individuals whose sole responsibility is going to be in terms of the adequate enforcement of the labor protections. Is it also not true—it is true—that we have had important economists who have been before our Judiciary Committee who say that this will have an important, positive impact in terms of wages, working conditions, and treatment of American workers?

I know there are several items that are included in this question, but I want to make sure that we include and add on to what was the excellent presentation of the Senator from Arizona. We have talked about having a comprehensive approach. We hoped to have a comprehensive approach earlier this morning, and we have a comprehensive approach by recognizing what the Senator from Arizona has said and is so obvious—that is, if you are going to have the demand in this country and desperate people in the others, it makes a good deal more sense to try to develop a legal process by which that can be controlled, rather than think that we are going to be able to build fences high enough, long enough, along the 1,800-mile border and prohibit tunnels deep enough to keep people out.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, in response to my friend from Massachusetts, the Kennedy-McCain bill was a subject of long negotiations. And for more than a year, many of these issues were discussed with us and others. We felt that one of the most important aspects of this legislation was the protection of workers. One of the reasons why illegal immigration is so evil—one aspect you don't hear so much about is the terrible treatment and exploitation by cruel people of innocent people. A year ago last August, I believe, a policeman in Phoenix opened the door of a horse trailer and 73 people were packed inside, and one was a 4-month-old child.

Often, the Senator from Massachusetts and I have discussed what it is like to die in the desert. Every year, every summer more people die. They are not coming—99 percent of them, according to the Border Patrol—to do evil things but to work. Why are there jobs? Because there are jobs that Americans will not fill.

My response to the Senator from Massachusetts is that no one should be under the misunderstanding that this is another Bracero Program. The Bracero Program died because of the abuses associated with it. This gives them a status not of citizenship but of equal protection under the law. Any human being who resides in the United States should not be subject to exploitation and cruelty. That is the nature of America. We don't say in America that only citizens have the protections of our laws. We say anyone who comes to our country does, too.

So, finally, I want to say to my friend from Massachusetts that this is a fundamental part of this legislation, as he knows. If you take this out, you will then be face with the exact same economic pressures that we have been experiencing in the past. And as much as I believe in technology and as much as I think walls are important and UAVs and all that, there has never been a case in history where you have been able to stop people from doing something that has to do with their very existence. That is the way many people feel who come here.

Mr. KENNEDY. One final question. The Senator is addressing the issue of real security, national security. But we are committed to trying to have a secure border. We have gone through the measures which we have included in our legislation, many of which were enhanced during the course of the markup and have been expanded in the supplemental. But a key aspect of that security and in controlling the border is to stop the flow of people climbing fences, going into tunnels, and circumventing the border. A key aspect of this is to develop an orderly process by which people in the limited numbers that we have outlined in the bill would be able to come.

Would the Senator not agree that this is a security issue, border security issue, as well as a worker issue?

Mr. MCCAIN. I agree with the Senator. Interestingly enough, if I can mention again, the President of the United States, having served as Governor of the State of Texas, understands this issue very well. He made a very important point last night because all elements of this problem must be addressed together or none of them will be solved at all. The President is exactly right. None of these problems can be solved unless we have a comprehensive approach to this legislation.

Again, Mr. President, I say to my friend from Massachusetts, briefly, that we still have a terrible problem of drugs flowing across our border. If we had the guest worker program that we have talked about in this legislation, then there would be people who are coming for jobs, and we could focus our effort and attention on the drug dealers who are now corrupting America's youth. I thank the Senator and, again, I hope my colleagues realize the implication of this vote because if we did take it out, then obviously—at least in the view of most experts that I know—the rest of the reforms would not be either applicable or enforceable.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I am going to make a few comments briefly in rebuttal. Then I understand Senator DORGAN is prepared to yield back time and so will I. The other Senators whom we had talked about, when they come to the floor, will be ready for their amendments momentarily—Senators BINGAMAN, OBAMA, and FEINSTEIN. If they are not here, Senator VITTER can be recognized or Senator KYL and Senator CORNYN.

Mr. DORGAN. If the Senator will yield, I intend to use my remaining time at the conclusion of the comments of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Fair enough. My information was incorrect then. By way of brief rebuttal on the question of impact of guest workers on the American workers, I ask unanimous consent that the testimony of Dan Siciliano, from the Stanford Law School, be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my comments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit 1.)

Mr. SPECTER. The key statement of Mr. Siciliano is:

Some claim that immigration reduces employment levels and wages among native-born workers. This is generally not true.

The text of his statement amplifies on that. I ask unanimous consent that the statement of Professor Harry Holzer from Georgetown University be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my comments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SPECTER. The essence is a statement that:

There seems little doubt, then, that any negative effects of immigration on earnings are modest in magnitude and mostly short-term in nature.

I ask unanimous consent that the statement of Professor Richard Freeman, Harvard University, be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit 3.)

Mr. SPECTER. His conclusion was:

The gains to native complements exceed the losses to native substitutes, so that immigration—like trade and capital flows—are a net boon for the economy.

The Senator from California had made the argument that American employees are disadvantaged by cheaper costs from immigrant employees, and that is not so under the express terms of the statute.

The bill, S. 2611, does protect U.S. workers and eliminates incentives for employers to hire foreign workers, unless no U.S. worker is available. The bill provides that employers must at least pay the higher of the actual wage paid to other employees with the same skill so that immigrant workers are paid the same or, the prevailing wage for that job. Employers must provide the same working conditions and benefits that are normal to similar jobs, and employers must provide insurance if State workers' compensation doesn't cover all the workers. So that under the pending legislation, an employer has the same cost to hire a foreign worker as a U.S. worker.

How much time remains on my side? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eleven minutes.

Mr. SPECTER. I thank the Chair and yield the floor.

Senator KENNEDY. Let me get to this point that the Chairman has made, Dan, with your analysis. You gave us some projections. You talked about the limitations in terms of productivity, the numbers in the labor force, retirement issues, and then the job growth. And you talked about GDP, 14 percent and 11 percent. You talked about legal and the illegal. Maybe you could just flesh those figures out a little bit. What you appear to be saying is that if you consider the numbers of both legal and illegal, you get a certain rate of growth, and without them you get another different rate of growth. And that is what I would be interested in.

Maybe we cannot parse between the legal numbers the Chairman talked about, whether that is 500,000 or we are looking at just the general range of numbers now. Could you expand on that?

Mr. SICILIANO. Sure. Thank you, Senator Kennedy. I think this also answers Chairman Specter's question in part, which is: What is the true net economic contribution and where does it come from and why? And so from my viewpoint, and in light of the demographic numbers, it appears that our economy is on the trend growth rate, we hope, at 3 percent or better. Now, that growth rate of GDP is reliant on many factors. One of the key factors is available workers to fill the jobs that are created. So even while at the high-skill level you have Nobel Prize winners and other people inventing companies, somebody needs to build the buildings, clean the buildings, you know, service the lavatories in which these people are operating. And this is a part of the capacity for GDP to grow.

So to put a finer point on it, if you look at the fiscal economic impact, which is the Government coffers impact, it might be true that lower-skilled workers, just like all of us on average, actually, at the moment because of deficit spending, have a negative impact on the fiscal bottom line. But that should not be confused—and this would be a mistake to confuse this. That should not be confused with the economic impact. It is a little like my younger sister who recently said, "I am earning more, but look at all the taxes I am paying. I am paying more taxes." I said, "Yes, but you are earning more."

And so we may have a modest net negative fiscal impact for all low-wage workers in the United States, not just immigrants. That is not unique to immigrants, documented or undocumented, but what we do know is it helps us achieve a higher rate of growth and national income goes up, which benefits everybody. It becomes your challenge, I think to talk about how to, you know, work that out at who shares and how at the pie level. But it is clear that this divide between available workers and the demand for workers will slow down economic growth if we do not manage it appropriately.

Senator KENNEDY. Let me just get to the high skilled/low-skilled. I think most of us would like to believe that we are going to train our own people to be able to take these high-skilled jobs. And we have under our current programs training resources that are paid into the fund to try to continue to upgrade skills for Americans. But we are not able to get quite there at the present time.

Other countries, industrial countries, have required training programs. They pay—what is it?—in European countries a percent and a half, other countries, so that they have required training programs, which we do not have, continuing training programs which we do not have.

So how are we going to adjust? What is your sense about how we are going to—we have seen a significant—actually, we are getting the skills, but where people that are going to into these high-skilled programs, but how are we going to get Americans up to speed so that those Nobel laureates are going to be the sons of native workers rather than foreign workers? What can you comment on that?

Mr. SICILIANO. I think there are two issues. One, you know, the expanded H-1B program with the continued diversion of monies into special training programs is a good start, so we need the talent in the first place. We need that high-skilled talent to maintain our competitive edge, which gives us some runway into which to develop and train native talent. It cannot happen overnight. So the first question is: What do we do to make sure over the next 20 years we still get the world's absolute bet and brightest, lure them to our best universities, have them pay for that education, make them enamored of the United States, and then they stay here and then have children.

Now, you divert that money and you direct it into targeted training, and that is a bigger issue, I think, to entice U.S.-born workers into the difficult and long-term training that will prepare them for a modern, very knowledge-based economy. But the start is to make sure we keep the industries here because we lure the right talent here, and then we do something over the next 20 years so that the 5-year-olds right now do end up getting the double Ph.D., electrical engineering and applied physics, and go on to win the Nobel Prize. But you are talking about the 5-years-olds, not the 25-year-olds. We need the 25-year-old to get an H-1B, have their own Government pay to go to Stanford University, get that Ph.D. there, and then work at Google, stay here. Good deal for us.

Senator Feinstein. Let me mention another point. I happen to believe that the weakest part of the bills that I have supported is the guest worker program. From a California perspective, it is impossible to say to somebody you can come here for at least six years by renewing your guest worker permit, but at the end of six years you have to go home. The experience we have had is quite simply people do not go home. Therefore, it seems to me that the H-2A program, where you bring someone for a limited period of time, has a much better opportunity to work because then they do go back and forth across the border.

What do you believe is the optimum amount of time that an individual will come as a guest worker and then actually go home at the end of that period of time?

Mr. SICILIANO. Senator Feinstein, I think one thing to consider is that by limiting the amount of time that an employer may utilize a guest worker, it alters their behavior in terms of their incentives to invest even in a low-skilled guest worker. So even a low-skilled worker will require a certain amount of training and investment, and the shorter the duration of that opportunity for employment, the less investment there is, which is bad for everyone.

I think one of the possible alternative views here is to recognize some of the limitations that occur if you create a temporary guest worker program and then instead try to identify those lesser-skilled individuals who, in the long run—if you created boundaries of wage and hour rules, allowable behavior on the part of businesses, and then screened up front for who you would allow to enter on that basis and create some path, assuming continuing employment, and a very high bar for behavior and civic behavior, then perhaps you can solve both problems, because I believe the evidence demonstrates and I think a lot of the arguments assume that the economy will work it out. If there are no opportunities, people will go back.

Senator FEINSTEIN. But that is difficult to do. Therefore, if you take the 10 to 12 million people that are here already that work in agriculture, construction, landscaping, house-keeping, et cetera, and provide a steady stream of employment and enable them to have a pathway to legalization, are you not really doing the best thing possible economically to see that there is economic upward mobility?

Mr. SICILIANO. I see. With that subset, yes, I would argue that that is the right path, and then on the other question I would defer. I am sorry that I don't have a solution. . . .

Chairman SPECTER. Thank you, Senator Feinstein.

Senator KYL.

Senator KYL. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you, panel. One of the arguments for not being as tough in enforcing the law especially at the border is that in the years past there was a lot of circular migration especially from Mexico and Central America, people who came here, worked for a while and then went back home. It wasn't hard for them to continue that process, but once we began strong border enforcement, then they were stuck and stayed.

I don't know that there is any evidence to support that or refute it, but it has been the basis for a lot of people talking about this concept of circularity, and I want to get back to that concept and also ask you this question in view of the fact that at least a couple of you are very skeptical that a temporary worker program really ends up being temporary because people don't want to go home. I mean, what I just said may to some extent refute that, but clearly there are people that probably fall into both categories.

What we haven't talked about here is the differentiation between a time like today when we are at very high employment and a time when in the future we will have a recession and we will have high unemployment. And let me stipulate for a moment, even though there is a little bit of argument about mechanization, and so on, that in the lettuce fields of Yuma County, it has always been hard to get Americans to do that work. It has been traditionally work done, by the way, by people who live in Mexico and come across everyday and go back home by and large, although there are some that stay longer.

In Arizona, we can't find enough people to build houses today. Under the bill that Senator Cornyn and I have, we would be issuing lots of temporary visas right now. But we have also seen many economic downturns when you can't get a job in construction, no matter how skilled an American citizen you are. In that case, under our bill we wouldn't be issuing temporary visas. We would let the ones that are here expire; we wouldn't issue any more.

I am troubled by the fact that all of you seem to be so skeptical that people would return. One concept was that, well, when there is not work, they will return. But isn't it just as likely that what they will do is under-bid Americans for those same jobs?

I have gone through enough political times when we were in that high employment situation where Americans were looking for work. It is not a pleasant thing. So I am concerned about a program that lets people come in under today's circumstances, but who may not have a job, or at least there won't be enough jobs for everybody in tomorrow's circumstances.

Given that fact, doesn't it make sense to consider the economic realities in how many permits you issue, and especially if you are saying folks won't go home, to be very careful about the number of visas that you issue for these low-skilled workers because you have to consider tomorrow's lack of employment opportunity as well as today's full employment opportunity?

I have sort of posited several different thoughts and questions inferred there. If you could just each give me your general take on what I have said.

Mr. SICILIANO. Let me throw in one item, as well, to clarify. For all we know about business cycles, we still don't know a lot. One of the things, I think, to observe is that as we go into a down business cycle, we make macro adjustments to the cost of capital as a way of spurring the economy potentially and creating jobs and creating businesses through capital formation.

It is worth thinking about—and I don't think it is a conclusive answer for you, but it is worth thinking about the fact that available labor supplies during a downturn is its own form of self-corrective mechanism. And I would fear second-guessing at a micro level the small and medium-size businesses who might be reformulating strategies to alter their response to global competition and need the liquidity that is provided by available workforce. And we do suffer through a terrible time which is short and hence has changed, but it might be akin to cost of capital.

Labor is one of the critical inputs to all of economic development and we tinker with it at a micro level, we might inadvertently prevent ourselves from emerging as quickly as we might otherwise have from a recession.

Senator KYL. I appreciate that. In view of the fact that there is only one more to question, might I just offer a comment? All of that there is fine in economic theory. As I said, I have had to stand in town hall meetings with 3 or 400 Americans that don't have jobs.

Senator SESSIONS. I am not sure who to ask this question to, but if anybody would speak up and give me a thought on it, I would appreciate it. Is there a difference economically in the effect of a temporary or a permanent worker? Does anybody have any thought about that?

Mr. SICILIANO. Senator Sessions, I will address one small part so that others can comment, and that is I think we know intuitively that renters and owners treat their properties differently. Renting to own may be a compromise, but I would say that we have recent evidence citing Giovanni Peri's paper out of UC-Davis in November that we know that the entrepreneurial behavior of those immigrants who feel that they have some possibility of being here in the long term is increased because they are more likely to invest their capital here in the United States to engage in skill-building that resonates better in the United States and they get better returns on.

So my one comment would be we know we sometimes get very efficient and good behaviors for our national interest from immigrants of all skill levels if the think they may have a long-term role to play here both about themselves and their children.

Senator SESSIONS. Would it be in our interest, therefore, to attempt to identify the people that bring the most skill sets and the most ability to the country when we allow whatever limited number we have to come here legally?

Mr. SICILIANO. Mr. Chairman, I am familiar with the the [Center for Immigration] study. I can answer the specific question, if I may.

Chairman SPECTER. Go ahead, Professor Siciliano.

Mr. SICILIANO. Thank you. That particular study has two types of expenditures—direct payments to immigrants and immigrant households, so it includes sometimes U.S. citizen children, and indirect attributive costs which are the general expenses by the government divided by the number of households in the United States.

The study is actually dominated by the general government expenditures component of those costs. So, in other words, you take the government expenditures, you divide it by the number of households, and then you take that number. And that number is a large number right now because we have high levels of expenditures relative to tax collections.

That is why it is driven by our fiscal state as a Federal Government, as opposed to simply the behavior of the immigrants. The direct payments are an important component, but they are actually dominated by and outweighed by the general expenditures share, which is interesting, but I think it overstates the interest of that particular number that you have cited. It is not irrelevant.

Chairman SPECTER. The President of the Dominican Republic was very interested in the money coming back to the Dominican Republic. The estimates are the immigrants in the United States send home about $39 billion a year in remittances. So on one hand, there is a concern about what that does to our economy. That purchasing power is not being used in the United States.

The other aspect is that our foreign relations are very complicated. We heard a great deal about the difficulties with Venezuela and President Chavez. A vote of the Andean countries on protecting property rights was three-to-two, with the United States winning. We have trade there to try to strengthen our foreign relations. We heard a lot of talk about their recognizing the leaders of the foreign governments, recognizing our rights to control our borders, but also looking for a humanitarian approach that we have.

How big an impact is it, Professor Siciliano, if $39 billion is remitted from the United States to the home countries?

Mr. SICILIANO. Well, as a component of the overall economy, I actually think it is a fairly small number, but it obviously has tremendous impact for the countries who receive the remittances.

Two points. One, the transmission of that money actually generates substantial revenue and profits for U.S.-based business, primarily financial institutions who serve as the intermediaries to make that happen. I don't think we want to forget that.

The second issue is that the money lands in the hands of individuals who are nationals of obviously that country and some of it recycles as demand for our goods and services, hence jump-starting, we hope, the ongoing trade relations which may mitigate some of the foreign national risks you have identified. So I think it is a small piece in a big global economy and one that shouldn't dominate the thinking about how we decide to move forward on the immigration debate. . . .

Chairman SPECTER. Professor Siciliano, do you have a brief comment?

Mr. SICILIANO. Yes, two key points. I think anecdote in the hands of the economist is a dangerous weapon, so let me just give two kinds of actual points of data. First, in the 1960s we know that roughly half of the U.S. workforce lacked a high school diploma, and now about 12 percent of the native-born workforce lacks a high school diploma.

This skill set difference is driving the comment that I think is true, which is it is not the case that immigrant labor is displacing by and large U.S. labor or depressing wages, and there are two key points to highlight that. Nevada and Kentucky, arguably similar in cost of living in many ways—7.5 percent of the population of Nevada right now is estimated to be undocumented. The average high school drop-out wage is $10 per hour. In Kentucky, less than 1 percent of the population is estimated to be undocumented, and yet the high school drop-out wage is $8.73 per hour.

It can't be simplified into simply saying immigrant labor shows up and it hurts U.S.-born labor. It is much more complex than that. I think, net, it clearly benefits U.S. labor . . .

TESTIMONY OF HARRY J. HOLZER, JUDICIARY COMMITTEE, U.S. SENATE, APRIL 25, 2006

The vast majority of economists in the U.S. believe that, on average, immigration is good for the U.S. economy. By helping reduce the costs of producing certain goods and services, it adds to our national output, and makes consumers better off. Business owners also profit very clearly from immigration.

At the same time, it is possible that some native-born Americans—especially the less-educated Americans who might have to compete with immigrants for jobs—might be made worse off. Certain costs—especially for public education and services to the poor—might rise. And there are various noneconomic considerations, both positive and negative.

On these various issues, what does the evidence show? And what does the evidence imply for immigration policy?

EFFECTS ON EARNINGS OF NATIVE-BORN AMERICANS

For many years, most studies of the U.S. labor market have shown little or no negative effects of immigration on the wages or employment of native-born workers—including minorities and those with little education. More recently, another few studies that use different statistical methods from the earlier ones find somewhat stronger negative effects. According to these more recent studies, immigration during the period 1980–2000 might have reduced the earnings of native-born high school dropouts by as much as 8 percent, and those of other workers by 2–4 percent.

However, some strong statistical assumptions are required to achieve these results. And, even in these latter studies, the long run negative effects of immigration (i.e., after capital flows have adjusted across sectors to the presence of immigrants) are reduced to only 4–5% for dropouts and virtually disappear for labor overall.

There seems little doubt, then, that any negative effects of immigration on earnings are modest in magnitude and mostly short-term in nature. To the extent that high school graduates as well as dropouts in the U.S. have fared poorly in the labor market in recent years—especially among men—other factors are much more likely responsible (such as new technologies in the workplace, international trade, and disappearing unionization).

Native-born minority and especially African-American men face many labor market problems besides immigration—such as poor education, discrimination, and the disappearance of jobs from central-cities. In recent years, their high rates of crime and incarceration, as well as child support obligations for non-custodial fathers, have worsened their situation.

Does immigration also worsen their plight? There are certain sectors—like construction, for example—where direct competition from immigrants might reduce employment opportunities for black men.² But in many other occupational categories (e.g., agriculture, gardening, janitorial work) such competition is more limited or nonexistent, as the native-born men show little interest in such employment at current wage levels. In the absence of immigration, it is possible that wages would rise and maybe entice some native-born men to seek these jobs that they consider dirty and menial; but the wage increases needed would likely never materialize in many cases, as employers would either replace these jobs with capital equipment or enter other kinds of business as wages rose.

Two additional points are important here. First, the potential competition to less-educated American workers from immigrants depends in part on the overall health of the economy. Immigration rates have been fairly constant to the U.S. over the past few decades. In the very strong labor markets of the late 1990's, these rates of immigration did not prevent us from achieving extremely low unemployment rates and real earnings growth, even among the least-educated Americans. In the more sluggish labor markets since 2001, the same rate of immigration generates more concern about job competition. But, even in this latter period, the very weak earnings growth of most American workers cannot possibly be attributed to the arrival of a million or so new immigrants annually.

Second, the illegal status of perhaps one-third of immigrants might well magnify any competitive pressures they generate for less-educated native-born workers. The reduced wages and benefits associated with their illegal status offer employers one more incentive for hiring them instead of native-born workers, who might be interested in some of these jobs and might be more appealing to employers at equal wages.

OTHER ECONOMIC EFFECTS

There is virtually no doubt that immigration reduces the prices paid by consumers on many goods and services. There remains much uncertainty about the magnitudes of these effects, and on exactly who benefits the most. For instance, higher-income Americans might benefit the most from child care and other private household services, gardening, and food preparation services in restaurants. But lower-income Americans likely * * * disproportionately from lower prices on food, housing and even some medical services that are associated with immigrant labor in agriculture, construction and health support occupations respectively.

Over the next few decades the contributions of immigrant labor to certain key sectors will likely grow more important. For example, the scientists and engineers needed to keep our nation competitive in scientific innovation and new product development will depend to a growing extent on foreign graduate students who choose to remain here after finishing their schooling, even though their presence might reduce the incentives of some native-born students from entering these fields. In other sectors, the retirements of "Baby Boomers" may also generate stronger labor demand. A variety of labor market adjustments (such as delayed retirements, new technologies, greater foreign "offshoring" of work, etc.) will likely mitigate the impacts of these retirements in the aggregate. But in certain key sectors—especially health care and elder care—these adjustments are less likely to meet the necessary demand, and the need for immigrant (and other) labor may remain quite strong.

Perhaps the most serious economic costs imposed by immigrants on native-born Americans—at least in those few states that serve as the primary "ports of entry" to immigrants—are those associated with public education, health care and other income transfers to the poor. While these costs are no doubt significant in those states, they have been reduced by legal changes in the welfare system that reduced immigrant eligibility for such transfers. Over time, immigration might modestly improve the fiscal status of Social Security and Medicare, as it helps replenish the falling ratios of workers to retirees.

By far the greatest benefits of immigration to the U.S. accrue to the immigrants themselves, whose earnings here are often vastly higher than they would be in their home countries. Both foreign policy and humanitarian considerations might lead us to approve of this, even though the direct economic benefits to native-born Americans are more limited.

POLICY IMPLICATIONS

If immigration is largely good for the overall U.S. economy, should we simply "open the floodgates" and remove all legal restrictions on it? Most Americans would be reluctant to do so, especially since there are some significant costs to immigration, and at least some workers who are made worse off. The noneconomic implications of such a move (e.g., for the national character and makeup of our communities) might also be troubling to many people.

But, if our ability to restrict immigration legally is imperfect, what shall we do? Efforts to improve the enforcement of existing laws in humane ways (e.g., without creating felonies for illegal immigrants and those who hire or assist them, or building costly fences along the Mexican border) may be worth trying, though their effectiveness may be limited. On the other hand, generating pathways by which illegal immigrants in the U.S. can achieve full citizenship (by paying fines, back taxes etc.) makes a lot of sense, given that their illegal status imposes hardships on them and their children while likely exacerbating the competition they pose to native-born Americans. It seems unlikely that any such move would dramatically raise the incentives that illegal immigrants currently have to enter the country given the gains in their standards of living that occur even when they enter illegally.

Guest worker programs have some major limitations, particularly in terms of enforcing legal rights for these workers and ensuring that they maintain some bargaining power relative to their employers. Since most guest workers stay permanently, the benefits of such an approach seem dubious. But some legal changes that encourage greater immigration of highly educated workers over time would likely generate greater benefits to the U.S. economy.

Finally, if we really want to improve opportunities for less-educated Americans in the labor market, there are a variety of approaches (such as improvements in education and training, expansion of public supports like health insurance and child care, and supporting protective institutions such as minimum wage laws and unions) that would likely be more effective than restricting immigration.

THE NEW IMMIGRATION AND THE NEW U.S. ECONOMY

STATEMENT BEFORE THE SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

I have organized my comments around eight points.

(1) Immigration is part of globalization. It is intimately connected to increased trade, free mobility of capital, and transmission of knowledge across national lines. Ideally, immigration and these other flows allow the U.S. and the world to make better use of available resources and to raise national and world output. A worker who comes to the U.S. increases the American labor supply, which means the country can produce more. If that worker does not immigrate, he or she may make the same or similar good in their native country and export that good to the U.S. Or a U.S. or other multinational may invest in that worker's country to produce the good. In other situations, the immigrant may bring capital, particularly human capital, with them, so that both capital and labor move together. The message for thinking about immigration in the global economy is: view immigration as related to trade and capital flows; policies that affect trade and capital will alter immigration and conversely.

(2) Immigration is the least developed part of globalization. Immigrants make up about 3 percent of the global workforce; whereas international trade's share of world output is around 13 percent; and foreign equities in investors' equity portfolio are on the order of 15 percent, as of the early 2000s. Consistent with this, the range of pay for workers with nominally similar skills is far greater than the range of prices for goods around the world or the returns to capital: The ratios of wages in the same occupation in high paying countries relative to low paying countries are on the order of ten to one measured in exchange rates and are on the order of four to five to one measured in purchasing power parity prices. The comparable ratio for prices of Big Macs is less than 2 to 1 and the comparable ratio for the cost of capital is 1.4 to 1. Thus, there is a huge incentive for workers to immigrate from developing countries to developing countries. Given this gap in incomes, the incentive to immigrate will remain huge for the next 40-50 years at least.

(3) In the simplest economic model of globalization, the flow of people, goods, and capital are substitute ways to raise production and economic well-being. During the NAFTA A debate, the Clinton Administration argued that the treaty would reduce illegal Mexican immigration to the U.S. on the notion that increased trade with Mexico would create more jobs there and lower the incentive to migrate to the U.S. This turned out to be incorrect. The U.S. attracts capital flows and unskilled immigrants and skilled immigrants while running a huge trade deficit. One reason is that the U.S. has a technological edge and a business climate edge over most other countries, particularly poor countries.

(4) Economic analysis predicts that immigrants reduce earnings of substitute factors and raise the earnings of complementary factors, where complements include capital and other types of native-born labor. The gains to native complements exceed the losses to native substitutes, so that immigration—like trade and capital flows—are a net boon for the economy. Most immigration studies estimate the adverse effect of immigrants on native earnings or employment, but the logic of the analysis establishes a direct link between the losses to native substitutes and the larger gains to native complements. Studies that compare wages/employment in cities with lots of immigrants with wages/employment in cities with few immigrants find little adverse effect of immigration on native workers. But this also means that there is little native gain from immigration (save when immigrants do things that no native can or will do at any reasonable wage). Studies that compare wages/employment among groups over time find that immigrants depress the wages/employment of natives, with a larger impact among more highly educated workers. Even so, the gains and losses to natives from immigration are dwarfed by the gains that immigrants themselves make. An unskilled Mexican can earn 6 to 8 times as much in the U.S. as in rural Mexico. The main beneficiaries from immigration to the U.S. are immigrants; this is why so many are willing to enter illegally when they can—from Mexico or Central America or the Caribbean.

(5) The huge difference in the earnings of low skilled immigrants, in particular, in their native land and in the U.S. creates a powerful economic force for continued immigrant flows and makes it very difficult to control the U.S. borders. At the same time, however, it suggests that many current illegal immigrants or potential immigrants would be willing to pay for legal status in the country. To change immigration flows from illegal to legal and to control the flows requires redistributing some of the huge gains to immigrants to natives.

(6) At the other end of the skill distribution, the U.S. relies extensively on highly skilled immigrants to maintain our comparative advantage in science and technology. The United States imports science and engineering specialists, who help the country maintain its position at the technological frontier. During the 1990s boom, the United States greatly increased the proportion of foreign-born workers among scientists and engineers. In 2000 over half of the country's Ph.D. scientists and engineers were born overseas! Sixty percent of the growth of S&E workers over this decade came from the foreign born. Without this flow of immigrants, U.S. labs, including government labs such as those of NIH, would have to cut their workload in half. Highly skilled immigrants add to the ability of our economy to maintain predominance in high-tech industries with good jobs and growth potential. The desire of highly educated immigrants to come to the U.S. is a major competitive advantage to the U.S.

(7) But having a huge flow of highly skilled immigrants invariably reduces the incentives for American students to go on in science and engineering. The 1990s increase in science and engineering employment occurred without great increases in pay for these workers, in part because of the large supply of foreign born specialists desirous of coming to the U.S. Without gains in earnings and quality of work life, many outstanding American students, particularly men, shunned science and engineering in favor of business, law, and other disciplines. This does not however mean that the U.S. must limit foreign flows to attract more Americans into these fields. It can attract more Americans with more and increased graduate fellowships and undergraduate scholarships. To maintain the U.S. as the lead scientific and technological country, the U.S. should develop policies to attract more able students from our native born population without seeking to reduce immigrant flows.

(8) Multinational firms today source highly skilled labor globally. They seek the best workers they can get regardless of country of origin. As the number of university graduates is increasing throughout the world, the competition facing educated American workers has risen. Is it better for native born and resident Americans to compete with educated foreigners from developing countries who come as immigrants in the U.S., where wages and working conditions are reasonably high, or to compete with them when they are working overseas, where wages and working conditions are generally lower? Is it better to have U.S. firms offshore jobs or bring in more immigrants? While there is no definitive analysis of these questions, my guess is that it is better to have the top foreign talent in the U.S.; and to do what we can to get them to become citizens and remain here than to have them compete with U.S. workers from lower wage settings overseas. Because trade and capital and immigration flows are intimately connected, however, there are some economic factors operating in the other direction.

In sum, we should think about the economics of immigration in two parts. Taking unskilled and often illegal immigration first, the main beneficiaries of low skill immigration are the immigrants, who have a huge economic incentive to come to the U.S. when they can. The vast improvement they can make in their lives and the lives of their children by coming to our country speaks well for our society, even if few of those benefits accrue to current citizens and residents. With respect to the highly educated immigrants, they add to the country's strength in the sectors that we need to prosper in the global economy. We should compete actively in the global market for the top students and workers in science and engineering and other technical fields, but also provide incentives for more Americans to enter these fields.

Mr. GREGG. Will the Senator yield me 3 minutes?

Mr. SPECTER. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to this amendment and support Senator SPECTER and Senator KENNEDY's and Senator MCCAIN's position. I think, relative to the effort in this Congress and in the Senate, nobody has put more time into the issue of how we secure our borders relative to the actual physical activity on our borders than I have because I find myself in the jurisdiction of the Appropriations Committee that covers the border security issues.

I have come to this conclusion: We can secure our borders. But you cannot do it with just people and money on the border. There has to be a policy in place that creates an atmosphere that lessens the pressure for people to come across the border illegally. The essence of doing that is this guest worker concept. Yes, you have to do everything we can to tighten up the borders in the area of boots on the ground, technology being used, and making sure we have a strong Coast Guard, a strong immigration force, and strong border security force. That type of commitment has been a primary effort of the Senate and myself. We put $1.9 billion into the supplemental that went through here to try to upgrade the capital for the aircraft and cars and unmanned vehicles and the necessary facilities for the Coast Guard, recognizing that border security has to be significantly beefed up.

The President made this point last night very well. But that cannot stop the issue—that doesn't resolve the issue of how you secure the border because as long as you have human nature guiding people's actions, and as long as you have the role of supply and demand in play, you are going to have people who are willing to take the risks to come across the border illegally, no matter how many people you have there. If you are paying $5 a day in Mexico and $50 a day in the United States for a job, and you have a family and you are trying to better yourself, you are going to want to seek that job in America.

The question is, Isn't there a way to set this process up so that a job seeker can come here, do the job, which the employer also needs them to do because they can't otherwise fill that position—and this bill protects to make sure that is the case, that it is not taking jobs from Americans—isn't there some way to set this up so that a person can come into this country, work a reasonable amount of time, and then return to their country, or be here as a guest worker in a guest worker status?

That is what this bill attempts to address. It is one of the three elements of the formula for getting control over our borders. The first element is, of course, strong physical capability on the borders to control the borders.

The second element is to make sure we have in place a program where when people come into this country to work, they can come in legally.

The third element, of course, is enforcement at the workplace to make sure people who are working have that legal status of a guest worker.

That is the essence of this bill, in part, along with the border security elements. I strongly support it and hope we will reject the amendment as proposed.

I yield the floor and reserve the remainder of the time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania is not on the floor of the Senate. My understanding was when his side was finished, he was going to yield back his time. I will proceed on the assumption that his time is done, and I have the right to close. How much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 23 minutes.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, this is an interesting discussion and interesting debate. A couple of points have come to mind.

I have heard now three or four people come to the floor of the Senate and say: We have worked a long time and we put together a comprehensive proposal—in fact, they credited the President for saying the proposal needs to be comprehensive—and you can't take any part of this and change it. It is like pulling a loose string on a cheap suit: pull the string, the arm falls off. You destroy the bill if you do anything that alters it.

Then they come to the floor and say this is a three-legged stool, and if you cut off one of the legs, the stool falls over. Maybe they ought to bring a four-legged stool to the floor of the Senate. If you have a bad leg, you better have another leg to balance on.

The fact is, this is not a three-legged stool or a cheap suit. It is bad policy, just bad policy.

I want to answer some of the offers made by the other side. First, this issue of guests, temporary workers. We have a guest bedroom in our home. We call it the guest bedroom because it is not used much. But when someone uses the guest bedroom, you expect they are going to be there for a short period and leave. They are friends who come and stay. If somebody were to come and stay forever in that room, I guess I wouldn't call them a guest. Yet this so-called guest provision they have stuck in this bill by saying we are going to declare illegal immigration legal for up to 3.8 million people in the next 6 years—that is the way we will deal with illegal immigration. We will just call it legal. The so-called guest provision is people who come here, then apply for a green card, and then stay. There is nothing temporary about that. Don't call them guests. Guests, future flow—what soft-sounding words. Maybe tourists, guest tourists, future flow. But we know why they are coming. My colleagues described why they are coming. They want to work in this country.

The problem is, in all this discussion, I don't hear anybody talking about the American worker. What is the impact on the American worker?

I didn't know all of the economists just cited by my friend from Pennsylvania. They are probably very distinguished economists, probably extraordinarily well-educated economists, probably economists whose names I should know and, if so, I apologize.

Let me read this name, Paul Samuelson. I studied his textbook on economics. I actually taught his textbook in college. Professor Paul Samuelson. If you didn't learn this in Economics 101, then you should have failed. He says:

Let us underline this basic principle: An increase in the labor supply will, other things being equal, tend to depress wage rates.

That is exactly what has happened in this country. Now we say there are 11 to 12 million people who have come to this country illegally. I said earlier that I don't want to diminish the worth or dignity of anyone who is in this country legally or illegally. I am not interested in trying to diminish their worth or dignity. Somebody has been here 25 years, didn't come legally 25 years ago, has a child here, or two, perhaps a grandchild, they worked here, paid taxes here, I am not interested in rounding them up and moving them out of this country.

I understand some of the urges of people who have written some of this legislation. What I don't understand is this: There is no discussion about its impact on the American worker when they say: Oh, by the way, let's solve all these issues and let's, on top of all of this, add one more big arm that sticks out, and that is the so-called guest workers where we allow 3.8 million people in the next 6 years who are not here now, not working in America now, living outside of our country now, to come in and take American jobs.

What on Earth are we thinking? Can't there be some modicum of discussion about the effect on American workers?

I put this chart up earlier, and I will put it up again because this discussion relates exactly to a string of failures. I am told we are all complimenting the President for his speech last night. I don't compliment the President for his trade strategy. We have the highest trade deficit in the history of this country: every single day, 7 days a week, $2 billion in trade deficit—every single day. That means Americans jobs are going overseas. We are choking on debt.

What is the status of this trade? It is a green light for big companies to export jobs, and they are going wholesale, 3 to 4 million jobs just in the last few years. They are leaving.

By the way, Alan Blinder, a mainstream economist, former Vice Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, said in his recent piece: I believe in "Foreign Affairs," that there are now 42 to 54 million American jobs that are potentially subject to being exported to other parts of the world because now we have 1 billion to 1.5 billion people in the rest of the world willing to work for pennies. So 42 to 54 million American jobs are subject to that kind of influence.

He says they won't all be exported, but even those who remain here will see lower wages and downward pressure on wages and benefits, health care, and retirement. That is the future on that side. Exporting good jobs.

The world is flat, we are told. The book shines from the bookstores, "The World is Flat." We look with rose-colored glasses at all the American jobs now in Bangalore, now in Xinhong, China. We say: Isn't that something?

I will tell you what is something. Those jobs used to be here supporting families. There is no social program this Senate works on that is more important than a good job that pays benefits and allows people to take care of their family. There is no social program as good as that.

We are talking about exporting good jobs, and exactly the same influence that resulted in this provision being put in this bill wants there to be imported cheap labor through the back door. That is what this guest worker provision is all about: importing cheap labor.

We are told the reason the 1986 law that was trumpeted 20 years ago, immigration reform, sanctions against employers who hire illegal immigrants didn't work is because there was no guest worker program. That is unbelievable to me. That is not the case at all.

This proposition is to say: You know how we will stop illegal immigration? We will just define them all as legal.

At least 325,000 plus 20 percent, that is 3.8 million in 6 years. We will define them as legal. We won't have a problem, we will just change the definition.

Let me show a couple of charts. These are people living in extraordinarily primitive conditions. They are undocumented workers. We can see where they are bunking. They were brought in, by the way, by a company to help repair in the aftermath of Katrina, a Government contract, mind you, with undocumented workers.

Let me tell you whose jobs they took. That contractor hired these folks, and all the electricians, including one Sam Smith whose house was completely destroyed in the Ninth Ward after Katrina slammed into that coast. He returned to the city because of the promise of $22-an-hour wages for qualified, experienced, long-term electricians. He and 75 people were guaranteed work for a year at that naval institution.

He was quickly disappointed. He lost his job within 3 weeks because the other contracting company brought in undocumented workers who were unqualified and were willing to work for pennies.

I am the one who exposed this situation, and not long after I exposed it, there were inspectors who went on that base. I don't know the result of it all. All I am telling you is this is going on all across this country. This is a guy who lost his home and had a job and was displaced by someone coming through the back door willing to work for pennies. It wasn't just that person, it was the employer who decided they wanted to fatten their profits by hiring, in this case, illegals.

The way to solve that is not to say: Let's make them legal. The way to solve that is to say that job ought to go to Sam who lost his home, who is a qualified electrician. He is the person who needed that job. Yet contractors bring in these undocumented workers or, in this case, they perhaps bring in workers under the so-called guest worker provisions. Actually, they are not really guest workers, they are low-wage replacement workers. We should call them what they are.

We were told in the discussion earlier that we should accept this because we can't stop it. It is going to happen whether we like it or not, so let's just declare them legal. I don't understand that at all.

I mentioned earlier that this planet we live on, to the extent we know it, is the only place in the universe where we know life exists and we move around the Sun. On this planet of ours, we were blessed to be born in this country, live in this country, or come to this country and be a part of this great place called the United States. We built a standard of living unparalleled in the world. We did that through great sacrifice and through great debates. Now we are told none of that matters very much because it is a flat world, it is a global economy; by the way, we can move jobs overseas, and we can bring cheap labor through the back door.

Just once—and I guess it won't happen this afternoon—just once I would like to hear a real debate about jobs in this country, about American workers and, yes, that includes Hispanic, African-American, Asian-American workers—our entire workforce. Just once I want to hear a discussion about what this means to American workers. Yet almost none of that has been heard on the floor of the Senate any time during this discussion.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DORGAN. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. SESSIONS. I have the opportunity to serve on the Senate Judiciary Committee. We had one hearing that dealt with these issues and dealt with some of the issues the Senator has been talking about specifically. Professor Richard Freeman—and these were pretty pro-immigration panels, but I think they all agree with Senator DORGAN—Richard Freeman holds the Herbert Asherman Chair, professor of economics at Harvard University. This was his quote just a few weeks ago at a hearing:

One of the concerns when immigrants come in that way, they may take some jobs from some Americans and drive down the wages of some Americans and, obviously, if there is a large number of immigrants coming in and if they are coming in at a bad economic time, that's likely to happen.

Is that consistent with the Senator's views and that of Professor Samuelson?

Mr. DORGAN. That is exactly the case, although this is Professor Freeman. I have never known an economist to lose his or her job to a bad trade agreement. They sit around thumbing their suspenders. They occasionally smoke a pipe, wear their little corduroy coat with their leather arm pads. They pontificate about these issues. The fact is, half of them can't remember their telephone numbers, and they are telling us what is going to happen 5 years in the future.

I understand, and I think most people understand, what is happening in this country today. What is happening today is the export of good jobs and the import of cheap labor and depressing the conditions of employment in America. That is what is happening, and nobody seems to care very much.

The inequality grows. The wealthy get wealthier, the people at the bottom are stuck—they haven't had an increase in the minimum wage in 9 years, mind you, so they are stuck and they are losing ground.

The question is, Who is going to stand for them and speak for them?

Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINEZ). The Senator has 10 minutes 15 seconds remaining.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I mentioned earlier—and I think it fits exactly with the debate—the export of jobs and import of cheap labor. I mentioned about the dancing grapes. All of us have seen when Fruit of the Loom advertises their underwear, they do it with people called dancing grapes. Somebody is dressed in red grapes and somebody else is dressed in green grapes. We have all seen them. What kind of adult would wear a grape suit and sing? Nonetheless, we are all entertained by dancing grapes.

The dancing grapes represent Fruit of the Loom underwear, T-shirts, shorts, so on. They were made in this country, just as Levis and other products were made in this country. The dancing grapes danced right out of our country. All those jobs to make those underwear, gone. This country doesn't make one pair of Levis anymore. Not one pair of Levis is made in the United States.

Anyway, the dancing grapes leave our country, and those jobs are elsewhere. Why are they gone from this country? Because they went in search of cheap labor.

So to the extent that companies can move these jobs out of this country to find cheap labor, they will. They still want to sell back into this country. They still need the American consumer, the American consumer who has just lost his or her job. One question is, then, where is the income going to come from?

In any event, even as they move these jobs out of this country, there are some that will remain in this country. In this new global economy, there are some jobs you can't move. And some of the same economic interests that want to move the jobs they can want to displace the jobs they can't with cheap labor.

How do they do that with cheap labor? What they do is they attract people to come into this country from areas around the world—and one-half of the people in this world live on less than $2 a day—they attract people to come in the back door. At the moment, it is illegal, so we gather on the floor of the Senate to talk about illegal immigration. What is one of the approaches to solve this? Let's just get a stamp and stamp it legal. That way we can say we don't have illegal immigration. So it appears to me what we are going to have is up to 3.8 million people in the next 6 years, who will come into this country and take American jobs, who otherwise would be declared illegal. By the way, that is on top of the 11 million or 12 million people the underlying bill will describe as legal. They say we are going to allow them to come in, take American jobs, but they will not be illegal because we have decided in the Senate we are going to put a different stamp there. It is going to be fine.

So nobody on the Senate floor is standing up and saying: What about the tradeoff here of an American family? We hear a lot about other families. One of my colleagues just described economic immigrants. Man, the world is full of them. If the world has one-half of its population making less than $2 a day, are there economic immigrants willing to come from many corners of this globe to this country? The answer is, of course. But we have immigration laws and quotas because if we were flooded with tens and tens of millions of people searching for opportunities in our country, we would diminish opportunities for Americans who live here and work here and built this country. So that is why we have immigration quotas.

One final point, if I might, on this issue of employer sanctions. That is a matter of will. You know there are no employer sanctions. The law says there are employer sanctions. Last year, I am told—I need to check this for sure, but I am told that there was one enforcement effort against one employer that hired illegal immigrants. The year before, there were three in the entire United States—three. That is a matter of lack of will. That is a matter of looking the other way when businesses want to hire cheap labor through the back door. Only when they are pressed will authorities finally go down and take a look at the folks living in these conditions who have taken jobs of people who lost their homes in Hurricane Katrina. Only when they are forced will someone show up, knock on the door, and say: You know something, this isn't legal.

This is a very important debate. In some ways, I regret that we have as short a time as we do. I probably should not have agreed to a time agreement, there is so much to say about it. Yet we will have a vote this afternoon.

My colleagues have spoken here with great authority. We all come here and wear white shirts and dark suits and all sound authoritative. Some are right, and some are wrong. It is hard to tell the difference. So we will have a vote on this. At the end of this vote, I suppose this will move right ahead because we are told, if this vote prevails, if my amendment prevails, as I said earlier, it is like pulling a loose thread on a cheap suit—the whole arm falls off and the whole suit is worthless. I don't understand why they construct legislation that way, but every time somebody brings a proposal to the floor of the Senate which is the result of negotiations, they say you can't interrupt anything because, after all, when we shut the door and negotiated this, we all did that in good faith, so don't be messing with our product. If you pull one piece of it out, you ruin what we have done. I have heard that a million times on the floor of the Senate.

I think the Senate ought to just mess with this piece and say to those folks who constructed it, with respect: You are wrong about this. This piece is the price for the Chamber of Commerce to support this legislation. This piece is the price for the Chamber of Commerce to say: Allow us to bring 3.8 million people through the back door, cheap labor, and we will support the legislation, the substantial immigration reform.

I just happen to disagree with that. I happen to stand here in support of and concerned about—immigrant families, yes, but in support especially of American workers, in support of workers who do not seem to have much of a voice on the floor of this Senate.

The next trade bill that comes up, once again we will see their jobs further traded overseas. It is bizarre. There is no minimum wage increase for 9 years. Every trade agreement that comes along is pulling the rug out from under American workers, God bless them. See you, so long.

That is the way it goes around here. Maybe we ought to call this what it is. Maybe we ought to stop at this. Maybe the stop sign on behalf of American workers ought to be to say it is time for this Senate to stand up for American jobs. After all, this country's middle class, which we built over the last couple of centuries, especially the last century, that middle class is what supported the highest standard of living in the world. But that standard of living will not long exist if we export good jobs to low wage countries and then import cheap labor to perform those subpar-wage duties here in this country. That is not, in my judgment, what works for our country's best economic future.

Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 3 minutes 25 seconds.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, the Senator, I believe, wanted to ask if I would yield for a question. I am happy to do that.

Mr. SESSIONS. I would, briefly. I think it sort of confirms what you are saying. We had a subcommittee hearing on this, and the second professor, Dr. Barry Chiswick, the head and research professor at the Department of Economics at the University of Illinois in Chicago, said:

[T]here is a competition in the labor market. And the large increase in low-skilled immigration that we've seen over the last 20 years has had a substantial negative effect on the employment and earning opportunities of low-skilled Americans. . . . [The] large increase in low-skilled immigration has had the effect of decreasing the wages and employment opportunities of low-skilled workers who are currently resident in the United States.

Does that comport with the theme of the remarks of the Senator?

Mr. DORGAN. The Senator is absolutely correct. It seems to me this is not at issue, the question of what this means to American workers. It just is not.

Mr. SESSIONS. Here is Professor Harry Holzer at the same committee hearing, three out of five witnesses, most of them pro-immigration witnesses. He is an associate dean and professor of public policy at Georgetown. He says:

Now, absent the immigrants, employers might need to raise those wages and improve those conditions of work to entice native born workers into those [construction, agriculture, janitorial, food preparation . . .] jobs.

I believe when immigrants are illegal they do more to undercut the level of wages of native born workers.

So I think he also would agree with the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, let me say that this economic strategy isn't working. This doesn't work. Fig Newton cookies moved to Mexico, and the Chinese just bought WHAM-O, Hula Hoop, Slip 'N Slide, and Frisbee. To the extent this bill will make illegal workers come in stamped as legal, we know they are not going to make Fig Newtons and Frisbees because those jobs are gone, but we know there is a reason for a guest worker provision, and the reason is there are interests that support this bill only on the condition that they continue to allow low wage workers to come in the back door even as major American corporations are exporting good American jobs out the front door. I think that is a construct that 5, 10, and 20 years from now is dangerous to this country and restricts opportunity rather than expands it for the American people.

I do not support this provision. I hope my colleagues will support my amendment and strike this guest worker, future flow, or low wage replacement worker provision, as I call it, in the underlying piece of legislation.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I will yield back. Is all time consumed by Senator DORGAN?

Mr. DORGAN. I yield back my time.

Mr. SPECTER. I yield my time. I move to table the Dorgan amendment and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The question is on Agreeing to the motion. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. REID. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, we have the amendment from Senator KYL and Senator CORNYN next in sequence. They have a right to go next. If they are willing to wait until the morning, we will proceed with another amendment.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, Chairman SPECTER, it is my understanding that if I defer to the Senator from New Mexico, we can actually get an amendment of the Senator from New Mexico voted on and perhaps another amendment considered by Senator KERRY, so they would be disposed of, whereas it may take a bit longer if our amendment is put down.

Mr. SPECTER. The Senator from Arizona is correct.

Mr. KYL. If we start tomorrow morning with our amendment, the Kyl-Cornyn et al. amendment, perhaps we could conclude more business if we follow in that process.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I appreciate the gracious comment by Senator KYL. We will proceed with Kyl-Cornyn first thing tomorrow morning.

Now we will proceed with the Bingaman amendment under a unanimous consent agreement of 1 hour equally divided, with no second-degree amendments in order, with the time evenly divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SPECTER. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

AMENDMENT NO. 3981

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Pennsylvania, the chairman, for yielding to me.

I ask consent to bring up Senate amendment 3981.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BINGAMAN], for himself and Mrs. FEINSTEIN, proposes an amendment numbered 3981.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To reduce the number of H-2C non-immigrants to 200,000 during any fiscal year)

Beginning on page 292, strike line 18 and all that follows through page 295, line 4, and insert the following:

(g) NUMERICAL LIMITATIONS.—Section 214(g)(1) (8 U.S.C. 1184(g)(1)) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (B), by striking the period at the end and inserting “; and”; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

“(C) under section 101(a)(15)(H)(ii)(c) may not exceed 200,000.”

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, as we all know, the immigration bill creates a new temporary guest worker program aimed at providing an equal and orderly process for individuals to come to this country and to work in sectors of our economy where there is a shortage of available workers.

We had good debate in connection with the Dorgan amendment with regard to that guest worker program. Everyone who listened to that debate understands this is a new program which is being added to our immigration laws, one which is not available today for anyone to use.

Specifically, the bill pending before the Senate allocates 325,000 temporary visas for the first fiscal year, and in each subsequent year the numerical limit is flexible.

If the cap is reached—that is, the full 325,000—the number of available visas would increase. It could increase by 10 percent, it could increase by 15 percent, it could increase by 20 percent in the next fiscal year, depending upon how quickly those visas were used or taken.

In essence, what the bill provides—the bill pending before us—is for an open-ended automatic-increase mechanism that has the potential to significantly increase the number of visas we are making available. When I say an automatic-increase mechanism, we have all heard about compound interest. Everyone who has a checking account knows the power of compounding interest. What we have here is not compounding interest, it is compounding immigration, because the 20-percent increase over the previous year's level continues indefinitely into the future. You start with 325,000, plus 20 percent; then you take the new figure, plus 20 percent; then you take the new figure, plus 20 percent; and it goes on and on.

My amendment, which Senator FEINSTEIN is cosponsoring, would simply put in place, instead of that, a hard cap of 200,000 on the number of visas available each year under this program. Of course, in addition to this program, we all understand there are many other programs that people can use to gain legal access into our country.

Let me show a chart. This chart: guest worker visas issued under S. 2611. Now, the olive-colored wedge down at the bottom represents the number of visas that would be issued over the next 6 years under my amendment. That is 200,000 per year, each year, for 6 years, or a total of 1.2 million visas under the guest worker program.

If the Senate were to defeat the amendment I am offering and just go with the bill as it currently pends before the Senate, then it could take any of a number of courses. If there is a 10-percent increase, because of the speed with which people apply for these visas, it would go up to 2.725 million visas by the end of 6 years. If it is a 15-percent increase, it gets you to 3.222 million visas by the end of 6 years. And if, in fact, there are enough applicants for these visas to get you a full 20-percent increase, then you get to 3.8 million immigrant visas issued over this 6 years.

Now, why did I stop this chart at 6 years? The truth is, this legislation has no sunset. This legislation continues indefinitely until Congress changes the law again. So this chart could just as easily have been for 10 years or 15 years or 20 years. And if you really want to see the power of compound immigration, just like the power of compound interest, we should have developed a chart that takes us out 10 or 15 or 20 years. So the chart exemplifies how the number of guest workers may increase over this 6-year period under these different scenarios. The chart could have been made for a longer period.

If the 325,000-person cap is reached within the first 3 months of the fiscal year, we will have added almost 4 million guest workers over this 6-year period. If the cap is reached in the second quarter of the fiscal year, we will have added just over 3 million. And if the cap is hit in the third quarter of the year, we will have added a little under 3 million workers under this particular program.

In addition, it is important to note that although these visas are issued only for up to 6 years, these workers have the right to petition to become legal permanent residents within 1 year if the employer files for them or within 4 years if they self-petition.

Frankly, I believe we need to be a little more judicious with respect to the number of visas we are allocating under this program. This is a brandnew program. Under my amendment, which sets the numerical limit for such visas at 200,000, there would be no more than 1.2 million guest workers admitted over these first 6 years.

We need to recognize that guest worker programs, if they are not properly implemented, can impact on American workers. Senator DORGAN made the case, I believe very eloquently, that many economists have spoken about the downward pressure on wages that results when you increase the labor supply. We need to recognize that our success with regard to the temporary worker program we have now, such as with regard to agricultural workers, has been mixed. We should not make a mistake here by erring on the side of extravagance in allocating these visas or authorizing the issuance of these visas until we know how this program is going to impact American workers.

I did not vote for Senator DORGAN's amendment to eliminate the guest worker program, but I do believe we need to be judicious about the extent of the guest worker program that we authorize. We definitely should not be signing on to some kind of automatic compounding of the number of workers eligible for legal entry into this country under that program. There are a variety of jobs that may be filled by these guest workers—from construction jobs to hotel service jobs—but we should not be placing American workers in these sectors of our economy in the position of competing with virtually an unlimited number of guest workers, which is what I fear we are putting in the law if we leave the law the way it now pends in this pending legislation.

The underlying bill does create a temporary guest worker task force. This task force is charged with assessing the impact of the guest worker program on wages and on labor conditions and the employment of American workers and with then making recommendations about whether the numerical cap should be lowered or raised. But then you go on with the legislation, and the increase mechanism is not in any way tied to the recommendations of the task force. The overall number of visas could significantly increase automatically, regardless of whether the program is determined, by this temporary guest worker task force, to be hurting American workers.

So if Congress wants to raise the caps, we have the authority to do that every year. We meet here every year. We can raise the cap. But we should not provide for an automatic increase in the number of temporary visas irrespective of how that increase is affecting American workers.

Just to be clear, reducing the number of guest worker visas to 200,000 a year is not a drastic measure that undercuts the bill's goal of providing a more realistic framework for immigrants to legally come into this country. According to the Congressional Research Service, under this overall bill, we will at least be doubling—here is a chart that shows what is going to happen to the projections for employment-based legal permanent residents coming into this country under this legislation. We will at least be doubling the flow of legal permanent immigration under the bill in the first year. We increase family- and employment-based numerical limits, and we exempt categories of individuals from these caps.

Overall, the bill does provide for many legal avenues for individuals to legally come into the United States and to work. For example, as this chart shows—this is a chart based on the Congressional Research Service report—we are significantly increasing the number of employment-based legal permanent residents under the bill.

I strongly believe the amendment I am offering with Senator FEINSTEIN is a reasonable approach. It ensures that an unlimited number of guest workers are not admitted under this program. I hope my colleagues will agree with me that this is a good change. This amendment would improve the legislation, would allow us to maintain a guest worker program, which the President has strongly endorsed maintaining, but would improve the program by limiting it to a level we can understand and manage in these first few years.

Mr. President, I yield the floor, and I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask unanimous consent that it be equally divided between the two sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, how much time remains on my side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 17½ minutes.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Seventeen and a half?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I yield 12 minutes to the Senator from California.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. President, I would like to speak as a member of the Judiciary Committee. I think one of the things we really need to understand about this bill is that it is a very large bill. It is 640 pages long. It contains a multitude of programs. And it—through the visa programs, the nonimmigrant visas—brings in large numbers of people.

I think when we were in Judiciary we did not realize the extent to which large numbers of people are brought in on some of these visas. We were working to a march. We had to get the bill done. And it is my understanding that studies of the bill now on the floor have shown that this bill could allow up to 193 million new legal immigrants. That is a number greater than 60 percent of the current U.S. population in the next 20 years. Now, that is a way-out figure—20 years—but I think we have to begin to look at each of the visa increases over at least the next 10-year period to determine how many people would come in, particularly the guest worker program.

I am happy to cosponsor this amendment with Senator BINGAMAN. The amendment does two things: it lowers the annual numerical cap from 325,000 of H-2C guest worker visas—and there are a myriad of guest worker visas, but this one is H-2C—to 200,000, and it eliminates the annual escalator.

In my view, all annual escalators in this bill should be eliminated because they bring in too many people over a relatively short period of time. This bill has the potential, as I said, to bring in millions of guest workers over the years. This means that over 6 years—the length of an alien's stay in the United States in this one temporary visa category—there could be 1.2 million workers in the United States.

Under the current proposal, let's say you start at 325,000 guest workers in the first year, and you add the 10-percent escalator. The 10-percent escalator would yield, over 6 years, 2.7 million people. The 15-percent escalator would take it to, over 6 years, 3.2 million people. And if you had the 20-percent escalator, it would take it up to, over 6 years, 3,807,000 people. It is simply too many. So the current bill doubles and even triples the number of foreign guest workers who could enter the United States over the 6 years of our amendment.

I hope this amendment will pass. I would hope that we could eliminate the escalators in these visa programs. The H-1B visa escalator would have a total of 3.67 million people over the next 10 years coming in under an H-1B visa. We increase the H-1B from 56,000 to 115,000, and then we put in a 20-percent escalator each year. If the number of visas reached the 115,000—and it will—therefore, the next year you add 20 percent. Then if that is reached, you add another 20 percent. And it compounds in this manner to the tune of a total of 3.6 million.

I am very concerned about this. I hope the Bingaman amendment will be successful. Again, it does two things. It reduces the base amount from 325,000 to 200,000, and it eliminates the escalator. Two hundred thousand guest workers a year are ample because this is just one part of the bill. There are other visa programs. There is AgJOBS. There is earned adjustment. It all adds up to millions and millions of people.

I strongly support the Bingaman amendment. I urge my colleagues to vote yes.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALEXANDER). The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BINGAMAN. First, I thank the Senator from California for her strong support for my amendment. Particularly because of her role in the development of the legislation in the Judiciary Committee, she pointed out very well the reasons this amendment is meritorious. I hope people, even some Members on the Judiciary Committee with Senator FEINSTEIN, will look at this favorably and consider it an improvement to the bill.

I ask unanimous consent that Senator ALEXANDER from Tennessee be added as a cosponsor of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BINGAMAN. I know we have one other Senator who has indicated a desire to speak in favor of the amendment. Let me point out to my colleagues that both myself and Senator ALEXANDER are Members who voted against the Dorgan amendment that was just tabled. I cannot speak for Senator ALEXANDER, but from my perspective, I am persuaded that there is value in having a viable guest worker program. I support that part of the legislation. My concern is with the magnitude of it, particularly since it is a new program.

For us to start it at 325,000 per year and then have an automatic escalator in the law and have no sunset on it at all, so that we all understand that this is permanent law, unless Congress comes back and changes the law 10 years from now, we will still be taking the previous year's total and be able to increase it by 20 percent. That gets to a point where American workers are going to have a very legitimate complaint. I favor allowing an opportunity for people to come here and take jobs that Americans don't want. But I do not favor allowing people to come here to bid down the price of labor to such a point that Americans are unwilling to take jobs for the very meager salaries that employers are able to pay.

It is a straightforward amendment. I hope my colleagues will support it. I know we do have one more speaker. I believe the Senator from California would like 2 minutes. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from California.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is recognized.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from New Mexico. As anyone watching the debate saw, I was in support of what Senator DORGAN was trying to do which was to strip the guest worker program from this bill, a bill that has a lot of good to it. I do support strengthening the border, and I do support giving 11 or 12 million hard-working people who have paid their dues, who will come forward and learn English and who will pay the fines, who have a clean record, a path to legality. I strongly support that, and I strongly support the AgJOBS provision of this bill. But I predict that this guest worker program, which the Senate has now ratified, is going to come back to haunt people because, as Senator BINGAMAN has shown us, the way this bill is structured, the workers will grow exponentially in this guest worker program to the point where, according to some estimates, we are talking about tens of millions of guest workers over the next 20 years.

What Senator BINGAMAN is trying to do is to put a cap on this, a real cap, not the phony cap that is in the bill that says it will escalate up to 20 percent every year. You figure out the math. It is kind of amazing.

What Senator BINGAMAN is doing is making this a better bill. I strongly support the cap he is proposing. I thank him for the opportunity to speak on behalf of his amendment. As usual, he has brought commonsense to the Senate. I hope the Senate will strongly support the Bingham amendment.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, it is always difficult to make a determination as to what is the right figure. The committee came to the figure of 325,000, after a great deal of analysis and thought. It is the result of a compromise that was worked out, with some figures being substantially higher than that, some lower. But that is the figure the committee came to. The amendment offered by Senator BINGAMAN and Senator FEINSTEIN would also eliminate the fluctuation which is to allow for a 20-percent increase if we hit the top. What we are trying to do in this legislation is to accommodate the market, if there is demand for these guest workers. So the fluctuating cap is perhaps even more important than the difference between 325,000 and 200,000.

When we considered the Dorgan amendment, we were debating the issue as to the way the guest worker program fits into overall comprehensive reform so that if we were able to accommodate the needs of the American economy with these guest workers, then we fill the jobs. They are not open. We do not create a vacuum on jobs so that immigrants who are in this country illegally would be available to take the jobs. This is a regulatory approach which accommodates for the needs of the economy and is the figure that we best calculate to accommodate them. I think if we had come in at 200,000, we would be looking at an amendment for 125,000 or at some other figure. There is an obvious give and take as to whatever figure we have. Somebody has a different figure to make it lower.

I have great respect for those who say we ought to protect American jobs and that we ought not to have guest workers who are going to take those jobs or lower the compensation for the people who hold American jobs. We put into the RECORD on the Dorgan amendment testimony from three expert witnesses. I will not repeat it and put it into the RECORD again. But the essential conclusion was that there would be minimal impact on taking American jobs and minimal impact on compensation.

The statute is carefully constructed to protect American workers, taking away any incentives for employers to hire foreign workers. For example, the employees must be paid the higher of what is the actual wage paid to other employees with the same skill or the prevailing wage rate for that job. So the law requires the employer to pay the immigrants the same as they would pay somebody else. And the employers must provide the same working conditions and benefits that are available for similar jobs. You don't have a class of immigrant workers who are being taken advantage of. The employers must provide insurance if the State workers compensation doesn't cover all of these workers. So you have a situation where there are no incentives to lose American jobs. We think this figure is a fair figure and a realistic figure arrived at by the committee after very long deliberation and after a compromise. We think this figure should stay.

In the absence of any other Senator seeking recognition, I would inquire how much time I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 24 minutes remaining, and the Senator from New Mexico has 7 minutes. Mr. SPECTER. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BINGAMAN. May I ask my colleague, is it his intent that I should close my argument now and then we would have a vote?

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, yes.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I thank my colleague for that concise answer.

Let me say that I have great respect for the chairman and his efforts to put together a bill that he believes makes sense. As he says, it accommodates the market. That is an interesting concept, accommodating the market. The amendment I am offering, along with Senator FEINSTEIN and Senator ALEXANDER, is an amendment that would say that we need to go at this in a prudent fashion and limit the number of people who are going to be able to come into the country and apply through this new program that we are defining for the first time in law as part of this bill.

Some of the arguments I have heard in favor of the guest worker program relate to the workers themselves, the workers who are trying to get into this country to make a better life for themselves. I have empathy for those workers as well. But, quite frankly, there is a virtually unlimited supply of people who would like to come here and work and improve their life by doing so. We need to make judgments about how large a group we are going to allow in each year. That is why I am proposing the amendment.

As far as employers are concerned, there are a lot of employers who, given the option of signing a contract to bring in workers from another country who they know will be in many respects less likely to complain about working conditions, less likely to raise any concerns about their employment situation, would find that attractive. And accordingly, you could see a great demand by some employers to go ahead and meet their employment needs through this device.

As I said before, I favor a guest worker program. It makes sense to have a guest worker program.

But I think it also makes sense for us to do it in a more reasonable way than the bill currently calls for and not to build in some kind of automatic escalator that will occur regardless of what we determine the impact is going to be on American workers. I think we can come back and raise the cap again if we decide in 2 years or 5 years, or whatever, that we want to do that. But we should not build into this legislation an automatic escalator that will make it extremely likely that the number of workers will substantially increase in coming years by virtue of this legal provision that we put in the law.

Mr. President, I urge the support of my amendment, and I hope my colleagues will see this as a way to improve the legislation rather than an undermining provision of the legislation.

I yield the floor.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I move to table the amendment and ask for the yeas and nays. I put my colleagues on notice that this is going to be a strict 20-minute vote because we have Members who have planes to catch.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is all time yielded back? All time is yielded back. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The question is on agreeing to the motion to table.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MCCONNELL. The following Senators were necessarily absent: the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. COCHRAN) and the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. LOTT).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The motion was rejected.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote and I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3981) was agreed to.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. KERRY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, we have been engaged in extensive discussions to try to move the schedule along. What we plan to do is to take Senator KERRY's amendment and accept it, with 15 minutes to Senator KERRY. He says he will try not to use all of it.

Tomorrow morning we will go to Kyl-Cornyn, and since people are still looking at it, we do not have a time agreement. Senator KENNEDY says he will make a good-faith effort to limit debate to 30 minutes tomorrow.

Then we will go to the amendment of Senator OBAMA, and once we have had a chance to analyze it, we will see if we can accept it. Then we will go to Senator SESSIONS. The majority leader has authorized me to say that there will be no further votes tonight.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, might I ask the chairman to yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. KYL. It is my understanding that following Senator KERRY this evening we will lay down the Kyl-Cornyn-Graham-Allen-McCain-Frist-Brownback-Martinez amendment so all can see what it is and we can start some debate this evening and then finish the debate tomorrow. Is that correct?

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, the Senator from Arizona is correct.

I now yield to the Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. KERRY.

AMENDMENT NO. 3999

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 3999.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY] proposes an amendment numbered 3999.

Mr. KERRY. I ask unanimous consent the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To improve the capacity of the United States Border Patrol to rapidly respond to threats to border security)

On page 63, between lines 9 and 10, insert the following:

Subtitle F—Rapid Response Measures

SEC. 161. DEPLOYMENT OF BORDER PATROL AGENTS.

(a) EMERGENCY DEPLOYMENT OF BORDER PATROL AGENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—If the Governor of a State on an international border of the United States declares an international border security emergency and requests additional United States Border Patrol agents (referred to in this subtitle as "agents") from the Secretary, the Secretary, subject to paragraphs (1) and (2), may provide the State with not more than 1,000 additional agents for the purpose of patrolling and defending the international border, in order to prevent individuals from crossing the international border into the United States at any location other than an authorized port of entry.

(2) CONSULTATION.—Upon receiving a request for agents under paragraph (1), the Secretary, after consultation with the President, shall grant such request to the extent that providing such agents will not significantly impair the Department's ability to provide border security for any other State.

(3) COLLECTIVE BARGAINING.—Emergency deployments under this subsection shall be made in accordance with all applicable collective bargaining agreements and obligations.

(b) ELIMINATION OF FIXED DEPLOYMENT OF BORDER PATROL AGENTS.—The Secretary shall ensure that agents are not precluded from performing patrol duties and apprehending violators of law, except in unusual circumstances if the temporary use of fixed deployment positions is necessary.

(c) INCREASE IN FULL-TIME BORDER PATROL AGENTS.—Section 5202(a)(1) of the Intelligence Reform and Terrorism Prevention Act of 2004 (118 Stat. 3734), I as amended by section 101(b)(2), is further amended by striking "2,000" and inserting "3,000".

SEC. 162. BORDER PATROL MAJOR ASSETS.

(a) CONTROL OF BORDER PATROL ASSETS.—The United States Border Patrol shall have complete and exclusive administrative and operational control over all the assets utilized in carrying out its mission, including, air, craft, watercraft, vehicles, detention space, transportation, and all of the personnel associated with such assets.

(b) HELICOPTERS AND POWER BOATS.—

(1) HELICOPTERS.—The Secretary shall increase, by not less than 100, the number of helicopters under the control of the United States Border Patrol. The Secretary shall ensure that appropriate types of helicopters are procured for the various missions being performed.

(2) POWER BOATS.—The Secretary shall increase, by not less than 250, the number of power boats under the control of the United States Border Patrol. The Secretary shall ensure that the types of power boats that are procured are appropriate for both the waterways in which they are used and the mission requirements.

(3) USE AND TRAINING.—The Secretary shall—

(A) establish an overall policy on how the helicopters and power boats procured under this subsection will be used; and

(B) implement training programs for the agents who use such assets, including safe operating procedures and rescue operations.

(C) MOTOR VEHICLES.—

(1) QUANTITY.—The Secretary shall establish a fleet of motor vehicles appropriate for use by the United States Border Patrol that will permit a ratio of not less than 1 police-type vehicle for every 3 agents. These police-type vehicles shall be replaced not less than every 3 years. The Secretary shall ensure that there are sufficient numbers and types of other motor vehicles to support the mission of the United States Border Patrol.

(2) FEATURES.—All motor vehicles purchased for the United States Border Patrol shall—

(A) be appropriate for the mission of the United States Border Patrol; and

(B) have a panic button and a global positioning system device that is activated solely in emergency situations to track the location of agents in distress.

SEC. 163. ELECTRONIC EQUIPMENT.

(a) PORTABLE COMPUTERS.—The Secretary shall ensure that each police-type motor vehicle in the fleet of the United States Border Patrol is equipped with a portable computer with access to all necessary law enforcement databases and otherwise suited to the unique operational requirements of the United States Border Patrol.

(b) RADIO COMMUNICATIONS.—The Secretary shall augment the existing radio communications system so that all law enforcement personnel working in each area where United States Border Patrol operations are conducted have clear and encrypted 2-way radio communication capabilities at all times. Each portable communications device shall be equipped with a panic button and a global positioning system device that is activated solely in emergency situations to track the location of agents in distress.

(c) HAND-HELD GLOBAL POSITIONING SYSTEM DEVICES.—The Secretary shall ensure that each United States Border Patrol agent is issued a state-of-the-art hand-held global positioning system device for navigational purposes.

(d) NIGHT VISION EQUIPMENT.—The Secretary shall ensure that sufficient quantities of state-of-the-art night vision equipment are procured and maintained to enable each United States Border Patrol agent working during the hours of darkness to be equipped with a portable night vision device.

SEC. 164. PERSONAL EQUIPMENT.

(a) BORDER ARMOR.—The Secretary shall ensure that every agent is issued high-quality body armor that is appropriate for the climate and risks faced by the agent. Each agent shall be permitted to select from among a variety of approved brands and styles. Agents shall be strongly encouraged, but not required, to wear such body armor whenever practicable. All body armor shall be replaced not less than every 5 years.

(b) WEAPONS.—The Secretary shall ensure that agents are equipped with weapons that are reliable and effective to protect themselves, their fellow agents, and innocent third parties from the threats posed by armed criminals. The Secretary shall ensure that the policies of the Department authorize all agents to carry weapons that are suited to the potential threats that they face.

(c) UNIFORMS.—The Secretary shall ensure that all agents are provided with all necessary uniform items, including outerwear suited to the climate, footwear, belts, holsters, and personal protective equipment, at no cost to such agents. Such items shall be replaced at no cost to such agents as they become worn, unserviceable, or no longer fit properly.

SEC. 165. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 2007 through 2011 to carry out this subtitle.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent that Senator BINGAMAN be added as a cosponsor of this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, obviously this is an issue that has touched a lot of nerves all across the country. We all understand the volatility and the tension within it. We have an enormous task to try to find a fair, orderly, humane, and secure process for protecting our border. That is what we are trying to do.

Last night, President Bush spoke to the Nation about the challenge we face. I have strong reservations about some of the President's immigration proposals. But I believe on balance the President gave a thoughtful and compelling address that laid out why we have to act urgently. I think he particularly talked about the importance of acting comprehensively in solving the immigration puzzle.

I say to my colleagues, I think most of us have found as we have been wrestling with this issue, it is like a balloon. If you push in one place, it expands in another place, so you have to come at it in a comprehensive way. Each component of this reform is dependent on the other component in order to make the overall reform successful. We are not going to be successful if we don't create an effective employer verification system because workers will find a way to keep coming if we don't. By the same token, securing the border doesn't address the 11 million undocumented workers currently in the country.

We need the President's leadership so that this bill or this approach does not turn into one of those unfunded mandates or neglected opportunities like No Child Left Behind or even the Medicare prescription drug law.

Last night, the President announced his intention to dispatch 6,000 National Guard troops to the southern border. All of us agree we need to strengthen the southern border. But I disagree with President Bush about how we ought to get there and how fast we can get there. Yes, we need more strength and more personnel at the border. We need better enforcement of our immigration laws. But, particularly in a post-9/11 world, when you look at the recommendations of the 9/11 Commission, we need to do a better job of preventing the flood of immigrants who are crossing the borders every day.

But the bottom line is, what you need to do that job is not a makeshift force of already overextended National Guardsmen to militarize the border but rather specialized agents who are trained to do the police work, to track down individuals who make an illegal crossing, and to ensure that the borders are not easy avenues for those crossings.

I remind my colleagues that in the late 1980s and early 1990s, when our cities and our communities were facing a crime epidemic, we didn't send the National Guard in to do the job. We hired more police officers and invested in community policing. The COPS Program put 100,000 skilled and trained law enforcement officers on the streets of the communities of our country and crime dropped.

After 9/11, the mission of the Border Patrol changed. No longer are they charged with simply securing the border. They are now patrolling one of the greatest vulnerabilities in the war on terror. As their mission changed, their numbers increased, but they have never increased enough to do the job.

Each year for the past 10 years between 700,000 and 800,000 illegal immigrants arrived in this country. Despite more than doubling the number of Border Patrol agents between 1995 and 2005, Federal enforcement of our immigration laws has decreased significantly. The number of border apprehensions has declined by 31 percent, from an average of 1.5 million apprehensions a year between 1996 and 2000, to an average of 1.05 million between 2001 and 2004.

At the same time, the number of illegal immigrants apprehended within the interior of the country has plummeted by 36 percent, from an average of 40,193 between 1996 and 2000, to an average of 25,901 between 2001 and 2004.

As much as the strength of the Border Patrol has grown in the last years, actual performance demonstrates that we have to close a gap by almost twice or three times as much. The current Border Patrol agents protect more than 8,000 miles of international border and they detect and prevent smuggling, unlawful entry, undocumented immigrants, they apprehend persons violating the immigration laws, and they interdict contraband such as narcotics. They work under difficult circumstances for long periods and in all kinds of weather.

Currently, we have fewer than 12,000 Border Patrol agents. Those agents are responsible for patrolling 8,000 miles of land and seacoast, and because of the need to provide continuous coverage, no more than 25 percent of those agents are securing our borders at any given moment. That means there are only 4,000 agents patrolling 8,000 miles of land and our borders. So, if instead of spreading them out as we do today you put them all along the border, with just Texas alone, you would then have roughly two Border Patrol agents per mile. It is physically impossible to protect the borders of the United States under those circumstances.

There are additional numbers put into this legislation, but I have heard that, in fact, by joining the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center together with the National Training Center in Artesia, NM, which has recently increased its training capacity, we could do more. It is not rocket science, it is about capacity. If you don't have the capacity, then you build the capacity to meet the demand.

If we have the will to make this happen, we can make it happen.

So we already know this is a stopgap measure with the military to cover up what is already a failed immigration policy and a failed border policy. The 9/11 Commission warned us, several years ago now, that we needed to have additional personnel. Those calls have never been heeded. We need to heed them now. My amendment will increase the number by an additional 1,000 this year and that will be above the increase of 2,000 agents contained in the underlying bill.

Frankly, I think we ought to be trying to do more than that, but that is the reasonable level that we seem to be able to accept and also train at the same time under the current circumstances.

In addition, my amendment would give border State Governors the ability to request up to 1,000 more Border Patrol agents in the Department of Homeland Security in times of international border emergencies. In deciding whether to grant the Governor's request, the Secretary would have to consider the effect any shuffling of Border Patrol agents would have on overall border security.

Last year, a survey by Peter D. Hart found that just 34 percent of the front-line Border Patrol agents said they were satisfied with the "tools, training, and support" they received to protect our borders. That should be 100 percent. What we need to do is guarantee that we take the steps in order to make it so.

In addition, my amendment increases the number of helicopters and power boats available for Border Patrol, and it provides Border Patrol agents with the training they need to use those tools. We guarantee a ratio of one patrol vehicle for every three agents and ensure that each of those vehicles is equipped with a portable computer. That also provides every agent with clear and encrypted two-way radios, night vision equipment, GPS devices, high-quality body armor, and reliable and effective weapons. It makes each and every agent certain that they have the necessary equipment and uniforms for the kind of climate in which they are working.

I am glad that the Senator from Pennsylvania is prepared to accept this amendment. I thank my colleagues for their support of it.

As I said, if we don't have a sufficient training capacity, it is clear that the expertise needed is real. I heard of Border Patrol agents who have had to go through survival training and different kinds of training that is highly specialized. These individuals are engaged in law enforcement and police work. I think everybody in this country would like to see our National Guard, which is already stretched thin, minimally involved to the degree possible. The best way to do that is to get more Border Patrol agents trained faster.

I thank the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I think it is a good amendment to increase the number of Border Patrol agents. We accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHAMBLISS). The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3999) was agreed to.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. SPECTER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I now yield to Senator KYL for the Kyl-Cornyn amendment. I ask unanimous consent that it be the first amendment pending tomorrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Arizona is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 4027

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, there is an amendment at the desk which I would like to have considered at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. KYL] for himself and Mr. CORNYN, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. ALLEN, Mr. MCCAIN, Mr. FRIST, Mr. BROWNBACK, and Mr. MARTINEZ, proposes an amendment numbered 4027.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, let me briefly explain this amendment. It is a somewhat different version from what was introduced a couple of weeks ago and was pending at the time this legislation was laid aside for other business.

This amendment has the primary purpose of ensuring that people who have committed serious crimes or have absconded after on order for their removal has been issued would not be entitled to the benefits of the legislation.

Specifically, in the bill as written, there were certain crimes which were included, and if you had committed one of those crimes, you couldn’t participate in the program—certain crimes of moral turpitude, for example.

What we found was that list was not all-inclusive and there were other serious crimes, including felonies, that were not included and therefore we felt should be added so that nobody who had committed a serious crime would be able to participate in the program.

Among the crimes that courts have said did not involve moral turpitude and therefore needed to be included in this legislation are the following: alien smuggling, conspiracy to commit offenses against the United States, simple assault and battery, involuntary manslaughter, simple kidnapping, weapons possession—for example, one of the cases dealt with possession of a sawed-off shot gun—burglary, money laundering, and there are others as well.

The point is, we want to be sure this legislation denies the benefits of legal status, including potential citizenship, to anyone who has committed a serious crime of this type. Therefore, the statute provides that if you have been convicted of a felony or three misdemeanors or have been convicted of a serious crime or there are reasonable grounds to believe the alien has committed a serious crime outside of the United States prior to arrival, and there are reasonable grounds for regarding the alien as a danger to the security of the United States, then in those events the individual would not be able to participate in the benefits of the law.

In addition to that, there are several categories of individuals who for various reasons have been ordered removed from the United States and have adjudicated their case and a final order of removal has been issued, either by an immigration judge or another judge or immigration official. Here, too, given the fact that we want the benefits of this legislation to apply to people who are willing to comply with the law, even where there has been a court adjudication of this statute, if they do not like the results and decide they are not going to leave even though the judge ordered them to leave, then we should not allow the benefits of this legislation to apply to them.

One of the things which is inherent in most of the bills—I think in all of the bills, including the bill that is on the floor—is the concept that you are not permitted to be in the United States unless certain things happen. If you commit a crime, for example, then you can’t stay here. That relies to some extent on the individual complying with the court order to leave.

This part of the amendment says that when you have been ordered to leave by a judge, you have to do that. If you have demonstrated that you are not willing to do that, then you shouldn’t be able to participate in the benefits of this law.

One of the things we have done—and as a result, there have been several cosponsors added to the legislation—is provided some opportunities to have this provision waived if people can make certain arguments. For example, if an individual who has been ordered to be removed can demonstrate they did not receive notice of removal proceedings, under that condition, this provision could be waived.

In addition, the alien could argue that his failure to appear and be removed was due to exceptional circumstances beyond the control of the alien or that the alien’s departure from the United States would result in extreme hardship to the alien’s spouse, parent, or child who is a citizen of the United States or an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence.

There is one other factor that has been added relative to coming into this country based upon fraudulent documents. In those situations, the alien could argue that there was a reason this provision should be waived and the alien should still be permitted to participate in the benefits of the legislation.

We think we have drafted something that is fair, that ensures that people who should not be citizens of the United States or granted other legal status under the bill will not be granted the status, but that if there is some reason they can argue that there should be an exception, they will have every right to do so. In that sense, we think this is a firm but fair provision.

I hope our colleagues on the other side of the aisle and colleagues who support the underlying legislation would consider this not an unfriendly amendment but an amendment that is truly designed to ensure that a key principle is upheld. The principle is already built into the underlying bill in one respect. The object of this amendment is to make sure it is complete and covers all of the kinds of crimes one might want to cover. As a result, we would hope this would receive an overwhelming response and could be supported by a large number of our colleagues, both on the Democratic and Republican side.

Let me conclude by saying that this vote will not occur until tomorrow, but it is an important vote. I think it will demonstrate our willingness to continue to move this legislation forward.

I appreciate the consideration of this amendment and ask my colleagues to support it tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I thank Senators KYL and CORNYN for this amendment. I thank them for the intense discussions and negotiations for which we have been able to get widespread support for this amendment; also, the Senator from Massachusetts, Senator KENNEDY, on the other side of the aisle.

Senator CORNYN and Senator KYL have focused attention very appropriately on one who is convicted of a crime, who would more likely, obviously, commit another crime. That is not what this bill is all about. I think these efforts bear fruit in this amendment, and they seek to bar the potentially dangerous criminal alien from taking advantage of this program.

The amendment specifically addresses individuals who have been convicted of one felony or three misdemeanors. It also addresses those who have just ignored our laws and thumbed their nose at our judicial system. But thanks to these negotiations, we allow individuals who may have been caught up in an unjust and unfair system to apply for a waiver and possibly have their cases reconsidered.

I believe that ultimately this amendment makes the bill better and our country safer.

I wish to again thank Senators KYL and CORNYN for their willingness to negotiate some questions that we had about a very small aspect of this bill. I think it preserves the very important intent of the Kyl-Cornyn amendment—that we will never allow people who have committed felonies or crimes to be eligible for citizenship in this country. I thank them for their efforts in this direction. I hope our friends on the other side of the aisle will have a chance to examine this amendment overnight, and perhaps we could dispense with it early in the morning.

There are a number of amendments on our side. I am told there are a number of amendments on the other side. I think we have made good progress today in addressing some of the major issues, but obviously we need to move forward. I hope my friends on the other side of the aisle will see fit to have a vote as quickly as possible so we can move on to other amendments.

I yield the floor.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I appreciate the comments of my colleague and thank him, Senator GRAHAM, and Senator KENNEDY for their work in helping us to negotiate provisions of this amendment.

I join my colleague from Arizona in expressing the view that we should not take very long tomorrow to conclude the debate, and I hope we will receive substantial support for the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, for the record, I would like to compliment our staff because most of the hard work in this place goes on in some back room with our staff people trying to work through the problems of the bill. They have done a great job for Senators KYL, CORNYN, and MCCAIN. I am proud of what my staff has done, and particularly Senator KENNEDY's staff. We have all gotten good staff support on this issue.

Very clearly, succinctly, to the point, if you are a criminal, if you have committed a felony, if you have committed a crime or three misdemeanors, you don't get a second shot. Off you go. That, to me, is important.

Under the bill, we are trying to give people a pathway to citizenship that would be earned and that would add value to our country. Senators KYL and CORNYN have made this a better bill because the one thing we should all be able to agree on here is you are not adding value to the country when you openly admit people who are criminals, who are mean and hateful, and who keep breaking the law.

There is another group of people who are subject to deportation on the civil side. I think it is very fair that in a limited class of cases, we will allow people on the civil side subject to deportation a chance to make their case anew in terms of being eligible for a future guest worker program that may become our Nation's law based on the base bill.

Who are these people? If you are in a civil deportation hearing and you can demonstrate that you never received the order to leave, then we are going to give you a second shot. It is hard to comply with something you don't know about. That happens on occasion.

Second, we are going to allow you, on the civil side receiving a deportation order, to make an argument about how it would affect your family and take the human condition into consideration.

There is a unique group of people who come to this country—not by illegally crossing the border and overstaying their visa—who are one step ahead of a death squad in some foreign land. It could be Haiti or other places, it could be Cuba, with an oppressive Communist regime, and the only way they can get out of that country to come here is it make up a story that would keep them from being killed. What we are saying is, if you come into our country through an inspection system and you have to save your family from an oppressive government or ahead of a death squad, we will let you tell us about that. We will sit down and figure out if it makes sense to make you part of this program.

There are not that many people, but we don't want to leave anybody behind that has a meritorious case to be made on the civil side. If you are a criminal, forget it. You have had your chance, and you have blown it. This, to me, makes the bill better, whether it is the underlying bill or not. This is a concept that is uniquely American.

If you believe in playing by the rules, as Americans do, and you hurt people, you are not going to get a second shot at hurting people again in our country. If you got caught up in a legal system that sometimes is complicated and you have a meritorious argument to be made and you have never hurt anyone, we are going to listen to what you have to say.

I am proud to be part of it. Senator KENNEDY has been very helpful. I hope we can get close to 100 votes. This is something that should bring us together. Senators KYL and CORNYN demonstrated the best of this body, reaching out, even though Members may not agree with the base bill, to try to find a way to make this part of the bill better.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. CORNYN. Mr. President, let me express my appreciation to the Senator from Arizona, the senior Senator, the Senator from South Carolina, for working with Senator KYL and myself on this amendment.

This whole subject is complicated and has so many different moving parts. What I mean by "subject," I mean comprehensive immigration reform. Sometimes I think people start with a deep skepticism about what other Senators are actually trying to do.

I hope as this amendment is accepted when we vote tomorrow, showing the alliance that has been created around this amendment, that our colleagues understand, even though there may be some who disagree with some aspects of the bill in the Senate, we are deeply committed to comprehensive immigration reform. We understand it is important we have border security, interior enforcement, worksite enforcement, a temporary worker program, and that we deal in a humane and compassionate fashion with the 12 million people who now live in our country in violation of our immigration laws.

Certainly, there are improvements that can be made to this underlying bill. This amendment is designed to do exactly that. It is ironic that it was first introduced well over a month ago and then, unfortunately, we were unsuccessful in getting a vote on the amendment. It now looks as if, through hard work, discussion and cooperation, the intent behind the amendment is better understood. It has already been eloquently explained by Senators KYL, GRAHAM, and MCCAIN.

Let me say the whole purpose of this amendment was to make sure that those who have already had access to our criminal justice system and our civil litigation system, and lost, cannot come back and get another second bite at the apple. This amendment clarifies whether certain convicted criminals are eligible for the benefits of the legalization program contained in the underlying bill.

To be clear, the underlying bill, without this amendment, would allow certain criminal aliens to get legal status. The underlying bill disqualifies aliens who are ineligible to obtain a visa because of certain criminal convictions. But this only means crimes that are defined as crimes involving moral turpitude or drug-related crimes.

Under the current bill, without this amendment, not all crimes—including some felonies—would bar an alien from obtaining legal status. Let me share quickly a few examples of crimes that do not automatically exclude an alien from getting a visa and therefore would not render an alien ineligible for legalization absent this amendment.

For example, someone who has been convicted of the crime of kidnapping; someone who has been convicted of the crime of weapons possession; for example, possession of a sawed-off shotgun. Another example would be alien smuggling. This amendment would make ineligible any alien who has been convicted of a felony or three misdemeanors.

Ironically, this provision, once this amendment is accepted, will bring this bill in the Senate up to par, basically, with the 1986 law which recognized that problem and excluded any alien that had been convicted of a felony or three misdemeanors. That is the basis upon which this amendment is offered.

I might also add, of course, those who have had an opportunity to have their cases adjudicated, to have their day in court, but simply thumb their nose at the law and have gone underground, those individuals who have already had a bite at the apple, have already had their day in court and lost and simply gone underground and defied their deportation order, they also would be excluded from the legalization benefits contained in the bill, subject to some of the exceptions and the extreme hardship provisions that Senator GRAHAM and others have discussed.

I very much appreciate my colleagues, including Senator KENNEDY, the manager of the bill on the minority side, indicating their positive response to this amendment. While there is no formal agreement, it is the sense that this amendment is likely to be accepted by overwhelming numbers.

It just goes to show if we continue to work together, talk to each other and try to work our way through our differences, we can make progress on the bill and actually improve it over the bill as proposed.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, in view of some things that were said a couple weeks ago, let me close this out with a couple of brief comments.

At the time that Senator CORNYN and I first introduced this amendment, we speculated that it might ultimately result in 300,000, 400,000 500,000 people being denied the benefits of the legislation. However, there were those on the other side who said this was a poison pill, this was going to preclude everyone who came into the country illegally or overstayed a visa from getting the benefits of the legislation. We said: No, that is not true. It is cast narrowly by its terms. It talks about convicted felons, three misdemeanors, and the people who have avoided a court order or a judge's order that they leave the country. That is it.

Some on the other side said: We look at the language, and we think maybe this could apply to anyone who comes into the country illegally. By laying it down, you have created a poison bill. As a result, they would not permit a vote on the amendment. As a result, this legislation came to the end of the period of time, the end of the week, and the majority leader had to lay it aside so that the Senate could go on its recess.

Senator CORNYN and I never had an intention to bring the bill to a halt or to create some kind of a poison pill that would make it impossible for anyone to support the legislation if the amendment were agreed to. We simply were trying to point out that there was a deficiency in the bill. Serious criminals could become citizens of the United States. We felt that was wrong.

So we introduced the amendment and tried to explain at the time that was our sole motivation. Frankly, we could have dispensed with this amendment 3 weeks ago if our colleagues had simply gotten down to the debate, carefully read it, talked it out with us, and gotten a vote.

Because of a question that our colleagues raised that we referred to earlier this evening, we have made a couple of modifications to the amendment, demonstrating that we are perfectly willing to negotiate a provision if there is a sense that we should have done something a little bit differently, which we did.

I hope as we proceed to introduce other amendments to this legislation, that our colleagues on the other side will be willing to have votes. We wanted to have a vote on this earlier today or tonight or to lock in a time for a vote tomorrow. No, the other side said: No, we are not ready yet.

If we continue at this pace, we are not going to finish the bill by Memorial Day, as the majority leader has requested, as the President has requested, and as we are committed to do.

Our colleagues are going to have to do two things with respect to the rest of the debate on this bill: No. 1, to be willing to move with us to a quick consideration of amendments, a reasonable time for debate, then a vote, and then move on to the next amendment. No. 2, instead of characterizing amendments in a way that is not correct and attributing political motives to those who are simply trying to point out deficiencies in the bill and correct them with these amendments, they ought to simply be willing to come to the Senate, have the debate, and then proceed to a vote on the amendment.

We are not in this to somehow try to stop the legislation as our repeated efforts to get a vote and move on have demonstrated.

I join my colleague from Texas in saying I appreciate the fact that, hopefully now, knock on wood, tomorrow morning, first thing, we will be able to have a vote on this amendment and not only vote on it but finally, having sat down and looked at it, our colleagues will say: This is an amendment we can support. It makes sense to deny citizenship to serious criminals.

If we can approach the other amendments in the same fashion we have finally gotten to with this amendment, we can actually finish this bill. I urge my colleagues to cooperate with us in that way.

Mr. CORNYN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KYL. I am happy to yield.

Mr. CORNYN. Mr. President, through the Chair, I inquire, isn't it a fact over the last few weeks on behalf of the Republican leadership, the Senator has tried to collect all of the potential pool of amendments and consolidate those amendments down into a reasonable number in a good-faith effort to try to move this process forward? We shared that list with our colleagues on the other side of the aisle. Does the Senator believe that demonstrates the good faith we have tried to demonstrate from the very start?

Mr. KYL. I thank the Senator from Texas.

Yes, we have tried to do that.

I see the distinguished minority leader is here, and I suggest the best way to get this bill quickly considered and finished is to lay down as many of the amendments as Members have ready and then have the minority and majority side work together to figure out the proper order of those amendments, to try to enter into time agreements. If we are able to do that, I don't have any doubt that working in good faith we can complete the work of this Senate before the Memorial Day recess on this important piece of legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. The distinguished Senator from Oklahoma has asked that I indicate that we have no objection to his being in the queue.

As has been announced by the distinguished manager of the bill, the Senator from Pennsylvania, we are going to take up the Kyl amendment, the Obama amendment, and then we are going to go to Sessions, then a Democrat, and as far as we are concerned on our side, we have no objection whatever to Senator INHOFE being the next Republican amendment in order.

I have not checked with the majority leader, and if there is a problem, I can change it, but I ask consent that be the case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, first of all, I thank the minority leader for that quick response to my request. I know we are all anxious to get as many amendments up and taken care of as possible.

I know we cannot do this until probably tomorrow sometime, and it is our understanding there is now a unanimous consent for Senators KYL, OBAMA, SESSIONS, a Democrat, and then me. With that, if no others want to be heard on the amendments, I would like to visit about the amendment we will take up tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, in his speech, the President endorsed the idea that people immigrating to this country should assimilate and learn English.

I will quote from his speech:

... We must honor the great American tradition of the melting pot, which has made us one nation out of many peoples. The success of our country depends upon helping newcomers assimilate into society, and embrace our common identity as Americans. Americans are bound together by our shared ideals, an appreciation for our history, respect for the flag we fly, and an ability to speak and write the English language. English is also the key to unlocking the opportunity of America. English allows newcomers to go from picking crops to opening a grocery ... from cleaning offices to running offices ... from a life of low-paying jobs to a diploma, a career, and a home of their own. When immigrants assimilate and advance in our society, they realize their dreams ... they renew our spirit ... and they add to the unity of Americans.

Last November, speaking to an audience in Davis-Monthan Air Force Base in Tucson, President Bush again stated his support for immigrants to learn English. He said:

Every new citizen of the United States has an obligation to learn our custom and our values, including liberty and civic responsibility, equality under God and tolerance for others, and the English language.

So this has been very specific. Ronald Reagan addressed it many times, certainly, in the State of the Union Message. I recall being here in 1999, when President Bill Clinton at that time said:

Our new immigrants ... have a responsibility to enter the mainstream of America. That means learning English.

It goes on and on and on. I think almost every Member has at one time or another talked in the Senate about the reasons it is necessary for the English language to be part of any kind of an immigration bill.

Today, once again, I am offering my English amendment, No. 3996, along with my colleagues, Senators SESSIONS, COBURN, BURNS, BUNNING, and others. My amendment follows Congressman PETER KING's bill, H.R. 4408, as well as Senator SHELBY's bill, S. 323, from the 105th Congress, by making English the official language and requiring all official business of the United States to be conducted in English.

It also allows exceptions. This is very important because arguments have been made against it. But there are exceptions where our law specifically says something should be done in another language, such things as protecting someone's legal rights to make sure they understand what their privileges are, what their responsibilities are when they are served.

Also, recently, when we experienced Hurricane Katrina, where an evacuation order was issued, that order could be delivered by the Federal Government in necessary languages to get the message out.

So we have taken care of these problems.

I would suggest there are three main reasons to adopt this amendment. One is for unity and assimilation. To begin with, as the President has said numerous times, learning English is vital to achieving assimilation, assimilating yourself into society. So many people are looking at illegals who are coming over and getting jobs, but they do not stop and think about the fact that in order to become a citizen, you have to assimilate into society so you can enjoy the benefits. They do not come naturally. You have to make it happen.

President Theodore Roosevelt echoed this point at a luncheon for the National Americanization Committee on February 1, 1916. He said:

Let us say to the immigrant not that we hope he will learn English, but that he has got to learn it. . . . He has got to consider the interest of the United States or he should not stay here.

It goes all the way back for many years. Our leaders have reiterated this. Our country is made up of immigrants from all over the world, immigrants who have joined together under common ideas, common beliefs, and a common language to function as "one nation under God."

As we allow great numbers of immigrants, legal and illegal, into the country, we are overwhelming the assimilation process and creating what some have called "linguistic ghettos," segregating these immigrants into a massive underclass who are not able to obtain good-paying jobs and climb out of poverty and Government dependency.

By not requiring immigrants to assimilate and learn English, we are also undermining our unity and importing dangerous, deadly philosophies that go against our American ideals.

September 11 is an example of this, as Muslim extremists executed their jihadist philosophy against the United States and caused thousands of Americans to lose their lives.

The second thing to be considered is the cost. The Office of Management and Budget estimates that it costs taxpayers between $1 billion and $2 billion to provide language assistance under President Clinton's Executive order that came out during his Presidency.

There are also enormous costs associated with the mandate that local governments provide multilingual ballots. For example, Los Angeles County taxpayers spent over $1.1 million in 1996 to provide multilingual voting assistance in Spanish, Chinese, Vietnamese, Japanese, and Filipino, according to a GAO report.

In 2002, Los Angeles's multilingual election costs more than doubled to $3.3 million, according to the Associated Press.

The third reason is, this is something the American people want. All the American people want it. I have never seen anything polled more consistently than this issue has been polled. Three national associations are dedicated solely to this amendment: U.S. English, English First, and Pro-English.

Senator SPECTER's Judiciary Committee invited this amendment in the Legislative Directors' meeting in the Republican Policy Committee by saying it "welcomed amendments on English" as a means to enhance "assimilation" of immigrants.

This issue has raised millions of dollars in direct mail over the years. These donors must include populists, given the huge levels of support. No other amendment has been more thoroughly vetted. This concept has been around for decades, indeed, for centuries. Historically, the legislation has been bipartisan.

In 1997, several of us joined Senator SHELBY in his official English bill. It was a bipartisan bill with 21 cosponsors, including Democrats Hollings and BYRD and many others. And over 150 current Members of the House of Representatives have cosponsored official English legislation.

Most of the States—27—have made English their official language. This is kind of interesting. The vast majority of the States, on their own, on a State basis, have made English the official language.

There are 51 nations around the world that have made English their official language, but we have not. Now, can you explain to me why Gambia, Ghana, Liberia, Nigeria, Sierra Leone, Uganda, Zambia, and Zimbabwe have made English their official language, yet the United States has not?

The pollsters, consistently over the last 20 years, have all shown positive results at levels in the 80s, the 80-percentile range. In 1988, G. Lawrence Research showed 87 percent favored English as the official language, with only 8 percent opposed and 5 percent not sure.

A 1996 national survey by Luntz Research asked: Do you think English should be made the official language of the United States? Eighty-six percent of Americans supported making English the official language. Only 12 percent opposed it.

Eighty-one percent of first-generation immigrants, 83 percent of second-generation immigrants, and 87 percent of third- and fourth-generation immigrants supported making English the official language.

I think a lot of people have this misunderstanding that this is some kind of a protectionist issue. Yet the vast majority of Latinos, the vast majority of immigrants have supported this, also.

In 2000, Public Opinion Strategies showed 84 percent favored English as the official language, with only 12 percent opposing.

Ninety-two percent of Republicans, 76 percent of Democrats, and 76 percent of Independents favor making English the official language. That is according to a 2004 Zogby International poll.

Another Zogby International poll question on official English—this poll is a month old, conducted between March 14 and 16 of 2006—said: Five out of six likely voters support official English. When informed the United States has no official language, five out of six likely voters—84 percent—agree the country should make English the official language. The majority of Hispanic voters support official English. An overwhelming majority of likely Hispanic voters—71 percent—agree the country should make English the official language.

A bipartisan majority support official English. Official English is not an "extreme" position. Eighty-four percent of self-identified "moderate" voters support English as the official language.

Hispanics also agree learning English is important. So it is not just that it is the right thing to do, it is what they can do for themselves. The National Council of LaRaza, which opposes official English, commissioned a 2004 Zogby poll showing that Latinos believe in the importance of learning English. Over 97 percent strongly agreed that "the ability to speak English is important to succeed in this country."

In south Florida, Hispanics back English, according to a 2005 University of Miami School of Communications/Zogby International survey. "How important is it for Hispanics who immigrate to the United States to adopt American culture?" Seventy percent said it is very important. These are Hispanics who are responding.

The December 2002 Pew Hispanic Center/Henry J. Kaiser Family Foundation National Survey of Latinos asked:

Do you think adult Latino immigrants need to learn English to succeed in the United States or can they succeed even if they only speak Spanish?

About 9 in 10—89 percent—of Latinos indicate that they believe immigrants need to learn to speak English to succeed in the United States.

And this goes on and on and on. There should not be any question in anyone's mind that one of the most popular notions out there is for us to adopt English as the official language.

Finally, according to ProEnglish, a group dedicated to making English the official language, one out of every five Americans speaks a language other than English at home.

Referring to immigrants speaking English in our country, Congressman STEVE KING of Iowa said:

I don't think the immigrants are the problem; I think it is the people at the border that are telling them that they don't have to learn English, should not have to and keep them in these cultural enclaves so that then allows them to control the immigrants and gives them political power.

I believe we are doing a great disservice if we do not recognize this as one of the true, great issues of our time. There is no more appropriate time than during the consideration of this immigration bill to bring this out and finally do something we have talked about doing now for over 100 years and getting it done and getting it done on this bill.

Mr. President, let me repeat how much I appreciate the minority leader allowing me to get into the queue. We look forward to having this debated and voted on tomorrow.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there now be a period for morning business with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

20TH ANNIVERSARY OF TOYOTA IN GEORGETOWN, KENTUCKY

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, 20 years ago I was pleased and proud to help welcome Toyota to Kentucky. I rise today, equally pleased and proud, to congratulate Toyota on its 20 years of success in the Commonwealth and to wish them much continued success for the future.

Toyota provides 7,000 jobs in the Georgetown, KY, plant that it opened 20 years ago, and the company's manufacturing operations in Kentucky produced half a million American-made cars last year alone. In fact, the Toyota Camry, which is manufactured in Kentucky, has been the most popular model on the American market for the last 4 years and eight times in the past 9 years. Beginning this fall, Toyota will bring the future of automotive technology to Kentucky with the production of the environmentally friendly Camry Hybrid. The Georgetown plant will produce 4,000 models a month.

Since it arrived in Kentucky, Toyota has invested more than $5 billion in its operations. This includes the manufacturing site in Georgetown; Toyota's North American Parts Center-Kentucky, the company's largest parts-distribution center in the world, in Hebron, KY; and its North American manufacturing headquarters in Erlanger, KY. Together, these businesses provide about $500 million a year in paychecks to Kentucky workers. More significantly, Toyota has become an anchor for related suppliers and vendors that provide thousands more jobs for Kentuckians.

Toyota has provided an important economic lesson on the value of insourcing. Some have bemoaned the loss of American jobs to overseas firms. Well, we in Kentucky are proud to have nurtured one of the first and most successful efforts by an overseas manufacturer to bring jobs here. Toyota and Kentucky both have benefited greatly from this partnership over these last 20 years.

And Kentucky has gained more than just jobs—Toyota has proved to be a model member of the business community. It supports education, computer literacy in the workforce, the University of Kentucky Children's Hospital, and many other worthy causes across the Commonwealth. Many Kentuckians have benefited from Toyota's generosity, and we are all happy that Toyota chose Kentucky as its major center for U.S. operations two decades ago.

Mr. President, I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating the thousands of Kentuckians who work for Toyota for their dedication to achievement and success, both on the job and in their communities. Kentucky is still reaping the rewards of its 20-year partnership with Toyota, and we hope to continue to do so for years to come.

HONORING OUR ARMED FORCES

STAFF SERGEANT LANCE M. CHASE

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, I rise today to remember a fallen son of Oklahoma who died while defending his Nation, SSG Lance M. Chase.

Staff Sergeant Chase grew up in Midwest City Oklahoma and graduated from Midwest City High School in 1991 after playing football there. He was also an avid fisherman and fan of NASCAR. Before joining the Army in 1995, Staff Sergeant Chase spent 20 months working for the Oklahoma City Sheriff's Office as a detention officer alongside his father who is a Reserve officer and member of the sheriff's bomb squad.

Staff Sergeant Chase was assigned to 1st Battalion, 12th Infantry Regiment, 4th Infantry Division at Fort Hood Texas. There he trained other soldiers on how to maintain and move M1A2 Abrams tanks and was an honored marksman. After returning from his first tour of duty in Iraq, he got involved with efforts sending books and hygiene products to the Iraqi people. He told his wife Kristen that his biggest joy was seeing Iraqi children returning to their local schools.

Before Staff Sergeant Chase went to Iraq, he told his two sons—Brett, who is 11 years old, and Trevor, who is 9 years old, that he would rather fight this type of terrorist war on their soil than to fight it on our own soil where his children would be in danger. Staff Sergeant Chase was in his second tour of duty in Iraq on January 23, 2006, when his M1A2 Abrams tank was hit by an improvised explosive device in Baghdad, Iraq. He was 32 years old. SSG Chase clearly understood our mission in Iraq and felt that he had helped to make the lives of the Iraqi people better. Staff Sergeant Lance M. Chase deserves to be remembered for the fine soldier that he was and the sacrifice that he made for us.

STAFF SERGEANT JOHN G. DOLES

Mr. President, I wish to honor a brave soldier from Oklahoma who gave his life in service of this Nation. SSG John Doles of the U.S. Army embodies the spirit and values that have protected this country's freedom and continue to spread hope to the far corners of the world.

Sergeant Doles was an "all-American kid" he grew up in Chelsea, OK, riding horses and playing football. Sergeant Doles joined the Army in 2000 and attended Airborne School at Fort Benning, GA. He went on to become a Ranger and told his father that this was what he wanted to do with his life because he loved his country.

Sergeant Doles was also a devoted family man. He left behind a wife, Heather, and two children, Logan and Breanna. After his tour in Afghanistan, he planned to reenlist and become an instructor at the Army Ranger Camp at Fort Benning, GA, so he could be closer to his family.

Sergeant Doles was no stranger to the hazards of duty. He participated in one of the largest combat jumps since World War II. His unit parachuted into northern Iraq in March of 2003 with the "Red Devils." This major operation assisted in the swift liberation of Iraq. Sergeant Doles was a squad leader of about a dozen soldiers with the 1st Battalion, 508th Infantry Regiment, part of the 173rd Airborne Brigade. On Friday September 30, 2005, he was killed in an ambush in Shah Wali, Afghanistan. He was 29 years old.

Sergeant Doles gave his utmost to his family and his country. He has left behind many who saw firsthand what a true hero he was. As a son of Oklahoma and a fine example of what this country stands for, Staff Sergeant Doles deserves our honor and remembrance.

PRIVATE FIRST CLASS TRAVIS J. GRIGG

Mr. President, I rise today to honor the memory of a remarkable man. PFC Travis J. Grigg was an Oklahoman through-and-through: a hard worker, dedicated, friendly, and a lover of his family and country. Those who knew him best remembered him as athletic and caring more about others than himself. He graduated from Inola High School, of Inola, OK, in 1999 and was a starter on the football, basketball, and baseball teams. He entered the U.S. Army in 2004, proudly serving his Nation in Iraq for about a year.

According to his family, Private First Class Grigg found his niche in the Army. He was a team player and a responsible man who once commented, "I feel like we're helping some people over here." He was assigned to the 1st Battalion, 320th Field Artillery Regiment, 101st Airborne Division. He joined the Army to earn money for college to become a teacher and football coach, but after joining, he decided that he wanted to become a firefighter like his father.

November 15, 2005, in Taji, Iraq, Private First Class Grigg was one of four individuals in a HMMWV that was hit when an improvised explosive device detonated. Tragically he, along with four other soldiers, did not survive the incident. He was 24 years old.

Private First Class Grigg will be missed by his father, four sisters, and two brothers. His sacrifice will not soon be forgotten by them his friends, his fellow soldiers, or by his country. I ask that we take this time to honor his name and his life.

PETTY OFFICER SECOND CLASS BRIAN K. JOPLIN

Mr. President, I rise today to honor the memory of a son of Oklahoma, Petty Officer Brian K. Joplin.

Petty Officer Joplin grew up in Hugo, OK and was assigned to Helicopter Mine Countermeasures Squadron 15, based at the Naval Air Station in Corpus Christi, TX. He was an aviation machinist and was known as a mechanic whose talent was second to none. Petty Officer Joplin was always willing to donate his time to his friends and neighbors. He spent his Memorial Day weekend of 2005 repairing and certifying a vintage B-25 Mitchell Bomber that was very much like the one his grandfather flew in World War II.

Petty Officer Joplin was deployed to Iraq in June of 2005. On Tuesday October 4, 2005, he was on a training mission when he fell from his MH-53 Sea Dragon helicopter and was killed. He was 32 years old.

Petty Officer Joplin is survived by his wife of 12 years, Belinda, and his daughters, Tori and Alicia. They will always remember a loving husband and father who had a great sense of humor, patience, and forgiveness and our thoughts are with them. We remember Petty Officer Joplin for his service, dedication, and love of his country, and at the same time, we recognize his valor and commitment. He will not be forgotten. It is because of men like Petty Officer Joplin that I am proud to be a part of this great country. He was a special soldier, a true Oklahoman, and a true American.

PRIVATE FIRST CLASS DAVID J. MARTIN

Mr. President, I rise to pay homage to Army PFC David J. Martin, who gave the ultimate sacrifice for his country with his life. Although he was only 21 years old, Private First Class Marshall was a dedicated defender of America and knew the value of freedom and the sacrifices freedom sometimes demands. For his service, I am proud to honor him on the Senate floor today.

Private First Class Martin was a member of the Second Battalion, 502nd Infantry Regiment, 2nd Brigade Combat Team, of the 101st Airborne Division. A native Oklahoman from Edmond, Private First Class Martin was one of four sons of Richard and Janet Martin. Private First Class Martin's mother is the president of the Edmond and North Oklahoma City Chapter of the Blue Star Mothers, a support group for mothers whose children are in the military and also send care packages to our soldiers in Iraq. We hold her in our prayers as all of her sons are serving our country in some way. Private First Class Martin's younger brother, Daniel, also enlisted last year, and his older brothers, Neil and Andrew, are police officers in Edmond, OK.

After graduating from Edmond North High School in 2002, Private First Class Martin briefly attended the University of Central Oklahoma and was a member of the ROTC unit there before enlisting in the Army. He earned an Army Achievement Medal during his training in Fort Benning, GA, for being an outstanding leader.

Private First Class Martin had only been in Iraq for a month when he was tragically killed. On October 31, 2005, the humvee he and three other fellow soldiers were riding in was struck by an improvised explosive device in Al Mahmudiyah, Iraq. I ask that the U.S. Senate now pay tribute to PFC David Martin, a man who knew the true meaning of service and sacrifice. I am proud of him and proud of his demonstrated commitment to winning the freedom of those he did not know. We will not forget this Oklahoman hero, this American patriot—PFC David Martin.

FIRST SERGEANT TOBIAS C. MEISTER

Mr. President, I stand today to honor the memory of a brave American who gave his life defending the Nation. He felt a call to serve his country, to be part of something bigger than himself, and ultimately he paid the highest price. First Sergeant Tobias C. Meister, of Jenks, OK, was assigned to the Army's 321st Civil Affairs Brigade which was deployed to Afghanistan.

First Sergeant Meister was born in Remsen, Iowa and joined the Iowa National Guard in 1992, 2 years prior to graduating from Ramsen-Union Community High School in Iowa. He was an infantryman before transferring to the Reserves in 1998 and attending the University of Texas at San Antonio. There he earned a business degree and later took a job in Tulsa, OK, with the oil and gas firm Horizon Natural Resources.

First Sergeant Meister was an accomplished martial artist who was undefeated as a kickboxer. Those who fought against him knew immediately he was a fierce competitor. One of his opponents said that Meister weighed about "165 pounds and you knew 100 pounds of it was heart if you saw him fight." He loved martial arts and the discipline that it required.

First Sergeant Meister was a drill sergeant and had been named the Army Reserve's Drill Sergeant of the Year in 2002. In 2004, he decided to join those he had been training for combat. On December 28, 2005 in Asadabad, Afghanistan, he was killed at the age of 30 during combat patrol operations when an improvised explosive device was detonated near his humvee.

First Sergeant Meister gave his life for the freedom of millions of Americans and also for the peace and prosperity of the Afghani people crippled by a totalitarian regime. He is survived by his wife Alicia and 18-month-old son Will. The loss of this exemplary husband, father, and soldier is a loss we all feel; our thoughts and prayers are especially with his family and friends. He knew that he and his fellow soldiers were fighting to protect America, to keep their Nation safe. It is for men like First Sergeant Meister that I am proud to be a part of this great country. He was a special soldier, a special man, and a defender of our freedom.

TECHNICAL SERGEANT JASON L. NORTON

Mr. President, I rise today to honor the memory of a man who paid the last full measure for the protection of our freedom. TSgt Jason L. Norton was from Miami, OK, and was assigned to the 3rd Security Forces Squadron at Elmendorf Air Force Base in Alaska serving as a patrol and security officer training police canines. He had been deployed to Iraq in November of 2005.

Technical Sergeant Norton joined the Air Force in 1992 after graduating from Miami High School in 1991, where he played football and wrestled. His Air Force career took him to many different places. He was known as smart, easy to talk to, and always willing to share what he knew with others. He earned 17 medals, including an Air Force Commendation Medal, 4 Air Force Achievement Awards, and 2 Air Force Expeditionary Service Medals. He enjoyed his time in Alaska, earning a reputation as a great Alaskan hunter while also providing his time as a father figure to children who needed one.

For Technical Sergeant Norton, family was everything. Even though he was stationed 4,000 miles away in Alaska, he made a point to return home often to see his family. He met his wife Cristina while he was serving at Tinker Air Force Base in Oklahoma, and they have two children, a daughter, Rebecca, who is 8 years old, and a son Dalton, who is 7. He has been described as a great father who showed an equal devotion to his lifelong friends. Once he traveled back to Oklahoma from Alaska to attend the funeral for the wife of a longtime friend who had died of cancer.

On January 22, 2006, TSgt Jason L. Norton's vehicle struck an improvised explosive device while conducting a convoy escort in the vicinity of Taji, Iraq. He was 32 years old, and the Air Force posthumously awarded him the Bronze Star and Purple Heart. Mr. President, we have lost a shining example of dedication, service, and sacrifice for others and should never forget the sacrifice of TSgt Jason L. Norton.

ARMY SPECIALIST JOSHUA M. PEARCE

Mr. President, I rise today to remember a young man from Oklahoma, Army SPC Joshua M. Pearce, who knew what it meant to be a soldier and was willing to pay the ultimate price for our freedom.

Specialist Pearce was from Guymon, OK, and was a baseball pitcher on the Guymon High School baseball team who was voted "Life of the Party" and "Best Looking" by his senior classmates in 2003. He always wanted to be a soldier, so he enlisted in the Army right after graduation, joining his older brother, Jeremy, in the Armed Forces. Specialist Pearce was described by friends and family alike as a person who always made everybody in the room smile.

Specialist Pearce was deployed to Iraq as a part of the 2nd Battalion, 1st Infantry Regiment, 172nd Stryker Brigade Combat Team that is stationed at Fort Wainwright, AK. Over the 6 months he served in Iraq, he talked to his mother, Becky Hilliard, through e-mail, telephone, or instant messaging on a daily basis. In an open letter he wrote on September 11, 2005, Specialist Pearce stated that "I am not here to kill someone; I am here to help as many as I can live a better life. If killing some people to save the life of a fellow soldier happens to fall in the agenda, so be it. We drive down the streets of these little towns and see little children on the corners bare-footed asking for water, food, or whatever they can get." He told his sister, Heidi Barncastle, that "he was doing this so his nephews didn't have to."

Specialist Pearce was riding in his Stryker military vehicle on February 26, 2006 near Mosul, Iraq, when it was hit with an improvised explosive device. He was 21 years old. Specialist Pearce did not want his friends and family to mourn his loss should he die. He was doing what he always wanted to do and believed in the mission that he was on. Mr. President, we will not forget this Oklahoma hero and American patriot, SPC Joshua M. Pearce, who died doing something that he loved.

PRIVATE FIRST CLASS JOSHUA FRANCIS POWERS

Mr. President, I rise today to honor one of Oklahoma's brave soldiers who has given us the last full measure to protect our freedom. PFC Joshua Francis Powers' sacrifice for his country should never be forgotten.

Private First Class Powers was from Skiatook, OK. He joined the Army in July of 2005, 1 month after earning his GED. He was remembered as an even-tempered soul who had varied interests from collecting swords and knives, making soap for senior citizens, fishing, and just simply hitting golf balls out into the pasture to occupy his time. He had a penchant for reading, sewing, playing video games, and often served as a peacemaker between his brothers, Michael and Jonathan. He was also a devout son who would often fix his mother Patricia's frozen pipes before he was asked to.

Private First Class Powers was assigned to the 2nd Battalion, 592nd Infantry Regiment, 2nd Brigade Combat Team, 101st Airborne Division at Fort Campbell, KY. After joining the Army, he was worried that his dog, Spunky, who had been his pet since he was in kindergarten, would die of old age before he got home. Private First Class Powers had been in Iraq for only 2½ weeks before he died of noncombat related injuries. He was 21 years old. Mr. President, we should always remember those who served the way PFC Joshua Francis Powers served and sacrificed for our freedom.

CORPORAL JEFFRY A. ROGERS

Mr. President, I wish to honor a true hero who, on November 16, 2005, gave his life while serving in Iraq. Cpl Jeffry Alan Rogers is an example of the selfless dedication that is essential to maintaining this country's freedom.

Corporal Rogers was from Oklahoma City and attended Putnam City North High School. He was one of six from the class of 2002 who enlisted in the military after graduating. He insisted on enlisting in the Marines after witnessing the horrors of September 11 saying, "We have to keep our world safe. We have to protect our people."

Corporal Rogers became an outstanding marine assigned to F. Company, 2nd Battalion, 1st Marine Division in Camp Pendleton, CA. His high test scores earned him an invitation to join the security forces and a $50,000 scholarship. He suggested to his parents that they build a house with the money that they had saved for his college education, and he even designed the house where his family now lives in Yukon, OK.

Corporal Rogers is remembered as a courteous and loving man who always said the little things that mean a lot to people. His commanders fondly recall how he invested into those under him and helped them set goals.

In his last letter to his parents, he quoted John 15:13 saying "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." Mr. President, Cpl Jeffry Rogers indeed demonstrated this deepest love. At 21 years of age, he put aside his own safety, volunteering to serve in the most dangerous of professions. He gave everything, and his sacrifice will be remembered by friends, family, and all of us who are profoundly indebted to him.

TECHNICAL SERGEANT PATRICK L. SHANNON

Mr. President, I rise today to honor a son of Oklahoma who after over 37 years has finally returned home. TSgt Patrick L. Shannon was serving his country in the Vietnam War when he was declared missing in action in 1968 after the radar site he and 18 other servicemen were operating in Laos was attacked by North Vietnamese commandos. We now know that Technical Sergeant Shannon did not survive the attack. He was 30 years old.

Technical Sergeant Shannon was from Owasso, OK, and was operating a radar installation Lima Site 85 atop the Pha Thi Mountain in the Houaphan Province in Laos, which was approximately 13 miles south of the border with North Vietnam. Lima Site 85 was helping to direct U.S. bombing missions of key targets in North Vietnam. On the morning of March 11, 1968, the site was overrun by North Vietnamese commandos. Only 7 of the 19 servicemen survived the attack, and the United States later bombed the site for 4 days to destroy the equipment that was left behind. North Vietnamese soldiers later threw the bodies of the dead servicemen off a cliff because the rocky ground did not permit a burial. This is where the remains of Technical Sergeant Shannon were found.

Technical Sergeant Shannon finally came home last year. A DNA sample from his sister helped to positively identify Technical Sergeant Shannon and bring closure to his family who had wondered what had really happened to him on that fateful day. His youngest child, Paula Wallace, said that her father "would be happy to be back in America." Mr. President, I, too, am happy that TSgt Patrick L. Shannon has finally returned home after answering his country's call to arms.

SERGEANT FIRST CLASS BRANDON K. SNEED

Mr. President, I wish to honor a brave soldier from Oklahoma who gave the last full measure to protect our freedom. SFC Brandon Sneed of the U.S. Army embodied the spirit of service and the values that make this country what it is today.

Sergeant Sneed was a great soldier. He joined soon after graduating from high school in 1990. As he rose through the ranks, he developed a reputation of dependability. He was serving as a field medic with Bravo Company in the 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment attached to the 69th Armor Regiment serving in Iraq.

Sergeant Sneed was no stranger to the hazards of duty. He would routinely go under fire to retrieve wounded soldiers. His second tour in Iraq was scheduled to end in December of last year.

Sergeant Sneed was also a family man. He married his wife Lori in 1994, and they had three children, Christopher, Brandee, and Brandon, Jr. His family had just moved into a new home. Sergeant Sneed met his wife while they both served their first tour in the Army together; they had plans to open a rehabilitation facility upon his retirement from the Army.

On October 10, 2005, Sergeant Sneed was killed while attempting to rescue an injured soldier when his Bradley Fighting Vehicle was destroyed by a roadside bomb. This occurred near Ramadi in Iraq's Anbar province. He was 33 years old. He had a strong sense of duty, work ethic, and a caring heart. He was devoted to his family, his country, and gave the highest sacrifice to his soldiers. Sergeant First Class Sneed deserves our honor and remembrance.

CORPORAL JOSHUA J. WARE

Mr. President, I wish to honor one of this country's fallen warriors, a young man that comes from my home State of Oklahoma. Marine Cpl Joshua J. Ware was serving the cause of freedom in Iraq when he paid the ultimate price.

Corporal Ware was born in Lawton, OK. He played football and baseball and ran track at Roland High School. In 2002, 1 year before he graduated, he signed up for the Marine Corps and enlisted just 5 days after graduating from High School and just 2 days after his birthday.

Corporal Ware was serving in Iraq with F Company, 2nd, Battalion, 1st Marine Division, and bravely fought in the second battle of Fallujah. He was on his second tour of duty in Iraq on November 16, 2005, when he was killed as a result of enemy small arms fire in Ubaydi, Iraq. He was 20 years old and was the first Comanche or Kiowa to die in combat since 1968.

Many are left behind who are proud and grieved at his sacrifice. Corporal Ware is survived by his parents, three brothers, and one sister.

The loss of Corporal Ware is one that will continue to be felt as the years pass. He gave more than was required, in life and in the sacrifice of his death. He gave up his own well-being, putting himself in harm's way, and demonstrated courage that demands our recognition. I hope to express our gratefulness for his sacrifice with these simple words and honor him before the Senate today.

THIRTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE MOSCOW HELSINKI GROUP

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, last Friday, May 12, marked the 30th anniversary of the oldest active Russian human rights organization, the Moscow Helsinki Group.

The creation of the Moscow Helsinki Group was announced on May 12, 1976, at a press conference called by Academician Andrei Sakharov, who later won the Nobel Peace Prize for his defense of human rights and his commitment to world peace. Formally named the "Public Group to Assist in the Implementation of the Helsinki Final Act in the USSR," its members sought to monitor the Soviet Government's implementation of the historic Helsinki Accords.

At the initiative of Professor Yuri Orlov, a physicist by profession and a veteran human rights activist, the group joined together 11 committed individuals to collect and publicize information on Soviet violations of the human rights provisions enshrined in the Helsinki Accords. The group monitored fundamental rights and freedoms, including freedom of movement and freedom of religion, as well as the basic rights of minorities.

The group documented evidence of systemic human rights abuses and provided reports of Helsinki violations to the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet and the embassies of Helsinki signatory countries in Moscow. Additionally, these reports were widely distributed to Western correspondents. All together, the Moscow Helsinki Group published 195 numbered reports, along with numerous other documents, some of them in cooperative initiatives with other human rights organizations. These reports played a critical role in documenting the Soviet Union's failure to adhere to many of its Helsinki commitments.

The example set by the Moscow Helsinki Group inspired human rights activists elsewhere in the USSR. Helsinki monitoring groups were founded in Ukraine, Lithuania, Georgia, and Armenia, and affiliated groups were also established to combat psychiatric abuse for political purposes and to defend religious liberty in Lithuania. As time went on, more brave individuals joined the Moscow Helsinki Group in its pursuit of truth and accountability.

However, regrettably, the Soviet Government had no intention of tolerating the "assistance" provided by the Moscow Helsinki Group in monitoring the Soviet Union's adherence to Helsinki commitments. The state-controlled Soviet press launched a campaign of slander against the group. By early 1977, the group's founders, Dr. Yuri Orlov and Alexander Ginzburg, a longtime activist who had earlier produced the celebrated "White Book" on the trial of writers Andrei Sinyavsky and Yuli Daniel, had been arrested on political charges. Cyberneticist Anatoly "Natan" Sharansky and retired geologist Malva Landa were arrested shortly thereafter. Orlov was sentenced to 7 years in a labor camp and 5 years in internal exile. Ginzburg received 8 years labor camp and 3 years internal exile. Sharansky was sentenced to a total of 13 years in labor camp and prison, and Landa received 2 years internal exile.

Other members followed this path into the "Gulag" or were forced to emigrate. By 1981, KGB pressure had left only three members of the Moscow Helsinki Group at liberty in the Soviet Union, and they were forced to announce the "suspension" of their work. In 1984, one of those three, Dr. Elena Bonner, joined her husband, Dr. Sakharov, in forced internal exile in the closed city of Gorky.

Tragically, in December 1986, just as the Soviet political system was showing the signs of the exhaustion that would eventually lead to its collapse, Moscow Helsinki Group member Anatoly Marchenko died during a hunger strike at Chistopol Prison. Just over 2 months later, hundreds of known political and religious prisoners were freed from the Soviet prison system.

With the advent of Glasnost, the Moscow Helsinki Group was formally reestablished in July 1989 by a handful of Helsinki veterans, and several new members joined their cause. Today, the Moscow Helsinki Group continues to work to defend human rights in post-Soviet Russia. And while there have been dramatic changes in Russia since the collapse of the Soviet Union, the lure of authoritarianism still has a strong appeal for some in today's Russia.

Mr. President, on the occasion of its 30th anniversary, I congratulate the members and former members of the Moscow Helsinki Group, many of whom, sadly, are no longer with us, for their courage and fortitude in the struggle against tyranny. I wish the group continued success as they work to advance democracy, defend human rights, and promote a vigorous civil society.

TRIBUTE TO JOHN BRAMLEY

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, at the end of this month, John Bramley will step down as provost of the University of Vermont. From a day-to-day standpoint, the provost of a university is more important than the president of a university. The provost is the chief of operations who embraces the president's vision and implements ideas into reality. By ensuring that academics, research, and student life are running smoothly, the provost creates an environment that enriches the lives of students, faculty, administrators, and the community.

As provost of the University of Vermont since 2002, John Bramley has not only excelled as provost, but also set a standard that will serve as a benchmark to measure other provosts around the country.

I have known John since he came to the University of Vermont from England in the early 1990s. I believe that John excelled as provost because of his leadership in earlier positions that he held at the university. John is first and foremost an animal science scholar who is known internationally for his groundbreaking research on bovine mastitis. He is also an excellent teacher who genuinely enjoys the interaction between and challenges from students—both undergraduate and graduate. That became evident when he was recognized with the Joseph Carrigan Teaching Award in 1998.

John easily made the transition to administrator. He directed the university's farm programs, cochaired the agricultural extension programs, chaired the Department of Animal Sciences and, perhaps most notably, was chair of the Faculty Senate—a position held by election among his faculty peers.

I jokingly think that his early demonstration of these administrative skills likely led to his demise as being tapped interim provost and then eventually as provost in 2002. And we are so grateful that John was at his position, as this turned out to be a critical time in the history of the University of Vermont.

It is no secret that during the 1990s UVM suffered from several years of unstable and rocky leadership. Not surprisingly, such a rapid turnover at the helm of a major university led to many problems including budget shortfalls; low morale among faculty, staff and students; and, less than stellar relations with the local Burlington and statewide communities. The work of both interim president Ed Colodny and John guided the university to calmer waters during that difficult time, and helped to build a strong and valuable foundation for the incoming president.

Under President Fogel's administration, the university has been reinvigorated and its prestige restored. I am sure that President Fogel would agree when I say to all my colleagues that we owe much to John Bramley for bringing the university into this new, promising chapter in its history.

John is stepping down as provost, but I am glad that I do not have to end this speech with a farewell. John will be returning to what I think he enjoys most, his teaching and research. I know he will continue to be an important part of the University of Vermont community and I look forward to continuing to see him on campus.

IN RECOGNITION OF REPRESENTATIVE TINA FALLON

Mr. CARPER. Mr. President. I rise today to recognize Representative Evelyn K. "Tina" Fallon upon her retirement from Delaware's House of Representatives after more than 28 years of dedicated public service. Known to friends and colleagues alike as "Tina," she is a woman with a kind heart, diverse interests and great abilities. Tina embodies the best of Delaware.

Born in Dudley, NC, on September 16, 1917, Tina has experienced firsthand the many changes that Delaware has undergone over the years and this level of experience will be difficult, if not impossible, to replace.

A longtime resident of Seaford, DE, Tina holds a bachelor of arts degree from Meredith College, located in Raleigh, NC, and a master's degree in education from the University of Delaware. She married her husband, James D. Fallon, Jr., in 1938, and they had four children together. After James' passing in 1982, Tina continued to raise their sons, George, James, William and Howard.

Before winning her first campaign when she was 61 years old, an age when many public servants are ready to retire, Tina worked for more than 25 years as an educator teaching math and science at Seaford High School. This experience has allowed her to speak with authority about Delaware's education system and the many issues that affect Delaware's young people.

Often recognized as the oldest member of the State legislature, Tina brought a wealth of knowledge to Delaware's House of Representatives along with energy and enthusiasm that belied her age. Her life experience gave her an understanding of faith and family values that transcended party slogans and struck an authentic chord in her constituents and everyone who had the pleasure of calling her their friend.

Representative Fallon quickly became known as one of Delaware's most approachable and hardestworking public officials. Her keen intellect and commonsense approach to problem-solving helped her serve her constituents and make Delaware a better place for us all.

Tina also served as a mentor for incoming members of Delaware's House of Representatives. Her positive attitude and boundless energy set a high standard for her colleagues to follow. A firm believer in acknowledging the hard work and accomplishments of her constituents, Tina was often seen visiting homes and businesses throughout the 39 district while delivering House tributes to those who deserved them.

During my time as Governor, I had the honor of naming Representative Fallon as the "Travel and Tourism Person of the Year" in 1998 for her outstanding work to promote and develop Delaware's tourism industry. Delaware's economic health and many small businesses are better off because of her efforts to promote the first State's historical and natural attractions. Also in 1998, she was honored by the National Republican Legislators Association as a "1998 Legislator of the Year." She was one of only 10 people across the Nation to receive this honor.

As a member of the influential Joint Finance Committee, Representative Fallon helped shape Delaware's multi-billion dollar annual operating budget. Her ability to work with members of both parties made her an invaluable participant in figuring out how best to fund the current and future needs of Delaware. Tina also chairs the House Tourism Committee and is a member of five other committees as well.

Following her retirement, Tina plans to spend time with her children and grandchildren. After such a distinguished career serving the people of Delaware, I am certain that many will agree with me when I say that her retirement is well deserved. I thank Tina for her friendship, applaud her service, and wish her and her family only the very best in all that lies ahead for them.

TEN-YEAR ANNIVERSARY OF THE BUFFALO, WV TOYOTA PLANT

• Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize a milestone in my home State of West Virginia. Ten years ago, in 1996, a world-renowned automobile company, the Toyota Motor Corp., began producing engines and transmissions in my home State, marking the first major automobile manufacturing plant in West Virginia. In the following 10 years, Toyota Motor Manufacturing of West Virginia, TMMWV, has never stopped expanding. It now employs more than 1,100 people and has invested more than $1 billion in our State.

But the story actually begins almost 10 years earlier with a series of meetings I had with Dr. Shoichiro Toyoda, the son of Toyota's founder and its visionary leader for much of the 1980s and 1990s. I met Dr. Toyoda's father, the company founder, during my time in Japan in the 1960s. He soon introduced me to his son, Shoichiro, who would go on to steer Toyota into the 21st century, beginning production of the Lexus line and the Prius hybrid, as well as turning Toyota into a truly global force in the automobile industry. So in the mid-1980s, very early in my Senate career, I began the long, slow process of trying to woo this great company and great family to invest in West Virginia as a key part of their bold plan for investment in the United States and in North America.

I recall walking through cornfields in Putnam County with the Toyota site selection committee—facing the hurdles of excavation, preparation of the site, the narrow valley in Buffalo, highway infrastructure, and the construction of a bridge to reach the site. By the time Toyota decided to make Buffalo its new home, I felt like a full-fledged member of that site selection team. The cornfield of those days is now a state-of-the-art manufacturing facility, with a spotless parking lot outside for the hundreds of West Virginia workers proud to arrive for work there every day.

Many in the company and outside thought this move was a mistake for Toyota. They thought that transportation of materials and people to and from Buffalo would be too difficult. They thought that West Virginians could not do the work.

But Dr. Toyoda saw what others did not—a strong, smart, and friendly workforce and a great place to do business. Although it took many years and a number of meetings with my friend Dr. Toyoda—meetings I now look back upon fondly—Toyota finally decided to place a production facility in West Virginia, and we held our first of many groundbreaking celebrations here in 1996.

Now, Toyota's plant in Buffalo, WV, has gained national and international renown. It is the single most productive engine and transmission facility in all of North America for 3 years running, according to the Harbour Report, which is the auto industry authority on manufacturing efficiency and productivity. Toyota has implemented more recommendations from its Buffalo workforce than from most of its other facilities. In fact, other much larger cities around the country are envious of our tremendous success. In The Buffalo News recently, we learned that Buffalo, NY, is looking longingly at Buffalo, WV, and its enormous success in the automotive industry.

Toyota is now the second largest automobile producer in the world and has expanded six times in West Virginia alone. Our plant has also spawned a number of automotive suppliers around the State. Toyota has been the anchor to what is now a well-developed supply chain for auto parts, serving not only Toyota but also other car manufacturers in the United States. All of this growth has taken West Virginia, in just 10 short years, to its position today as a major center of American automotive manufacturing.

The credit for these great accomplishments goes, first and foremost, to the men and women of West Virginia, some of whom drive hours a day to work at this plant. But Toyota's management in the United States and in Japan has given these workers the tools they need to succeed and excel. I extend my gratitude for this coordination and my congratulations for 10 years of hard work and great accomplishments.

Again, Mr. President, I commend the workers and Toyota for 10 years of operations in West Virginia. This company, which is a worldwide model for any kind of manufacturing, took a risk on West Virginia. But their investment has paid enormous dividends, just as I promised my friend Dr. Toyoda it would almost 20 years ago.●

LIBYA

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, Libya's decision to abandon its illegal weapons programs, and today's news that the verification process has been successfully completed, and the fact that Libya is cooperating in international counterterrorism efforts, are tremendously positive developments that make our world safer. Libya's experience demonstrates that countries have more to gain by acting responsibly and abiding by international norms than by seeking weapons of mass destruction. However, the establishment of diplomatic relations between our countries does not mean that Libya's progress on all fronts has been satisfactory. According to the State Department's 2005 human rights report, Libya's human rights record remained poor last year, with Libyan citizens unable to change their government and subject to severe restrictions of their civil liberties. As we begin developing a new relationship with Libya, we must continue to press Libya to improve its human rights record and governance problems, and to address the cases pending in U.S. courts with regard to its terrorist activities of the 1980s.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

CONGRATULATING BUDRO KENNETH BAISDEN

● Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, today, I want to congratulate Budro Kenneth Baisden and other young, aspiring poets for their poetry as part of the Poetry of Rural Places writing competition. Budro Baisden comes from southern West Virginia and he has lived in our coal fields, surrounded by coal miners and the culture of the coal fields. He participates in the Coal-field Writers, Marshall University Writing Project. This month, as the West Virginia winner, he got to travel to Washington, DC, for the first time, to accept his award, and to read his poem in the Library of Congress. In his poem, Baisden eloquently expresses the arduous life of a coal miner, the adversity that oppresses rural Americans, and the acceptance of a life destined to be spent underground in the mines. Given the mine tragedies that hit West Virginia and other States earlier this year, the spirit and the simplicity of his words implores us to acknowledge the parallel experiences of rural Americans nationwide. The words of this young West Virginia poet should inspire us to think about life through the eyes of a coal miner. It is with great pride that I submit this poem for the RECORD to share with my colleague and the public.

Mr. President, I ask that the poem be printed in the RECORD.

LIFE THROUGH A COAL MINER'S EYES

Dark at day
Dark at night
It never changes
That's the mines
Cold and wet this they know
Still they put on their hardhats
And go
No one knows why they seek that hole
Deep in the mountains
With all that coal
To risk their lives for a single light pole
That shines through a window of a Coal miner's home
But there is only one thing that shines so bright
Not the light you pass every night
It's the smile of their wives
When they come home at night
That's life through a coal miner's eyes.

—Budro Baisden.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Baisden is one of several students visiting Washington for the Poetry of Rural Places program, representing the National Writing Project, NWP, and the Rural School and Community Trust initiatives. Working together in a unique partnership, the NWP and the Rural School and Community Trust have provided students from rural areas nationwide an opportunity to compose and publish original poems that convey their sense of place and vision of life in rural America. Beginning with local programs led by writing project sites, the contest culminates in a national reading event at the Library of Congress. Hopefully, this contest will inspire students nationwide to use the power of poetry to explore their lives, communities, and futures as rural Americans.

I encourage all of my colleagues to read the other poems written by these young people as they offer a profound vision of life in contemporary rural America. Their poems are available at www.ruralpoetry.org.●

DES MOINES POLICE OFFICERS HONORED FOR VALOR

● Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I have come to the floor today to salute the achievement of four Des Moines police officers who received richly earned recognition from the National Association of Police Organizations last week at the TOP COPS Awards here in Washington.

Every year for the past 13 years, the National Association of Police Organizations has presented awards to outstanding law enforcement officers across the country for their actions above and beyond the call of duty. This year, Captain Kelly Willis, Sergeant Jeff Edwards, and Officers Chris Hardy and Robert Clark, all of the Des Moines Police Department, were recognized for their professionalism and valor in saving the life of a teenage robbery suspect.

Last winter, when officers attempted to stop a stolen vehicle being driven, the suspect, a teenager from Nebraska, abandoned the vehicle and attempted to swim across the icy waters of the Des Moines River. Sergeant Edwards and Officer Hardy realized the teen was in trouble when the suspect grew tired and his head went under water. They understood the risks of entering the frigid river; nonetheless, they jumped in after the teen and attempted to pull him ashore. Captain Willis and Officer Clark also entered the river to assist with the rescue. After pulling the teenager to shore, Officer Clark performed CPR on the unconscious teen, who was taken to the hospital in critical condition but eventually recovered.

I congratulate these four public servants for their courageous actions last winter. Law enforcement officers are often required to make life-or-death decisions in a split second. This requires superb training and excellent judgment, which these four officers clearly possess in abundance. The people of Des Moines are very fortunate to be served by such outstanding professionals. I thank these four officers for their service, and I congratulate them on their well-deserved recognition by their peers at the TOP COP Awards program last week.●

TRUANCY COURT PROJECT

• Mr. THUNE. Mr. President, today I rise to recognize the students who participated in the Truancy Court Project for the Pennington County Juvenile Diversion Program.

The 17 students who successfully participated in the Truancy Court Project deserve the special recognition they are receiving today. After starting off the school year with a rocky beginning, each individual student took it upon themselves to volunteer for this project and to excel at it. Each of them has improved attendance, improved their relationships with their teachers, and most importantly learned the value of education.

It gives me great pleasure to rise with the citizens of Rapid City and Ellsworth in congratulating the Truancy Court Project students for their successful participation in the program.●

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. ENZI (for himself, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. ISAKSON, Mrs. MURRAY, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. BYRD, Mr. DEWINE, and Mr. SANTORUM):

S. 2803. A bill to amend the Federal Mine Safety and Health Act of 1977 to improve the safety of mines and mining; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, as the chairman of the Senate Committee on Health, Education, Labor and Pensions I am pleased to announce today the introduction of comprehensive legislation designed to make our Nation's mines and miners safer—the Mine Improvement and New Emergency Response Act of 2006, the MINER Act. I am particularly pleased to note that the MINER Act is the product of a truly bipartisan effort that includes Senator KENNEDY, the committee's ranking member, Senators ISAKSON and MURRAY, the chair and ranking member of the Subcommittee on Employment and Workplace Safety, and Senators ROCKEFELLER and BYRD. They have all worked tirelessly to make this bill a reality, and I am grateful for their leadership on this issue and their co-sponsorship of the MINER Act.

Mining, and coal mining in particular, is vital to our national and local economies, and to our national energy security. No aspect of mining is more important than protecting the health and safety of those whose hard work fuels the industry.

This year our Nation has experienced tragic losses in the coal mines of West Virginia. Following the accident at the Sago mine, Senators ISAKSON, KENNEDY, ROCKEFELLER, and I traveled to West Virginia to meet with the families of those miners whose lives were lost. We were all deeply moved by that experience, and committed to do our best to ensure that such tragedies will not be repeated. To further that commitment, we have sought the views of experts and stakeholders on a wide range of mine safety issues and have conducted hearings and roundtables on such issues as mine safety technology. In the MINER Act, we have done much to reach our common goal of safeguarding the lives of all those who work in our Nation's mines.

The legislation we introduce today addresses the issue of mine safety in a variety of ways. First, the MINER Act would require the development of mine-specific emergency response plans that incorporate safety and technology provisions designed to enhance miner safety. In the area of technology, in particular, the MINER Act recognizes that as safety technology evolves, so, too, must our approach. Thus, the plans that are initially developed must be periodically modified to reflect such changes.

Second, the MINER Act recognizes the critical role of mine rescue teams, and those who serve on them, in enhancing the safety of miners. The legislation directs the Secretary of Labor to issue regulations that will make new provisions for mine rescue teams, and it creates liability protection for those who serve on those teams and their employers.

Third, the MINER Act recognizes that in emergencies the ability to craft a prompt response is dependent upon prompt notification. Thus, the MINER Act provides that in the case of serious life-threatening accidents notification must be made to Federal Mine Safety officials within 15 minutes.

Fourth, the legislation recognizes that despite all efforts, accidents may occur in the future, and that in those instances MSHA should be prepared to provide assistance to and communicate with the families of those affected. Accordingly, the MINER Act requires MSHA to establish a policy to meet both of these objectives.

Fifth, the legislation recognizes the key role of technology in improving mine safety and the key role of the National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health in advancing such technological development. The MINER Act establishes an Office of Mine Safety within NIOSH, a NIOSH-administered grant and contract program designed to foster the development and manufacture of new mine safety equipment, and a NIOSH-chaired interagency working group designed to facilitate the transfer of technology that may be adaptable to mine usage from such other Federal sources as the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, NASA, the Department of Defense. The bill also contains provisions to streamline the testing of new technologies.

Sixth, the MINER Act recognizes there are some areas regarding technology and engineering and mining practice about which uncertainty remains. The MINER Act recognizes that such issues are better addressed with the informed assistance of experts. Thus, the MINER Act creates a technical study panel to review the belt air issue and directs further NIOSH study and testing regarding refuge chambers. It also requires the Secretary to utilize the regulatory process to issue final regulations regarding the strength of seals used in abandoned mining sections. These directives do not prejudice the issues or dictate any result or action. They do, however, provide an important means of developing a body of expert opinion with regard to these issues.

Seventh, throughout the development of this legislation my long-held view that the vast majority of mine operators take their safety responsibilities with great seriousness has been reinforced. The conscientious efforts of mine operators throughout the country have been the principal reason behind our continual improvement in mine safety over the years. We must recognize this essential fact even as we must also recognize that there are a handful of operators who do not fall in this camp. In the instance of these "bad actors," the MINER Act provides tools MSHA can use to more readily deal with those who fail to pay civil penalties. The MINER Act codifies a tenfold increase in the available criminal penalties, and it creates an increased maximum for flagrant violators in line with the administration's proposal and creates minimum penalties for the most serious types of infractions.

Lastly, the legislation recognizes that training and education play a critical role in the effort to make mines and miners safer. Therefore, the legislation contains scholarship provisions to address the anticipated shortages of trained miners and MSHA personnel as well as fostering the skills of those who will work on the next generation of mine safety technology. It also contains provisions for the establishment of a program to provide a full range of mine safety training grants.

These steps, when taken together, will help make our nation's mines a safer workplace today and in years to come.

• Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, it is my honor today to join with several of my distinguished colleagues to introduce S. 2803, the Mine Improvement and New Emergency Response, MINER Act of 2006. This is the first time Congress has taken a critical look at mine safety since the 1970s. It will be the first significant update of statutory mine safety standards in a generation. The advances in this legislation represent long overdue health and safety improvements for our Nation's miners. The MINER Act will affect every mine and every miner in the country. When fully implemented by the Mine Safety and Health Administration, MSHA, and coal operators, the MINER Act will make the men and women who work in our Nation's coal mines safer than they have ever been.

Like many Americans, I was transfixed by the coverage of the tragic events at the Sago Mine in Upshur County, WV, this past January. My heart went out to the families of the miners as they waited and prayed for—and were cruelly denied—a happy ending. Except for the brief elation when we learned of Randal McCloy's miraculous survival, we were all heartbroken by the devastating outcome. Because these were miners and families in my State of West Virginia and because for years I lived and worked in nearby Buckhannon, the tragedy at Sago hit very close to home for me. For current and retired miners and their families across the country, the deaths of the Sago miners were very much the deaths of brothers.

When two more miners went missing after a fire in the Alma No. 1 mine near Melville, in Logan County, WV, I knew my place was there with the families. There was little that could be done to ease the anxiety of the miners' families while they waited and prayed together in the church in Melville, having themselves lived through the Sago tragedy. That day, I was standing with Governor Manchin at the mine mouth and we got the news that no one wanted to hear. We returned to the church to be with the families when they heard the words that crushed their hopes for another miracle. No parent or spouse should have to live through a moment like that ever again. It was clear that better mine safety regulation was essential.

One positive consequence of the broad news coverage of the Sago and Alma tragedies was that the world got a glimpse of West Virginia at its best: people who work hard, love their families, and trust in their God. My trip to Upshur County to meet with the families—and then the immensely sad and too-familiar repeat 2 weeks later to sit and to grieve with families of the Alma miners in Logan County—inspired what I hope will be a more lasting and tangible result. It became my mission to substantially improve and make more rigorous health and safety standards in American coal mines. I believe the MINER Act is legislation that will fulfill those goals and is the very least we can do as we recall the Sago and Alma miners, as well as those who lost their lives at the Longbranch No. 18, Black Castle, Candice No. 2, and Jacob

No. 1 mines in West Virginia and at other mines in Kentucky, Utah, Alabama, and Maryland just this year.

The MINER Act amends the Federal Mine Safety and Health Act of 1977 to do the following:

- Requires companies to submit to MSHA emergency preparedness and response plans, including requirements to deploy state-of-the-art technologies for two-way communications, miner tracking, improved breathing apparatuses, and lifelines. These improvements must be made immediately wherever feasible and no later than 3 years after enactment. Each miner must have enough breathable air accessible to last for a sustained period of time.

- Requires coal operators to supply miners with additional supplies of breathable air, both in working sections of coal mines and at intervals on escapeways so miners can walk out in the event of a disaster.

- Increases training on self-rescuers to make sure that technologies are properly deployed in the mine as soon as they become available.

- Requires operators to notify MSHA within 15 minutes of a disaster or face up to $60,000 in penalties.

- Improves the overall safety of miners by strengthening mine rescue team requirements for all underground mines. Now at least one miner per shift will have to be sufficiently familiar with the mine's operations to serve as a coordinator in the event of an accident, more miners will be rescue-trained, and response time will be cut in half—down to 1 hour.

- Requires NIOSH to conduct research, including field testing, of refuge chambers and could result in the Secretary issuing a new regulation to require them.

- Creates an Office of Mine Safety in NIOSH to distribute mine safety research and development grants and to coordinate with other Government agencies on technology they use that might be adapted for mine safety purposes.

- Establishes a family liaison position for post-accident assistance to miners' families.

- Creates for the first time a schedule of higher minimum penalties for the most egregious health and safety violations—essentially doubling fines for serious violations.

- Tightens up MSHA fine collection procedures and gives MSHA new authority to shut down mines for failure to pay persistent violations.

- Requires the Secretary of Labor to improve standards for seals in abandoned areas of underground coal mines.

- Establishes a technical study panel made up of scientists and health and safety experts to review and report to the Secretaries of Labor and Health and Human Services on the use of "belt air" and the replacement of worn belts with fire-resistant materials.

- Creates three scholarship programs: for community college study in basic safety and mine skills for new miners; for college-level study leading toward employment with MSHA; and college and graduate study in mining-related disciplines.

- Creates the Brookwood-Sago Mine Safety Grants Program in the Department of Labor to fund education and training programs designed to identify, avoid, and prevent unsafe working conditions in and around mines.

While television allowed the entire globe to look in on the 24-hour-a-day vigils at Sago and then Alma, I received a number of calls of support and condolences from around the country and around the world. Among the first were calls from Senate Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions, HELP, Committee chairman MIKE ENZI and his ranking Democrat member, TED KENNEDY. Chairman ENZI comes from a coal community in Wyoming and understands the bond between miners and their families. He also understands the hazards of mining coal, and he has been determined from the beginning to put out a good bill that can pass this Congress. I have known and admired MIKE ENZI since he was the mayor of Gillette, WY, and I, while Governor of West Virginia, was serving as chairman of President Carter's Coal Commission. He is a fine and honest man, and it has been a pleasure to work with him on this vitally important legislation.

As for Senator KENNEDY, with the exception of his home State of Massachusetts, there can be few places where his long career in the Senate has had more positive impacts than in my State of West Virginia. Both Senator KENNEDY and Senator ENZI expressed to me their heartfelt sorrow and their unshakable commitment to work with me on mine safety legislation in this Congress.

That commitment had its first demonstration when Chairman ENZI, Senator KENNEDY, and HELP Employment and Workplace Safety Subcommittee chairman JOHNNY ISAKSON joined me on a trip to Upshur County so they could sit with the families of the Sago miners, as well as with survivors of the accident and company officials. Few meetings that I have attended in my public career were as powerful as the more than 2 hours we spent with the Sago families. But the commitment has been proven beyond all doubt as Chairman ENZI and Senators KENNEDY, ISAKSON, MURRAY, and BYRD have worked with me to negotiate the MINER Act over the course of the last several months.

We have had some differences of opinion and worked through issues in which we were all trying to accomplish the same goal but from occasionally different angles. The good will and conscientiousness that Chairman ENZI and Senator ISAKSON have shown in this process give me hope for greater bipartisan cooperation in the future. I am extremely grateful to them for their willingness to work through our honest differences.

While I believe the MINER Act will result in greatly improved safety in our mines, it is not the last word in health and safety protections for the men and women who work underground. More aggressive measures on mine safety may be needed. Chairman ENZI has produced a very good bill, but I would have included more definitive language to push the introduction of emergency refuge chambers in mines, and I would have prevented the use of belt air anywhere its use presents an unreasonable hazard to miners. In any event, miners should not have to wait much longer for Congress to act. Legislating can be a slow process, but in times of crisis—and I believe we are in a time of crisis in our mines—Congress must act.

As we work to move this legislation through Congress, we must commit with equal dedication to ongoing oversight. I believe I have that commitment from the chairman of the HELP Committee. But we need to ask more of the administration also: in resources—real dollars; in a renewed dedication to an inspector workforce weakened by retirements and attrition; and in more vigilance on the part of mine inspectors, who must be willing to spend the time in those mines where safety concerns go unabated today. On the front lines, I believe our coal companies understand that safe mines are productive mines, and our miners come to work each day ready and willing to do their jobs in the safest way possible.

I commit to work with my cosponsors and all in Congress and the administration who care about miners to get this bill enacted this year and to continue to improve mine safety even after the MINER Act passes.●

By Mrs. FEINSTEIN:

S. 2813. A bill for the relief of Claudia Marquez Rico; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I am offering today private relief legislation to provide lawful permanent residence status to Claudia Marquez Rico, a Mexican national living in Redwood City, CA.

Born in Jalisco, Mexico, Claudia was brought to the United States by her parents 16 years ago. Claudia was just 6 years old at the time. She has two younger brothers, Jose and Omar, who came to America with her, and a sister, Maribel, who was born in California and is a U.S. Citizen. America is the only home they know.

Six years ago that home was visited by tragedy. As Mr. and Mrs. Marquez were driving to work early on the morning of October 4, 2000, they were both killed in a horrible traffic accident when their car collided with a truck on an isolated rural road.

The children went to live with their aunt and uncle, Hortencia and Patricio Alcalá. The Alcalás are a generous and loving couple. They are U.S. citizens with two children of their own. They took the Marquez children in and did all they could to comfort them in their grief. They supervised their schooling, and made sure they received the counseling they needed, too. The family is active in their parish at Buen Pastor Catholic Church, and Patricio Alcalá serves as a youth soccer coach. In 2001, the Alcalás were appointed the legal guardians of the Marquez children.

Sadly, the Marquez family received bad legal representation. At the time of their parents' death, Claudia and Jose were minors, and qualified for special immigrant juvenile status. This category was enacted by Congress to protect children like them from the hardship that would result from deportation under such extraordinary circumstances, when a State court deems them to be dependents due to abuse, abandonment or neglect. Today, their younger brother Omar is on track to lawful permanent residence status as a special immigrant juvenile. Unfortunately, the family's previous lawyer failed to secure this relief for Claudia, and she has now reached the age of majority without having resolved her immigration status.

I should note that their former lawyer, Walter Pineda, is currently answering charges on 29 counts of professional incompetence and 5 counts of moral turpitude for mishandling immigration cases and appears on his way to being disbarred.

I am offering legislation on Claudia's behalf because I believe that, without it, this family would endure an immense and unfair hardship. Indeed, without this legislation, this family will not remain a family for much longer.

Despite the adversity they encountered, Claudia and José finished school and now work together in a pet grooming store in Redwood City, where Claudia is the store manager. They support themselves, and they are dedicated to their community and devoted to their family. In fact, last year Claudia became the legal guardian of her 14-year-old sister Maribel, who lives with her and José at their home in Redwood City. Omar, now 17 years old, continues to live with the Alcalas so as not to interrupt his studies at Aragon High School in San Mateo. Again, Maribel is a U.S. citizen, and Omar is eligible for a green card.

Claudia has no close relatives in Mexico. She has never visited Mexico, and she was so young when she was brought to America that she has no memories of it. How can we expect her to start a new life there now?

It would be a grave injustice to add to this family's misfortune by tearing these siblings apart. This is a close family, and they have come to rely on each other heavily in the absence of their deceased parents. This bill will prevent the added tragedy of another wrenching separation.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD along with a letter from Claudia and José Marquez Rico.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2813

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, SECTION 1. PERMANENT RESIDENT STATUS FOR CLAUDIA MARQUEZ RICO.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding subsections (a) and (b) of section 201 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1151), Claudia Marquez Rico shall be eligible for issuance of an immigrant visa or for adjustment of status to that of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence upon filing an application for issuance of an immigrant visa under section 204 of such Act or for adjustment of status to lawful permanent resident.

(b) ADJUSTMENT OF STATUS.—If Claudia Marquez Rico enters the United States before the filing deadline specified in subsection (c), she shall be considered to have entered and remained lawfully and, if otherwise eligible, shall be eligible for adjustment of status under section 245 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1255) as of the date of the enactment of this Act.

(c) DEADLINE FOR APPLICATION AND PAYMENT OF FEES.—Subsections (a) and (b) shall apply only if the application for issuance of an immigrant visa or the application for adjustment of status is filed with appropriate fees not later than 2 years after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(d) REDUCTION OF IMMIGRANT VISA NUMBER.—Upon the granting of an immigrant visa or permanent residence to Claudia Marquez Rico, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper officer to reduce by 1, during the current or next following fiscal year, the total number of immigrant visas that are made available to natives of the country of the alien's birth under section 203(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1153(a)) or, if applicable, the total number of immigrant visas that are made available to natives of the country of the alien's birth under section 202(e) of such Act.

(e) DENIAL OF PREFERENTIAL IMMIGRATION TREATMENT FOR CERTAIN RELATIVES.—The natural parents, brothers, and sisters of Claudia Marquez Rico shall not, by virtue of such relationship, be accorded any right, privilege, or status under the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.).

JANUARY 3, 2005.

Senator DIANNE FEINSTEIN,
U.S. Congress,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR FEINSTEIN: We are writing to request your assistance in introducing a private bill in the United States Senate on our behalf. We are currently in deportation proceedings before the Immigration Court in San Francisco, California. We are twenty-one and eighteen years old respectively. We have two other siblings, Omar, sixteen, and Maribel, twelve.

Our parents entered the United States without documents in 1990. We were very young at the time and don't remember entering the United States or ever living in Mexico. Our life in the United States is the only thing we have ever known, it is where our family, friends, and community are and have always been.

In October 2000 our parents were both killed in a terrible car accident. We were so sad to suddenly not have our parents and scared about what our future would bring. After the accident we went to live with our aunt and uncle, Hortencia and Patricio Alcala, in San Mateo, California and they became our legal guardians. It was difficult to adjust to life without our parents. We lived in a new home, in a new environment, and attended different schools with new people. Everything in our lives had changed.

Before their deaths, our parents had a case before the Immigration Court in San Francisco, California and we were included in that case. Our youngest sister Maribel was born here in the United States and so she is a citizen and not part of the case. We know that despite the deaths of our parents that case continues and that we may be deported to Mexico. We have a lawyer who is trying to help us with our case, Angela Bean. She said she will be able to help our brother Omar in his case because he is still a minor but that there are few options for us to remain in the United States legally. We are trying to find a solution for our case but are scared we may be deported before we are able to do so.

Our parents came to this country because they wanted a better future for us and all we want is the chance to have the kind of opportunities they sought for us. Jose Elvis wants to study mechanics and then open his own shop and Claudia wants to go to college. All of our dreams would be lost if we had to return to Mexico. We have no family there and no way of supporting ourselves. Even though we were born there, we came to the United States at such a young age it's as if we have never been there before.

We not only worry about our future, but about our sister Maribel if we were forced to go back to Mexico. She is the youngest and we want to be here for her as she grows up and to protect her and teach her things. All we have is each other now and we don't want to be separated from the family we have left.

We ask for your help so that we can remain in the United States and so we can continue to grow and be surrounded by the people and places we know and love. Our lives have been very difficult since the deaths of our parents and we hope that we can remain in this country where we have the opportunities our parents wanted for us and the family support that we need.

Sincerely,

CLAUDIA MARQUEZ-RICO.
JOSE ELVIS MARQUEZ-RICO.

By Mr. DODD:

S. 2815. A bill to establish the Commission on Economic Indicators to conduct a study and submit a report containing recommendations concerning the appropriateness and accuracy of the methodology, calculations, and reporting used by the Government relating to certain economic indicators; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I introduce legislation today to improve the way we measure the condition of America's economy. My bill, the Economic Indicators Commission Act of 2006, would establish a nonpartisan commission of experts to make recommendations concerning the appropriateness and accuracy of the methodology, calculations, and reporting of the government's economic statistics. I am joined in this effort by Representative EMANUEL in the other body.

The statistics that describe our economy provide essential information and guidance for private market actors and public policymakers. Statistics like Gross Domestic Product, GDP, the inflation rate, and the unemployment rate help investors decide how to allocate their money, help entrepreneurs decide whether to start a new business, and help job-seekers decide where to look for new opportunities. Policymakers ranging from central bankers to elected officials rely on the same statistics to make informed decisions about monetary and fiscal policy and public sector investments.

Yet while we rely on these indicators, we know that they paint an imperfect picture. The Bureau of Labor Statistics, BLS, for example, reports two separate measures of employment, which, as many of us may remember, created some controversy in 2003 and 2004 when they provided conflicting assessments of our economy's health. The BLS's two series never match up perfectly, but at one point, one measure showed a loss of 1 million jobs since the recession's official end in November 2001, while the other reported an increase of 1.4 million. The 2004 Economic Report of the President called such a large and sustained divergence "unprecedented."

Ben Bernanke, now Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board of Governors, described well the challenge of relying on imperfect indicators in a 2004 speech to the National Economists Club in Washington, DC. In the speech, Dr. Bernanke made light of a common analogy used to describe American monetary policy, which compares the Federal Reserve's Federal Open Market Committee to the driver of a car—the U.S. economy—who must decide whether to tap the accelerator or the brake in order to maintain proper speed. Dr. Bernanke offered a slightly modified comparison: “[I]f making monetary policy is like driving a car,” he said, “then the car is one that has an unreliable speedometer, a foggy windshield, and a tendency to respond unpredictably and with delay to the accelerator or the brake.”

While our economic statistics will likely never provide perfect, real-time gauges of our economy's performance, that does not mean we should cease seeking to improve them. Chairman Bernanke's predecessor at the Federal Reserve, Alan Greenspan, was known for his search for insight not only by reading economic data, but also by knowing its limitations and pushing for better ways to measure what was happening in the national and global economies. As Chairman Greenspan recognized in a speech to the American Economic Association on January 3, 2004, “the economic world in which we function is best described by a structure whose parameters are continuously changing.”

Chairman Greenspan makes an important point. As our economy evolves, so too should our methods for measuring it. In a recent Business Week cover story, reporter Michael Mandel outlines one example of how modern features of the 21st century economy may be challenging the accuracy of traditional economic indicators. America's economy, Mandel argues, has become increasingly “knowledge-based,” driven by intangible investments in addition to the production of tangible goods. Intangibles, however, are notoriously difficult to measure, so as a result, our traditional indicators may be leaving out a growing portion of the economic picture. If intangibles truly are growing in importance, our statistics must better account for them in order to provide a full and accurate measure of economic activity.

Intangibles aren't the only economic factor that our current indicators may not capture accurately. Researchers in academic and public policy institutions have also questioned the way we measure poverty in America. They suggest that the government's use of “reported household income” as the primary measurement tool does not properly account for regional differences in the cost of living or noncash items such as food stamps. As a result, we may be systematically undercounting the number of Americans living in poverty, especially those living in high-cost areas. Mr. President, if we as a Nation are going to effectively fight the scourge of poverty, we must know where to aim and have the ability to measure our progress.

Properly accounting for intangibles and developing more realistic standards of poverty represent only two of the many challenges we face in improving the way we measure our economy. Public servants at each of our government statistical agencies, along with independent researchers, are working continuously and diligently to better the techniques for collecting and reporting information. But the challenge is to bring these efforts together in a larger, coordinated context, with the mission to fundamentally re-examine the way we measure economic activity and our progress as a society.

The legislation I introduce today, the Economic Indicators Commission Act of 2006, will achieve this goal. It establishes a nonpartisan panel of eight experts appointed by Senate and House leadership, in consultation with the chairman and ranking members of the Banking and Finance Committees in the Senate, the Financial Services and Ways and Means Committees in the House, and the Joint Economic Committee. The bill directs the Commission to consult with both users and reporters of data, such as the Federal Reserve and Council of Economic Advisers and the Commerce and Labor Departments, and report its findings and recommendations to the Congress within 12 months.

In order to formulate effective policy and improve market efficiency, we need a full and accurate picture of the economy. Our economic data has the power to literally move markets; it influences billions of dollars worth of investment and public policy decisions. The legislation I introduce today will help Americans make more informed decisions by improving these statistics. Going back to Chairman Bernanke's joke about the analogy of the economy as a difficult-to-drive car, this bill will help drivers de-fog the windshield and upgrade the speedometer, for the benefit of all.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. HARKIN (for himself, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. DORGAN, and Mr. BIDEN):

S. 2816. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide an income tax credit for the manufacture of flexible fuel motor vehicles and to extend and increase the income tax credit for alternative fuel refueling property, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HARKIN. Today, I am introducing, along with Senators LUGAR, JOHNSON, DORGAN and BIDEN, tax legislation that is designed to complement the Biofuels Security Act of 2006, also being introduced today. I will walk through these provisions very briefly.

The legislation amends the existing tax credit for installing alternative fueling infrastructure, such as E85 fueling pumps and tanks which was enacted as part of last year's energy bill. That existing provision allows a tax credit of 30 percent of the cost of installation, with a maximum credit of $30,000. Our bill modifies this credit in three ways. First, we would eliminate availability of the credit for the large oil companies that would be required to install such E85 pumps under the companion Biofuels Security Act. These companies have the financial wherewithal to install these pumps without the need for a tax credit. Second, for retailers who would not be required to install E85 pumps and tanks under our proposed legislation, our bill would enhance the tax credit to 50 percent of the cost of installation, with a maximum credit of $30,000. Third, for small retailers, that is, those with 5 or fewer stations, our bill would increase the credit to 75 percent of the cost of installation, up to a maximum credit of $45,000.

This tax legislation would also create a new consumer tax credit for the purchase of flexfuel vehicles if the vehicles have no fuel efficiency loss from the use of E85 as compared to regular gasoline. Current flex-fuel models do have some mileage loss. We understand that there is technology available—for example, a Saab “biofuel” flex-fuel E-85 vehicle on the market in parts of Europe—allowing vehicles to have no fuel efficiency loss when burning E85 in comparison to gasoline, and perhaps even some mileage gain. The tax incentive we propose here will help foster further development of biofuels-related technology and promote better fuel efficiency as well.

I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, today I join Senators HARKIN, LUGAR, and DORGAN in introducing a broad package of initiatives to jump-start the distribution of renewable fuels, empower consumers, and achieve our long-standing goal of displacing foreign sources of energy.

The Biofuels Security Act of 2006 stakes out three broad approaches toward increasing production of renewable fuels and connecting the infrastructure required to deliver biofuels to a new fleet of flexible fuel vehicles. In combination these policies can extend home-grown renewable fuels to a predominate place in America's energy mix.

The Biofuels Security Act of 2006 moves forward to aggressively increase the amount of renewable fuels used in the marketplace to a requirement of 60 billion gallons in 2030. Our approach is phased through a realistic and technically feasible glide path beginning with a 10 billion gallon requirement in 2010, escalating to 30 billion gallons in 2020 and doubling that standard in the final decade. Existing ethanol capacity is anticipated to grow by approximately 30 percent in 2006, from 4.4 billion gallons to 6.3 billion gallons by the end of 2006. Domestic ethanol production is meeting demand and ethanol from corn has the capability of producing upwards of another 10 to 15 billion gallons in the next decade. As ethanol production from corn matures, new feedstocks, such as switch grass will complement corn as a driver toward ethanol production. Setting benchmarks and creating long-term market stability through a demand-driven standard will ensure a competitive biofuel market and help drive down the cost of gasoline and other refined products that pinch consumer budgets.

Tying together future demand are 2 sets of standards and incentives that will transform the availability of higher blends of ethanol fuels. Our bipartisan approach requires auto manufacturers to produce vehicles that can run on higher blends of renewable fuels. Flexible fuel vehicles are capable of optimal performance with high ethanol blended fuels, such as E85—a blend of 85 percent ethanol and 15 percent gasoline. Auto manufacturers are gradually moving toward production methods that can inexpensively modify trucks and cars to perform at the highest standards on E85 fuel. The Nation lacks, however, a long-term policy that sets benchmarks and targets to manufacture dual-fueled vehicles. Today, there are approximately 6 million dual-fueled vehicles in the United States, a small fraction of the 230 million gasoline and diesel-fueled vehicles filling our roads. Through introducing this bill we are committing to the public that a decade after enactment of the Biofuels Security Act all vehicles sold in the United States will be dual-fueled vehicles providing maximum performance on all fuel blends.

The second basket of requirements and incentives is targeted toward ensuring that as Americans purchase dual-fueled vehicles that the fueling infrastructure is in place to meet the demand. Retail gasoline stations that market E85 and B20—diesel fuel mixed with biodiesel and petroleum diesel fuel—are few and far between. Fuel distributors and retail station owners who want to market E85 are often locked out through contractual agreements with big oil companies offering certain fuel blends. Accordingly, most gasoline marketers offering E85 are independent distributors and station owners that understand the competitive advantage from distributing alternative fuels. The Biofuels Security Act ties together dual-fueled vehicles with refueling infrastructure through an enhanced tax credit of 75 percent capped at $45,000 for the installation of refueling equipment for small business gas station owners. The credit is phased-back to 50 percent and capped at $30,000 for larger retail gasoline station owners. Our goal is that in a decade at least 40 percent of all retail gasoline stations include an alternative fuel pump.

The Biofuels Security Act of 2006 builds upon the strong consumer demand pushing our country toward portfolio of biofuels—ethanol, biodiesel—from diversified feedstocks grown and refined throughout the country. Combining a long-term renewable fuel requirement to infrastructure and vehicle preference can decrease our reliance on imported energy sources and lower consumer energy costs. All 3 of these pieces need to move in concert in order to maximize the transition from a hydrocarbon-based society to a more balanced and sustainable model.

By Mr. HARKIN (for himself, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. DORGAN, and Mr. BIDEN):

S. 2817. A bill to promote renewable fuel and energy security of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, high prices for gasoline, diesel fuel and other petroleum-based energy continue to cause pain for millions of people, in Iowa and all across the country. Our dependence on foreign oil is a clear and present danger to our national security.

If we are serious about national security, we need a bold national commitment to renewable energy—a commitment on par with the Apollo moon-shot program in the 1960s. Today, I am pleased to be joined by my colleague from Indiana, Senator LUGAR in proposing a major component of such a program—the Biofuels Security Act—a comprehensive plan to ramp-up ethanol and biodiesel production, and to make it available and usable at the pump in every State in America.

Perhaps Senator LUGAR said it best earlier this year when he commented that energy is the albatross around the neck of U.S. national security. The distinguished senior Senator from Indiana has been a thoughtful, prescient thinker about the national security implications of our addiction to foreign oil, and I am delighted to be joining with him, today.

Senators JOHNSON, DORGAN and BIDEN are also original cosponsors of this legislation, for which I am grateful. The Senators have been outspoken champions of biofuels for many years now, and strong advocates for their home States.

The goal of this legislation is to help restore America's energy security—which, in this day and age, is synonymous with national security. Transportation fuels, accounting for two-thirds of our oil imports, are the place to start this transition.

Our plan has three key components. First, we are proposing a substantially higher, but achievable, renewable fuels standard or RFS, requiring that our Nation blend into the gasoline supply 10 billion gallons of renewable fuel annually by the year 2010, 30 billion gallons of renewable fuel annually by the year 2020 and 60 billion gallons annually in the year 2030. The current RFS is 7.5 billion gallons of renewable fuels in 2012. At the time we enacted the present RFS in last year's energy bill, many of us believed this was a reasonably ambitious schedule. However, it is now evident that biofuels growth will outpace this figure within the next couple of years—well in advance of the 2012 target date. This is very good news.

Second, our plan would make E85—the blend of gasoline and 85 percent ethanol—available at gas stations all across America. Major oil companies would be required to increase the number of E85 pumps at their stations by 5 percentage points annually. Within a decade, approximately 25 percent of gas stations nationwide would be required to have E85 pumps.

The major oil companies have the financial wherewithal—and the ability—to provide E85 infrastructure at a growing percentage of gasoline stations over the next decade. This is a reasonable, responsible reinvestment of a fraction of their recent earnings in the many billions of dollars. The bottom line is that our domestic oil companies have a shared responsibility to help enhance our energy security, and this is one excellent way for them to contribute.

Third, our plan would make flex-fuel vehicles nearly universal in the United States. Automakers would be required to increase the production of flex-fuel vehicles—capable of using both gasoline and 85 percent ethanol blends—by 10 percentage points annually, until nearly all new vehicles sold in the U.S. are flex-fuel within a decade. Our legislation calls for all of the auto manufacturers to produce increasing numbers of FFVs, rising to 100 percent of vehicles 10,000 pounds or less over the next decade. This is eminently achievable, and probably easy enough to do much sooner than that.

Recent estimates for the extra cost of manufacturing an FFV are as low as $30. It is a matter of modifying the engine, fuel line and adding a fuel sensor, which most vehicles have anyway. That is less expensive than many other federal requirements for the auto industry. Air bags are more expensive, for instance. And the bottom line is FFVs are being sold for the same price as regular cars.

America's dependence on foreign oil is the source of so many of our problems, today. We are transferring vast amounts of wealth to regimes that are not friendly to our interests. We are vulnerable to price hikes and embargoes. Millions of petrodollars are finding their way into the hands of terrorists and other extremists. And we are accelerating the pace of global warming.

Substituting biofuels for oil in the transportation sector won't solve these problems overnight, but it will make a difference, and a potentially dramatic one in the longer run.

Let me mention a few eye-opening facts and figures to illustrate these points. The United States has less than 5 percent of the world's population, but we consume 25 percent of the world's oil. If crude oil prices remain above $60 a barrel this year, we will spend well over $300 billion on oil imports. Projections indicate that, over the next 25 years, world demand for energy will grow by 50 percent. All of this growth in energy use, of course, contributes to dangerously rising levels of greenhouse gas emissions.

The reality is that gasoline is much more costly than most Americans realize, even at $3 a gallon. According to a recent study entitled the "The Hidden Cost of Oil," gas really costs more than $10 a gallon. This is because of all the costs we don't factor into its price at the pump, including wars, other military expenses, subsidies, and so on.

There is no question that the ambitious goals set forth in this bill are achievable.

Several decades ago, Brazil committed itself to a similar course. Renewable fuels have played a big part in Brazil's achieving energy independence. Currently, ethanol production in the U.S. is increasing by 25 percent annually. If we sustain that rate of increase, we will be able to reach the aggressive renewable fuels standard in the Harkin-Lugar plan. In fact, we will be able to beat it.

For example, Brazil, years ago directed that all gasoline stations carry ethanol as an alternative fuel. Our legislation would require the major oil companies to do their share by installing E85 pumps over the next decade. This should not pose too much of a challenge or burden.

Another key to Brazil's success is the fact that, in just 3 years' time, nearly 70 percent of new vehicles sold there are flex-fuel vehicles. We are asking the auto companies to accomplish a similar goal of nearly universal production, only we are giving them a decade to phase in the production and sale of flex-fuel vehicles. Most of the companies that sell vehicles in the United States also sell them in Brazil. If they can produce flex-fuel vehicles for Brazil, they can also produce them for the United States.

Let me explain in more detail why what Senator LUGAR and I are proposing can be accomplished.

The 10 billion gallon goal can certainly be met by 2010. The ethanol industry will produce more than 4.5 billion gallons this year. There are 97 ethanol plants in operation, with 35 more coming on-line in the near future. Biodiesel production is growing remarkably, as well, at more than 60 plants nationwide.

The 30-billion-gallon and 60-billion-gallon targets are attainable, as well. A joint study by the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Energy found that biofuels could supply 60 billion gallons of renewable fuels a year—30 percent of current U.S. gasoline consumption—on existing lands without any disruption to our food or feed supply.

The key to ramping-up production will be commercializing ethanol made from feedstocks in addition to corn and other grains, including corn stover, straw from wheat and other crops, switchgrass or even trees. There are a host of provisions that I and others authored in the energy bill—ranging from loan guarantees to increased biomass research and development—to make cellulosic ethanol production a reality.

Currently, at least three companies are planning commercial-scale cellulosic ethanol plants. They could be operating within the next 2 to 3 years. One company, Iogen, has the backing of Shell Oil. Just 2 weeks ago, according to reports, Iogen received a cash infusion from Goldman Sachs. By setting an ambitious new RFS, with a sufficient lead time, I believe the 60-billion-gallon threshold is not only attainable, but beatable.

In any case, should something unexpected happen to interfere with reaching these benchmarks, the Environmental Protection Agency has, within the existing RFS, authority to waive the requirement in whole or in part based on a finding of insufficient supply.

If we take bold actions to guarantee the fuel supply, if we increase the number of flex-fuel vehicles capable of running on E85, and if we increase the infrastructure of E85 pumps, we will be poised to usher in a new era of energy security much sooner than previously imagined. That is the foundation we lay in this legislation.

This bill would also require that 100 percent of new vehicles purchased for federal fleets be alternative-fueled vehicles, which could include flex-fuel vehicles. The current requirement is 75 percent. I do not see why we shouldn't expect the federal government to be as aggressive as possible in this area.

Last year's energy bill closed a loophole in the purchasing requirement that had allowed agencies to buy alternative-fuel vehicles but not use alternative fuels such as E85. That was a step forward. Requiring all the federal fleet to be alternative fueled is yet another step forward in having the Federal Government lead by example when it comes to alternative fuels.

We also update the Gasohol Competition Act of 1980, legislation designed many years ago to ensure the reasonable availability of ethanol at the pump, so it applies to high blends such as E85 and so that oil companies cannot prevent a franchisee from installing E85 pumps.

The concern back then, and still today, is that petroleum companies were unreasonably preventing or prohibiting ethanol-blended fuels from being offered at gasoline stations. The Gasohol Competition Act did two things. First, it made it unlawful to charge additional credit card fees for gasohol. Second, it prohibited unreasonable discrimination against the sale of gasohol. Our legislation would update the Gasohol Competition Act to prohibit discrimination against E85.

We are also proposing several relatively modest tax components designed to bolster this legislation which will be introduced as stand-alone legislation.

The oil-producing countries think they have us over a barrel, but they will soon get the message: We have had enough. And we are dead serious about determining our own energy future.

I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this important legislation.

TITLE —INSPECTIONS AND DETENTIONS

SEC. 01. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Secure and Safe Detention and Asylum Act".

SEC. 02. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The origin of the United States is that of a land of refuge. Many of our Nation's founders fled here to escape persecution for their political opinion, their ethnicity, and their religion. Since that time, the United States has honored its history and founding values by standing against persecution around the world, offering refuge to those who flee from oppression, and welcoming them as contributors to a democratic society.

(2) The right to seek and enjoy asylum from persecution is a universal human right and fundamental freedom articulated in numerous international instruments endorsed by the United States, including the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, as well as the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and its 1967 Protocol and the Convention Against Torture. United States law also guarantees the right to seek asylum and protection from return to territories where one would have a well-founded fear of persecution on account of one's race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion.

(3) The United States has long recognized that asylum seekers often must flee their persecutors with false documents, or no documents at all. The second person in United States history to receive honorary citizenship by Act of Congress was Swedish diplomat Raoul Wallenberg, in gratitude for his issuance of more than 20,000 false Swedish passports to Hungarian Jews to assist them flee the Holocaust.

(4) In 1996, Congress amended section 235(b) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, to authorize immigration officers to detain and expeditiously remove aliens without proper documents, if that alien does not have a credible fear of persecution.

(5) Section 605 of the International Religious Freedom Act of 1998 subsequently authorized the United States Commission on International Religious Freedom to appoint experts to study the treatment of asylum seekers subject to expedited removal.

(6) The Departments of Justice and Homeland Security fully cooperated with the Commission, which reviewed thousands of previously unreleased statistics, approximately 1,000 files and records of proceeding related to expedited removal proceedings, observed more than 400 inspections, interviewed 200 aliens in expedited removal proceedings at 7 ports of entry, and surveyed 19 detention facilities and all 8 asylum offices. The Commission released its findings on February 8, 2005.

(7) Among its major findings, the Commission found that, while the Congress, the Immigration and Naturalization Service, and the Department of Homeland Security developed a number of processes to prevent bona fide asylum seekers from being expeditiously removed, these procedures were routinely disregarded by many immigration officers, placing the asylum seekers at risk, and undermining the reliability of evidence created for immigration enforcement purposes. The specific findings include the following:

(A) Department of Homeland Security procedures require that the immigration officer read a script to the alien that the alien should ask for protection—without delay—if the alien has any reason to fear being returned home. Yet in more than 50 percent of the expedited removal interviews observed by the Commission, this information was not conveyed to the applicant.

(B) Department of Homeland Security procedures require that the alien review the sworn statement taken by the immigration officer, make any necessary corrections for errors in interpretation, and then sign the statement.

The Commission found, however, that 72 percent of the time, the alien signs his sworn statement without the opportunity to review it.

(C) The Commission found that the sworn statements taken by the officer are not verbatim, are not verifiable, often attribute that information was conveyed to the alien which was never, in fact, conveyed, and sometimes contain questions which were never asked. These sworn statements look like verbatim transcripts but are not. Yet the Commission also found that, in 32 percent of the cases where the immigration judges found the asylum applicant were not credible, they specifically relied on these sworn statements.

(D) Department of Homeland Security regulations also require that, when an alien expresses a fear of return, he must be referred to an asylum officer to determine whether his fear is "credible." Yet, in nearly 15 percent of the cases which the Commission observed aliens who expressed a fear of return were nevertheless removed without a referral to an asylum officer.

(8) The Commission found that the sworn statements taken during expedited removal proceedings were reliable for neither enforcement nor protection purposes because Department of Homeland Security management reviewed only the paperwork created by the interviewing officer. The agency had no national quality assurance procedures to ensure that paper files are an accurate representation of the actual interview. The Commission recommended recording all interviews between Department of Homeland Security officers and aliens subject to expedited removal, and that procedures be established to ensure that these recordings are reviewed to ensure compliance.

(9) The Commission found that the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) issued policy guidance on December 30, 1997, defining criteria for decisions to release asylum seekers from detention. Neither the INS nor the Department of Homeland Security, however, had been following this, or any other discernible criteria, for detaining or releasing asylum seekers. The Study's review of Department of Homeland Security statistics revealed that release rates varied widely, between 5 percent and 95 percent, in different regions.

(10) In order to promote the most efficient use of detention resources and a humane yet secure approach to detention of aliens with a credible fear of persecution, the Commission urged that the Department of Homeland Security develop procedures to ensure that a release decision is taken at the time of the credible fear determination or as soon as feasible thereafter. Upon a determination that the alien has established credible fear, identity and community ties, and that the alien is not subject to any possible bar to asylum involving violence, misconduct, or threat to national security, the alien should be released from detention pending an asylum determination. The Commission also urged that the Secretary of Homeland Security establish procedures to ensure consistent implementation of release criteria, as well as the consideration of requests to consider new evidence relevant to the determination.

(11) In 1986, the United States, as a member of the Executive Committee of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, noted that in view of the hardship which it involves, detention of asylum seekers should normally be avoided; that detention measures taken in respect of refugees and asylum-seekers should be subject to judicial or administrative review; that conditions of detention of refugees and asylum seekers must be humane; and that refugees and asylum-seekers shall, whenever possible, not be accommodated with persons detained as criminals.

(12) The USCIRF Study found that, of non-criminal asylum seekers and aliens detained, the vast majority are detained under inappropriate and potentially harmful conditions in jails and jail-like facilities. This occurs in spite of the development of a small number of successful nonpunitive detention facilities, such as those in Broward County Florida and Berks County, Pennsylvania.

(13) The Commission found that nearly all of the detention centers where asylum seekers are detained resemble, in every essential respect, conventional jails. Often, aliens with no criminal record are detained alongside criminals and criminal aliens. The standards applied by the Bureau of Immigration and Customs Enforcement for all of their detention facilities are identical to, and modeled after, correctional standards for criminal populations. In some facilities with "correctional dormitory" set-ups, there are large numbers of detainees sleeping, eating, going to the bathroom, and showering out in the open in one brightly lit, windowless, and locked room. Recreation in Bureau of Immigration and Customs Enforcement facilities often consists of unstructured activity of no more than 1 hour per day in a small outdoor space surrounded by high concrete walls.

(14) Immigration detention is civil and should be nonpunitive in nature.

(15) A study conducted by Physicians for Human Rights and the Bellevue/New York University Program for Survivors of Torture found that the mental health of asylum seekers was extremely poor, and worsened the longer individuals were in detention. This included high levels of anxiety, depression, and post-traumatic stress disorder. The study also raised concerns about inadequate access to health services, particularly mental health services. Asylum seekers interviewed consistently reported being treated like criminals, in violation of international human rights norms, which contributed to worsening of their mental health. Additionally, asylum seekers reported verbal abuse and inappropriate threats and use of solitary confinement.

(16) The Commission recommended that the secure but nonpunitive detention facility in Broward County Florida Broward provided a more appropriate framework for those asylum seekers who are not appropriate candidates for release.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are the following:

(1) To ensure that personnel within the Department of Homeland Security follow procedures designed to protect bona fide asylum seekers from being returned to places where they may face persecution.

(2) To ensure that persons who affirmatively apply for asylum or other forms of humanitarian protection and noncriminal detainees are not subject to arbitrary detention.

(3) To ensure that asylum seekers, families with children, noncriminal aliens, and other vulnerable populations, who are not eligible for release, are detained under appropriate and humane conditions.

TITLE —INTERCOUNTRY ADOPTION REFORM

SEC. 01. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the “Inter-country Adoption Reform Act of 2006” or the “ICARE Act”.

SEC. 02. FINDINGS; PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds the following:

(1) That a child, for the full and harmonious development of his or her personality, should grow up in a family environment, in an atmosphere of happiness, love, and understanding.

(2) That intercountry adoption may offer the advantage of a permanent family to a child for whom a suitable family cannot be found in his or her country of origin.

(3) There has been a significant growth in intercountry adoptions. In 1990, Americans adopted 7,093 children from abroad. In 2004, they adopted 23,460 children from abroad.

(4) Americans increasingly seek to create or enlarge their families through intercountry adoptions.

(5) There are many children worldwide that are without permanent homes.

(6) In the interest of children without a permanent family and the United States citizens who are waiting to bring them into their families, reforms are needed in the intercountry adoption process used by United States citizens.

(7) Before adoption, each child should have the benefit of measures taken to ensure that intercountry adoption is in his or her best interest and that prevents the abduction, selling, or trafficking of children.

(8) In addition, Congress recognizes that foreign-born adopted children do not make the decision whether to immigrate to the United States. They are being chosen by Americans to become part of their immediate families.

(9) As such these children should not be classified as immigrants in the traditional sense. Once fully and finally adopted, they should be treated as children of United States citizens.

(10) Since a child who is fully and finally adopted is entitled to the same rights, duties, and responsibilities as a biological child, the law should reflect such equality.

(11) Therefore, foreign-born adopted children of United States citizens should be accorded the same procedural treatment as biological children born abroad to a United States citizen.

(12) If a United States citizen can confer citizenship to a biological child born abroad, then the same citizen is entitled to confer such citizenship to their legally and fully adopted foreign-born child immediately upon final adoption.

(13) If a United States citizen cannot confer citizenship to a biological child born abroad, then such citizen cannot confer citizenship to their legally and fully adopted foreign-born child, except through the naturalization process.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this title are—

(1) to ensure that any adoption of a foreign-born child by parents in the United States is carried out in the manner that is in the best interest of the child;

(2) to ensure that foreign-born children adopted by United States citizens will be treated identically to a biological child born abroad to the same citizen parent; and

(3) to improve the intercountry adoption process to make it more citizen friendly and focused on the protection of the child.

RELATIVE TO THE DEATH OF FORMER SENATOR JACOB CHIC HECHT

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of S. Res. 481, which was submitted earlier today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the resolution by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 481) relative to the death of Jacob Chic Hecht, former United States Senator for the State of Nevada.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, yesterday morning in Las Vegas Chic Hecht died. Chic Hecht was a former Senator and a fellow Nevadan. On behalf of the entire Senate family, I extend condolences to Chic's wife, Gail, and their daughters, Leslie and Lori.

Chic was a man very small in stature, but his life has left a big shadow on the State of Nevada and the entire United States. Chic's political career was outstanding, and I consider it a privilege that I could serve with and know him.

When I was Lieutenant Governor of Nevada, Chic served in the Nevada State Senate. When I was elected to the Congress in 1982, he was elected to the Senate. A few years later, I had the good fortune of joining him here.

Chic was someone who had no guile. He made it through his political career recognizing that he was never going to be a dynamic speaker. He spoke with a distinct lisp. But this is something that people in Nevada came to admire and appreciate. People had great affection for him, as you can tell from his first Senate race.

Chic's election to the Senate is described as being the biggest political upset in the history of the State of Nevada. He beat a man who had served in the Senate 24 years, Senator Howard Cannon, a man who had been chairman of the Rules Committee, Commerce Committee and Armed Services Committee. It was a tremendous upset.

Chic was rightfully proud of that election. "Only in America could this happen," he said the night that he beat Howard Cannon. "Put that down. That is what makes America great."

Even Chic's opponents liked and respected him.

In 1988, Chic was beaten by Senator Richard Bryan. But as Senator Bryan said, they were good friends during the race and continued being good friends after. That was Chic Hecht.

As successful as he was in the political field, he was even more successful as an entrepreneur. He made his money in a number of different ways. One was selling women's clothing. The other was in the banking business. He was extremely successful.

But public service called him. In addition to his Nevada legislature and Senate experience, he also served as Ambassador to the Bahamas from 1989 to 1994.

During the 1950s, Chic was a member of the Army. At that time, Chic was an undercover person—a spy. He was known for this his entire life. During some of his campaigns, people checked to find out if, in fact, this man of small stature really was a spy because if that was not the case, they planned to use it against him in the campaign. But they couldn't, because it was true. He served with distinction in the military.

Here's another example of the kind of man Chic was.

We had today, as we have for many decades, our Tuesday caucuses. During the time Senator Hecht served in the Senate, he attended the Republican Tuesday caucus. Well, one Tuesday, JOHN KERRY was late coming to the Democratic caucus, and he came across Chic Hecht, who was in a state of distress because while eating lunch with the Republican caucus, he had some food lodged in his throat. He couldn't breathe. He staggered out of the Republican conference and, fortuitously, JOHN KERRY recognized that something was wrong. Senator KERRY applied the Heimlich maneuver, and the food came out. Chic Hecht was told by the doctors that he had a matter of a few seconds to live.

Now, to show the kind of man Chic Hecht was, every Christmas, even though he was proud of his Jewish faith, every Christmas thereafter, recognizing that that was a day of celebration for Senator KERRY, Senator

Hecht called JOHN KERRY to tell him that he appreciated his having saved his life.

And what a life it was.

Nevada has had a great loss. I hope that Chic's family recognizes the greatness of this man. I know there are many in Nevada who do.

As strongly as I feel about Chic Hecht, his friends run deep in our state. My good friend Art Marshall, who is a good, strong Democrat and has helped me on everything that I have ever done, spoke with admiration of his deep friendship with Chic Hecht. They were from different political parties, but always had a very good relationship. Art called me nearly every day to tell me how Chic was doing while he wrestled with cancer.

Today, Chic's suffering is over. He will be missed.

In time, the pain of his loss will pass, but never our memories and appreciation for this man. Chic Hecht, Senator from Nevada.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be agreed to, the preamble be agreed to, and the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 481) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 481

Whereas Jacob Chic Hecht served as a special agent in the United States Army Intelligence Corps;

Whereas Jacob Chic Hecht served the people of Nevada with distinction from 1983 to 1989 in the United States Senate;

Whereas Jacob Chic Hecht served as United States Ambassador to the Bahamas from 1989 until 1994;

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow and deep regret the announcement of the death of Jacob Chic Hecht, former member of the United States Senate.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit an enrolled copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That when the Senate adjourns today, it stand adjourned as a further mark of respect to the memory of the Honorable Jacob Chic Hecht.

ARCTIC RESEARCH AND POLICY AMENDMENTS ACT OF 2005

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs be discharged from further consideration of S. 879, and the Senate proceed to its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 879) to make improvements to the Arctic Research and Policy Act of 1984.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment that is at the desk be agreed to, the bill, as amended, be read a third time and passed, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and that any statements relating to the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment (No. 4028) was agreed to as follows:

(Purpose: To strike the sections regarding Commission awards and representation and reception activities)

On page 2, strike line 7 and all that follows through the end of the bill.

The bill (S. 879), as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time and passed, as follows:

ORDERS FOR WEDNESDAY, MAY 17, 2006

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in adjournment until 9:15 a.m. on Wednesday, May 17. I further ask that following the prayer and pledge, the morning hour be deemed expired, the Journal of proceedings be approved to date, the time for the two leaders be reserved, and the Senate resume consideration of S. 2611, the Comprehensive Immigration Reform Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, today we have made some progress on the immigration bill. Tomorrow we will continue to work through this complex bill, starting with the Kyl-Cornyn amendment, which is the pending amendment. Senators can expect a vote on this amendment in the morning. I remind everyone again that we still have many amendments to consider and, therefore, I hope Senators will be reasonable and agree to short time agreements.

As a reminder, Senators who have amendments to offer should be working with the bill managers in order to have their amendments debated and considered. Senators can expect a full day tomorrow, with votes throughout the day. I would also say it will be necessary to schedule sessions into the night to consider additional amendments.

I hope we can make great progress during the daylight hours. But if we consume a lot of time on each amendment, it will be necessary to continue into the evening with votes. As we have talked about now for several weeks, it is important that we consider a large number of amendments, a broad range of amendments, many to each section of this bill. It will require the cooperation of all of our colleagues with this goal in mind.

TOMORROW

Mr. FRIST. If there is no further business to come before the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in adjournment as a further mark of respect for former Senator Chic Hecht.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 7:05 p.m., adjourned until Wednesday, May 17, 2006, at 9:15 a.m.
