PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 107th CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

Vol. 147

WASHINGTON, WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 10, 2001

No. 135

Senate

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m. and was called to order by the Honorable HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON, a Senator from the State of New York.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, You have created us to know, love, and serve You, and then live with You forever. We thank You for the life and leadership of Senator Mike Mansfield. We are grateful for this truly great American, distinguished Senator for 34 years, majority leader for 15 of those years, outstanding Ambassador to Japan, and distinguished patriot all through his life. We have all learned so much about leadership from this man of few but firm and pointed words with which he expressed strong convictions and profound concern. We remember the warm twinkle in his eye, his engaging smile, and his abiding faithfulness as a friend. But most of all, we are comforted by the fact of his relationship with You, which was at the core of his being. We thank You for the quiet inner security of his faith in You and his expectation that death would only be a transition in eternal life. Goodness and mercy followed the Senator all his life and now he dwells with You forever. In the name of Him who is the resurrection and the life. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. BYRD).

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, October 10, 2001.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, paragraph 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON, a Senator from the State of New York, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mrs. CLINTON thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

SCHEDULE

Mr. REID. Madam President, this morning the Senate resumes postcloture debate on the motion to proceed to S. 1447, the aviation security bill. The full 30 hours have to run—and certainly we hope that is not the case—on the motion. Then all time will expire at approximately 5 p.m. today—shortly before that, actually. I am hopeful that we will be able to reach agreement on aviation security as well as the counterterrorism legislation.

I remind Members that it was 1 week ago today that the motion to proceed to S. 1447 was filed. At least from my Nevada perspective, that is too long to have people not recognizing that there are things we could do with aviation security that we have not done. I think it is too bad that we have had to go through this period to get to this bill.

I also remind Senators who are planning to attend the funeral of the late majority leader Mike Mansfield that the vehicles will depart the Capitol steps at 10 this morning.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

AVIATION SECURITY ACT—MOTION TO PROCEED

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of the motion to proceed to S. 1447, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows: A motion to proceed to the bill (S. 1447) to improve aviation security, and for other purposes.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that during today's proceedings on this legislation now before the Senate, if someone comes to the Chamber and wishes to speak as in morning business, that the time would be charged against the proceedings on this legislation.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THOMAS. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

ENERGY POLICY

Mr. THOMAS. Madam President, I want to talk this morning a bit, as we have for some time, about energy. Energy, of course, is something we have talked about for some time—a good long time, as a matter of fact. Our experiences last summer in California emphasized the need for some changes in our energy policy so that we have more stability and reliability in energy. Of course, we also became aware of some of the things we must do in terms of energy, and we have worked on it for a very long time.

Now, since September 11, I think we find some very compelling additional reasons that we need to do some things with energy. Obviously, we have not had an energy policy that we need to have in place over the years, and that is what we are seeking to do—to develop energy policy.

Partly because, I suppose, of the lack of a policy and a real direction where we want to go over time, we have become very dependent on overseas oil sources. We are nearly 60 percent dependent on OPEC and others. So now, in terms of some of the uncertainty in the Middle East and around the world, I think we find ourselves with more concern about where we need to be in terms of energy.

We have at least two compelling reasons, it seems to me, that make energy development and energy security even more important. One is to support our military activities. We have to have the energy to do that. The other is that we are talking about a stimulus for the economy, about building our economy. Obviously, fuel and power and energy are key to that, in whatever means they are used. So I believe we find ourselves now with even more reason to move to developing an energy policy that will ensure we have the energy necessary for all the needs we have.

We have talked before about the need for research so we can find better ways to produce energy, so that we can find better ways to conserve our energy. Those things are possible, and we can do them. We have talked more about how we find diversity in a policy so we don't become dependent on one source of energy—and that we can look toward nuclear—whether it be renewable, gas, or coal, and to have diversity that helps strengthen those sources.

We have talked a good deal about renewables. That is obviously something we need to pursue. Most important of all, I imagine now as we look at where we are, is production. We need to ensure we can have domestic production, and that we can increase our domestic production, so we become less dependent upon the supply from overseas.

So I believe very strongly that we had compelling reasons to deal with energy before, and certainly September 11 has added to the necessity for us to do that. We have worked hard in the Energy Committee, of which I am a member, to respond. We have had hearings, we had marked up a title in our energy bill, and we are moving forward on that bill that was quite broad.

In the meantime, the House has passed an energy bill which has a good deal of the things in it about which we have talked. So they moved forward with that over in the House. It has great support from labor unions and from many environmentalists, and it certainly has strong support from the administration. That bill is passed and available for us to deal with now.

Unfortunately—or fortunately—there has been some change in what we are doing. The chairman of the committee has indicated that he has been asked to not have any more committee activities, and there will be a bill put together, apparently, by the majority leader to bring before us. Unfortunately, we have talked about this before and have not arrived, I don't believe, at any commitment as to when that will be done and how it will be done. Of course, some have considerable concern that there would not be input from all of the folks in the Senate. There is some concern about that. I believe what we need more than anything is the assurance that there will be an energy bill before we adjourn.

There are a number of things that are very important to us. One is airline security. I think it is very important that we do that. We are also working on changing the rules and the law on terrorism so that our agencies can work more efficiently and our law enforcement and others can do that. We are working on a stimulus for the economy in the Finance Committee, and I think that has to be one of the high-priority items. We need to do our appropriations, which is our normal duty and one that needs to be moving along.

So we have a full plate. But I believe strongly that energy now—particularly because of the threats of the overseas intervention—becomes one of the items we must add to our list to complete. I am hopeful that changes that apparently have been suggested will result in yet some way for us to get on the floor with the issues we think are terribly important for energy—to get the bill out that we can work on so we can develop and have an energy policy that will be supportive of the economy and supportive of our war on terrorism. I think it is necessary we do that.

Madam President, I urge my colleagues to find a way to bring together the needs of this country, supported by the White House, supported by both sides in this body, and already has been supported by the House, and that prior to finishing our work, we complete work on an energy policy that will meet this country's needs.

Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

SETTING THE AGENDA

Mr. REID. Madam President, I was not fortunate enough to have listened to the entire statement of our friend from Wyoming. I have worked with Senator DASCHLE and Senator BINGAMAN on energy legislation, and no one feels more strongly than Senator DASCHLE, our majority leader, that we need to bring forward legislation at the earliest possible date dealing with the energy problems.

He and Senator BINGAMAN, who is the chairman of the Energy Committee, have worked hard on this, and we will have something as soon as possible.

I have to say, we have been trying to get to airport security for over a week. There have been objections to that. We have had to jump through a series of hoops: A motion to invoke cloture on the motion to proceed, and now it appears we are going to have to file a motion to invoke cloture on the bill itself. During this time, we could be doing other things. We have tried to move to appropriations bills which have not been considered, and there have been objections to that by the minority.

Senator LEAHY has worked night and day on terrorism and other issues as a result of the events of September 11, and we are still doing just fine with judicial nominations and nominations generally, but that is not good enough for some people. Therefore, they have put a stop on all legislation.

It seems somewhat unusual to me to have the minority saying why aren't we moving legislation when they will not let us move it. We are in the majority. They may not like it. Senator DASCHLE is the majority leader and determines what legislation comes to the floor. They cannot do that anymore. Because they only want energy does not mean that is what they are going to get.

We have many other items, and the majority leader has made a decision on with what we are going to deal. They will not let us do that. We have 13 appropriations bills we have to pass every year. They will not let us get to those bills because they do not believe enough judges are being approved.

At home, I have not had a single person ask me about judges. We have two Nevada judges who are waiting to go through the funnel, and they will get here. Those judges know Senator LEAHY and Senator HATCH are doing the very best they can on their nominations.

There is always talk about energy proficiency. Isn't it funny they always bring up ANWR? That seems to be the button on the pin they are always concerned about—ANWR. Madam President, this situation is one with which we have to be very careful. Just last week somebody with a rifle shot some holes through a pipeline in Alaska, and 250,000 gallons of fuel spilled before they could stop the leakage. That was just one man. I do not know if he was target practicing or shooting at caribou. I do not know what he was doing, but with a rifle he put holes through that pipe.

The energy situation is very complicated. The majority leader has indicated time and time again he is aware of that and wants to work on this. I wish the minority would let the legislation that is important pass. We need to do something about airport security. We need to do something about terrorism. We need to do something about many other things that they will not let us get to. We are in the majority now. The majority leader has the right and the ability to set the agenda for this Senate.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. REID. I will be happy to yield for a question.

Mr. THOMAS. The idea of being able to object is not a brand new idea. It was exercised by you when you were in the minority; isn't that true?

Mr. REID. I am sorry, I could not hear the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. The idea that we in the minority ought to be involved is something we learned from you when you were in the minority. So it is not a brand new idea. When the majority brings bills forward, they need to work with everyone here so we can pass something.

I am just surprised at what the Senator said, that this is a brand new idea.

Mr. REID. I do not recall, I say to my friend from Wyoming, talking about a brand new idea. I was in the minority for a number of years in my present position and worked very closely with Senator LOTT in moving legislation. I worked very hard in moving legislation, and we did not hold up legislation based on judges. We did not do that. We felt we were treated unfairly. I think the last administration certainly did not get the judges who were in the pipeline who should have been confirmed. But we said early on this is not payback time; we are going to move them as quickly as we can, and we have. We have moved out scores of nominations that President Bush felt he needed. We moved scores.

Somebody on the side of the Senator from Wyoming—I do not know who it is; even if I did, I would not announce it here—believes we are not moving enough judges through.

I say to my friend from Wyoming, we did not do that. We did not hold up legislation based upon judges. On a comparative basis, we had a right to do so, but I felt, and Senator DASCHLE felt as minority leader, that we had an obligation to move legislation.

We worked extremely hard to move appropriations bills. We worked extremely hard to move legislation that the majority then felt was important. We had very little downtime as a result of objections from our side. We made sure there were not even long periods of time when there were quorum calls.

I say to my friend, I did not use the term it was a new idea. I am just saying what is happening is unfair. We have been trying to move to this legislation dealing with airport security for more than a week, and we are a long ways from being able to do it now if colleagues make us jump through all the hoops.

Mr. THOMAS. I understand that. I agree with the Senator that we need to move forward. Another point. When there are bills with a special purpose, such as airport security, and provisions are added that have nothing to do with it, when you are in the minority, you have to have some opportunity to participate in the decision. I say to the Senator from Nevada that it is the leadership's role to find some compromise so we can move forward. I know the Senator has done that, and I admire what the Senator is doing.

Mr. REID. I say to my friend, I appreciate his presence in the Chamber and attempting to work with us. On airport security, there are three problems that can be resolved in a matter of a few hours: No. 1, there are some who believe not only is airport security important but also that there be security on our passenger trains.

There are also those who believe we should protect workers who have been displaced as a result of these terrible acts on September 11. We should be able to work our way through that. We should bring these issues up, vote, and go to something else.

I say to my friend from Wyoming, I had a number of meetings yesterday with Senator LOTT in the presence, of course, of Senator DASCHLE, and he is attempting to help us work through some of this. I appreciate that very much.

Maybe today we can do something on terrorism. It would be helpful if we could get that out of the way. There are things about which I feel strongly. I had a Republican in the House today tell me: Did I hear you right when you said you think the things we do in this bill should not be sunsetted?

I said: You heard me right. If it is good now, it will be good later.

They asked me if I believed, for example, if there should be roving wiretaps on terrorists. I said to a friend, a Member of the House from Connecticut: Yes, I do. There are some basic items in this antiterrorism legislation we need to do, I say to my friend from Wyoming. I hope we can work that out before the day is through.

Mr. THOMAS. I hope so as well. One other observation: We have these items now that are of such high priority that have to do with security, and I think we need to be very watchful that we do not find ourselves using security as a vehicle for doing some things that have very little attachment to security.

I thank the Senator for his response.

Mr. REID. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NELSON of Nebraska). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent I be allowed to speak for up to 10 minutes as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ENERGY POLICY

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, I speak not only as part of the Republican leadership in the Senate but as a member of the Energy Committee, a committee on which I have served for the 11 years I have been in the Senate. During those 11 years, I have had the opportunity to serve under three Presidents. For 8 of those years, I served under a Democrat President. During that time, he, I, his administration, and certainly all Members, attempted to shape a national energy policy for our country that never really got accomplished. During that time, we continued to grow very rapidly as a nation. We continued to consume up to a 2½ to 3 percent increase in energy each year, although our country was only producing a 1½ percent increase of total need.

Of course, we know what happened as a result of that timeframe over the last 8½ years: We grew increasingly dependent upon foreign sources of energy for our existence, at least in oil. Our infrastructure grew older, our transmission lines and pipelines; our ability to generate electrical energy did not increase very rapidly. But workers found the demand of the new high-tech economy even required greater abundances of electricity and energy than we originally suspected.

It is why it became an issue in the last presidential campaign and it is why this President, George Bush, immediately developed a national energy task force to begin to work on a national energy policy. They completed their work and sent their information to the Hill.

While that has been going on, the Energy Committee, now chaired by Senator BINGAMAN, once chaired by Senator FRANK MURKOWSKI of Alaska, has been working on a national energy policy. We have spent the last 3½ to 4 years in hearings, looking at all sides of this issue. We clearly have a vision as to what we need and what we need to do. It is really not very difficult, although it is politically contentious. We need to produce more energy, in electricity and in gas and oil. We need to put more research behind new technologies and continue to advance the technologies for electronic cars and alternative forms of electrical generation—wind and solar. We have invested millions of dollars in those alternatives over the last couple of years. We need to continue.

At the same time, there is no question for the next 15 to 20 years we will be increasingly dependent upon foreign sources for oil—predominantly oil—ultimately the greatest form of energy that moves the American economy, whether it is the cars we drive, the trucks that deliver the goods and services to our communities, the trains that run upon our tracks, the airplanes that fly across our skies, or our ships at sea, our aircraft carriers and the planes that are now flying day and night over Afghanistan. All of those are driven by oil, by energy. When we started this debate a decade or more ago, we were around 50 percent dependent upon foreign sources of that energy. Today we are at times over 60 percent dependent. We understand the issue. We clearly understand the urgency.

We awakened to that energy problem last year when the lights went out in California. We all said: My goodness, why is that happening? What happened that caused all of this—for elevators to stop operating and traffic lights to stop operating, for the economy of California to nearly go in the tank as a result of not having the energy base they needed to feed their growth and demand? We knew they had launched a policy some time back that was not allowing them to produce. While it was a wake-up call for California, it truly was a wake-up call for our Nation.

As a result of that, this Senator's effort, the committee's effort, and the President's effort, the House moved an energy bill and was able to pass a fairly comprehensive new policy toward production and infrastructure development and the kind of refinement that a new, dynamic energy policy for our country needs. They did their work. They got that work done before the August recess.

We were working, and with credit to Chairman BINGAMAN, although we had the transfer of leadership in the Senate, he continued to work. He was looking at a much broader bill to deal with the issue of energy than the House produced. We were working with him in a very bipartisan manner. Sure, there were differences of opinion. Yes, there are several issues on which we clearly disagree. But in the general sense, we were moving toward a national energy policy.

Along comes September 11. We all know that day now; It is seared into our minds, our world stopped for a time and thousands of Americans lost their lives. We began to rethink who we were and what we were all about as a country. Up until that time Americans, if they were polled, said that, yes, a national energy policy was necessary because it meant the strength of our economy and the growth of our economy and it meant that future generations would have an opportunity to have a supply of energy. But about third or fourth on that list of reasons for a national energy policy was national security. It did not register but third on some polls, or fourth.

September 11—the world changes; the American mindset changes. All of a sudden, by nearly a 60 percentile polling factor, energy and energy policy and energy supply for our country—reliable, abundant, stable—became the No. 1 issue. National security, national security, national security.

Why, then, do I read in a press release from Chairman BINGAMAN yesterday that the majority leader of the Senate has directed the chairman of the Energy and Natural Resources Committee to suspend any further markup on energy legislation for this session of Congress?

What? A No. 1 national energy policy, being now a No. 1 national security policy in our country, and the leader of the Senate is saying stop, don't go forward? The House has done its work, but the Senate cannot do its work?

He says he wants to write his own bill. OK. I have been involved with this issue for a long time. I know why he wants to write his own bill. I understand the politics of the issue. I understand the other side lost a component of the battle on September 11. Actually, they had lost it much before then. They lost it when the House voted to include oil exploration in the Alaskan Arctic National Wildlife Refuge in August. They were not willing to admit it at that time. They thought they still had the votes, but the House had already made that decision because America was sensing a need for a broader national energy policy.

But on September 11 that issue was gone. When it says down here that Senator BINGAMAN went on to say, "the Senate leadership sincerely wants to avoid quarrelsome, divisive votes in the committee," what the chairman is saying is he can't control his own people anymore in the committee because September 11 convinced them that we have to have a national energy policy because national security and energy is paramount.

So he went to his leader and said: Leader DASCHLE, I can't give you the energy bill that I thought I could. I have lost the votes on a couple of key issues and you won't like what comes to the floor.

Some on the other side are saying if you bring that kind of a bill to the floor, we will filibuster, we won't let it pass, and we don't want to see that kind of partisanship on the floor post-

September 11. So they are stopping any effort to develop a national energy policy and to allow the Senate to address the issue.

I come to the Chamber today because this is not only a distressing press release from the chairman of the Energy Committee, I am amazed the majority leader has pulled that authority away from the authorizing committee chairman who has, over the last good number of years, truly become an expert in the energy issue. He and I do not always agree, but we think it is the responsibility of that committee to produce a bill, not for the majority leader to go into his back office and write a bill that is politically correct for his side of the aisle.

Is that—will that be—could that be a comprehensive national energy policy? I don't think so. But let's say it could be.

I ask unanimous consent for no more than 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CRAIG. I am going to give the majority leader the benefit of the doubt at this moment—because I should. I am going to say to the majority leader at this moment: OK, if that is your decision—and I understand the timing here; I understand we are in the last month to a month and a half of this session of Congress and that national energy policy is truly a national security issue and all Americans now believe that. All the polls show that. It is something the House has dealt with and we should deal with. So I say to Leader TOM DASCHLE at this moment: If you are going to craft an energy bill in your office and bring it to the floor as the prerogative of leadership, get on with it. Do it now. Don't tell us you are going to do it and then wait 3 or 4 or 5 weeks, knowing that it cannot get done and it cannot get conferenced with the House. That way you have given your people a vote, but you have not faced the issue and you have not put a bill on the President's desk. That is not leadership. That is politics.

The majority leader and the chairman of the full committee say they want to avoid quarrelsome, divisive votes. They don't want to allow partisan politics to come to the floor.

I suggest if he crafts a bill and brings it to the floor, he avoids that. But if this is a ploy, if this is simply rhetoric to get the bug off their back—because it is now squarely on the majority's back; they have canceled the committee from acting; the majority leader has said: I'll do it. So if we do not have a national energy policy for the energy security and the national security of this country by the close of business of this first session of this Congress, then it is TOM DASCHLE's fault.

I believe that is quite clear. I think that is plain and I think that is simple and I think he has said it just that way when he has said that he will craft a bill and bring it to the floor under the leadership prerogative. Comprehensive, balanced energy legislation can be added by the majority leader to the Senate calendar for potential action prior to adjournment: so speaketh the leader of the U.S. Senate.

Mr. President, I am going to support my leader. But I am going to insist, as all other colleagues will, or at least many will, that he act and that he act in a timely fashion so it can be conferred with the House and put on the President's desk. It is an issue of national security. It is every bit as critical as an airport security bill—and the ranking member of the Commerce Committee is on the floor now trying to get that bill up. It is every bit as important as an antiterrorist bill.

If we get into a greater warlike problem in the Middle East and our flow of oil is cut off from the Arab nations, from Iraq—believe it or not—from Iran, from which we are now getting oil, and if we do not have a national energy policy that begins to move us toward a higher degree of national energy independence, then shame on us but, more important, shame on the majority leader of the Senate, who has chosen to take away from the authorizing committee the authority to craft a bill and bring it to the floor, if the majority leader himself does not honor the commitment he has now made to us, that he will divine—define and maybe divine—a balanced energy policy and bring it to the floor for a vote. That is an obligation that the Senate of the United States should deal with before we adjourn or before we recess this first session of this Congress.

I recognize the importance of this issue, as do many of our colleagues. I am phenomenally disappointed in the form of leadership that says we cannot let our committees work in this instance because this is not something new, as I said. We have been at the business of trying to write a bill for 3½ years. We have held 25 or 30 hearings on it. It is not a new issue, but it is a timely, critical issue to our country. I hope the statements of the majority leader represent the clear intention of bringing the bill to the floor within the next several weeks, that we can deal with it and move it off to conference and have a national energy policy on our President's desk by close of business.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, can you tell me the parliamentary situation as it exists presently?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is on the motion to proceed to S. 1447, under cloture.

Mr. McCAIN. How much time remains on the 30 hours of postcloture debate of which there has been none that I have seen?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Time will expire at 4:57 this afternoon.

Mr. McCAIN. If there is no one on the floor to engage in postcloture debate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put the question on the motion.

AVIATION SECURITY

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, we are now engaged in so-called postcloture debate of 30 hours. I have not paid total attention to what is going on on the floor of the Senate, but clearly there has been no debate on postcloture on the Aviation Security Act. This is rapidly turning into a farce. We need to act. We need to act on aviation security. If there are differences of opinion, such as those held by the Senator from Idaho about federalization, let's have debates and votes.

If there is consideration of non-germane amendments, then let's have those debated and voted on as well. The chairman of the committee, Senator HOLLINGS, and I have agreed to oppose all nongermane amendments. But for us to sit here for 30 hours in so-called postcloture debate—yesterday there was a near tragedy because of a deranged individual who broke into a cockpit of an airplane nearly causing another catastrophe. Part of this legislation, S. 1477, requires the Department of Transportation to take steps to strengthen cockpit doors.

There is another case in my own home State where some individual obviously smuggled in a weapon which caused the shutdown of the Phoenix airport for some 10 hours. The list goes on.

I don't agree with the statement that was made by the administration that there was a 100 percent chance of retaliation because of our military actions in Afghanistan. I don't agree with that statement, although I will admit that I don't have the knowledge of the members of the administration who made that statement. But here we are now going into our second week without addressing the issue of aviation security.

No, I don't agree with the Senator from Idaho that an energy bill is of the same emergency as the Aviation Security Act right now. No rational observer that I know of would agree with that statement. The fact is we need to act. We don't have to wait until 4:57 this afternoon. We should be debating, amending, and passing this legislation before we go out of session this week-end. I am embarrassed that both sides of the aisle for reasons less than national security are not agreeing to take up and pass this legislation.

I don't think the American people, who have been very pleased with our performance up until now, are very pleased. In fact, they are very displeased with our failure to take up this legislation in a normal parliamentary fashion—debate, vote, and give the American people what they don't have today; that is, the sense that a lot of Americans don't have today, that they can get on an airliner with comparative safety and security.

I urge my colleagues to stop what we have been doing for the last 2 weeks, get on with moving this legislation, and perform our duties for the American people, for the men and women right now who are in harm's way performing their duties for the American people. It seems to me it wouldn't be a great deal to ask us to move on this legislation.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCAIN. I am happy to yield to the distinguished majority whip.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, every time I hear the Senator from Arizona speaking, I think of pilots taking off from aircraft carriers and taking off from military bases around the country and, as we know, special forces—I believe I know—certainly nothing confidential has been told to me; I figured it out on my own. We have special operations people there doing all kinds of things. It is extremely dangerous. There is no one in the Senate who has more personal information about war than the Senator from Arizona. I personally appreciate, speaking for the people of the State of Nevada, his passion for this legislation.

There is no perfect legislation. The legislation before us is imperfect. The Senator from Arizona and Senator HOLLINGS worked and came up with what they thought could pass this Senate.

Will the Senator agree that this legislation—no matter how anyone feels about it—should at least be able to get consideration?

There was a motion to invoke cloture which was filed 1 week ago. As I said earlier today, we may disagree with this legislation, but let's get it here and get it completed. The people of Nevada and the people of the rest of this country want this passed.

I say this to my friend from Arizona. There are important things we should do, but shouldn't airport security be one of them?

Mr. McCAIN. I think so. It is obvious. I understand the day before yesterday on Wall Street there was a meeting between the Speaker of the House, the Democrat leader in the House, 20 business and economic and labor leaders, and Alan Greenspan. Their message was, pass the aviation security bill so confidence will be restored on the part of the American people so we can have an economic recovery. On other side of the Capitol, they refuse to take up the issue. On this side of the Capitol, for nearly 2 weeks we have failed to have one moment of debate on this issue, and no amendment has been proposed. I just find that, frankly, incomprehensible.

I am not really renowned for my patience, but I believe I have shown a lot of patience. I believe that Senator HOLLINGS, the distinguished chairman of the committee, has also gone through these machinations trying to work out agreements. I must have had 100 meetings on this issue. We had the idea of taking up the antiterrorism bill first and then moving to this legislation. We thought everybody had an agreement. Then there was one Member on the other side who insisted on amendments. We thought we could get it up with perhaps an agreement that all Members would vote against non-germane amendments. That doesn't seem to have worked.

I have literally exhausted almost every option. Our meetings with the White House have been fruitless. I have not been around here—in fact, the Senator from Nevada and I have been around here the same number of years. I have never had the White House cancel two meetings in 1 day with the chairman and ranking member of the committees—two in 1 day.

Here we are telling the American people that we are working together and we are dedicated to the proposition that we will take whatever measures are necessary in a bipartisan fashion to assure their security and safety, both home and overseas. There is no expert who doesn't believe we need to act on the issue of airport and airline security. Here we are nearing the end of our second week mired in such a situation on which we have made no progress.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, may I ask one more question of my friend?

Mr. MCCAIN. I would be glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. REID. To indicate the patience and integrity of the Senator from Arizona, he could have moved forward on this legislation. But because of his patience—and most of us wouldn't want to do anything that somebody might object to—he acknowledged when he came to this floor that he could have moved forward on this legislation. I know the Senator from Arizona stands for what is good about this country, having devoted a large part of his life in a prison camp for American citizens. If we can't hear him speaking, then we can't hear anybody.

We have to move forward on this legislation. As I have said privately to the Senator from Arizona—and I say now publicly—what he is saying is absolutely full of veracity. One only needs to look at who is saying it to understand that.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I would be glad to yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, the Senator from Arizona knows that he and I are not too far apart on the issue on which he is speaking. I had hoped we would come to the floor this week and deal with two critical national issues: Airport security and antiterrorism. I think we were very close to being ready to do that. I had hoped we could deal with them cleanly and up front—airport security and terrorism issues.

Generally, I have supported the Senator from Arizona on this issue, and continue to do so, and will work with him. I did not come to this Chamber today to suggest a national energy policy go in front of this. I suggest we do airport security, and we ought to be doing it right now in this Chamber.

The Senator ought to be down there at the lead desk on this issue carrying the debate on this side, but he is not being allowed to do so. And it is not his fault; that is very clear.

But what I am suggesting is that in the next month that this Congress will be in session, instead of sitting here marking a clock, with the lights on, the staff engaged, and nothing happening, we ought to also be debating and voting up or down on a national energy policy. I believe it is of high priority. Is it as high as airport security in the current blend of things? No, it isn't.

I agree with the Senator from Arizona. We have to get the confidence built back in the American people on airport activity and security on airplanes, and get them flying now for the long-term economy, but also into the holiday season. It is critical for our airlines and their economic stability, no question about it. We need to give our Attorney General, and others in law enforcement, greater tools to track the terrorists, to track the criminals. And that is ready to go now.

I do not understand why we were not able to switch over and double track. The Senator from Arizona agreed to that. But that is not the call of the minority; that is the call of the majority. They have not let us do that or we could be dealing with both of those critical bills—get at least one of them done this week. The clock is now running out. Having been able to do both of them—as we should have done—there would be ample time to do a national energy policy bill, to engage for 2 or 3 days on the floor, if need be, in the debate of that issue, because I have to think when you scratch the surface of all of these, you get to the bottom line: Airplanes do not fly without fuel; people do not get to the airports without it; our ships that are at sea at the moment, and our pilots who are flying those aircraft off those decks, work with a huge chunk of energy underneath them. We all know that. That is my point.

I agree with the Senator from Arizona. It is not a matter of shoving in to the front; it is a matter of this Senate being capable of dealing with all three of these issues in a timely fashion. That was the point I wanted to make to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MCCAIN. I thank the Senator from Idaho.

I appreciate his passion on this very important issue to our national security. But since it appears that everybody is in agreement that we need to move forward on this legislation—and there has been no debate that I know of on the specific issue of airport security in the postcloture mode, and I see no reason we should waste the entire afternoon in a postcloture parliamentary situation and yet not debating the issue—I tell our leadership on both sides of the aisle, I intend to come, after lunch, in the early afternoon, and move to proceed to S. 1447. That way, we will not have wasted another entire day. I hope there will be no objection at that time.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, just so everyone understands, my friend from Idaho talks about the need to move forward on airport security. Let us move forward. There is no one preventing us from moving forward on this side of the aisle. We want to move forward. We have been trying, for a week, to get to this bill, but we are having to jump over all kinds of hurdles.

We invoked cloture with a vote of 97-0 yesterday. And they—the minority—have said, OK, we are going to use the whole 30 hours postcloture. We have been stymied. We have tried to move to other things. They will not let us.

Last week, we tried to move to a matter dealing with appropriations. We have Agriculture appropriations we tried to get to. No thanks. We tried to get to foreign operations. No thanks. Why? Because of some unrelated issue. That unrelated issue is that we are not moving enough judges for them.

The people at home in Nebraska or in Nevada, I bet they are not coming to you, I say to the Presiding Officer, asking: How many judges is the Senate moving this week? They are concerned about the ability to fly out of Omaha to Las Vegas and back. That is what they are concerned about.

We want to move forward on airport security. We are not stopping anyone from moving forward to airport security. We should have been on that last Wednesday. Here it is a week later, and we are still not on it. We are postcloture on the motion to proceed to airport security.

What are the problems with airport security? There are some people who believe we should get rid of minimum-wage people checking bags, and doing other things, to make these airplanes safe; that there should be some standards; that it should not go to the lowest bidder, as now happens; that we should add, in addition to the hundreds of thousands of other Federal employees we have, about 28,000 employees who would have the stamp of approval of the Department of Energy or the Justice Department—it really does not matter who it is—one Federal agency that oversees them. That is one problem on which they will not let us move forward.

Maybe they can say that is wrong. Have a debate in this Chamber for an hour or so, vote up or down on it, and determine whether they should be federalized or not. That is how things work around here. But they will not let us move to it. They will not let us have a debate on whether they should be federalized or not.

Another issue they are concerned about is whether we should have a vote on Amtrak safety and security—not putting rubber tires on Amtrak trains or putting monitors in all the trains so that you can listen to nice music, no; just so that when you travel on an Amtrak train, you can be safe. Let's have a debate on that: Yes, you want it; no, you don't. They will not even let us talk about it.

The other issue is whether the employees who were displaced as a result of the terrorist acts are entitled to extended unemployment benefits. That does not sound too outrageous to me. And if it is, let's debate it and vote it up or down.

So that is the big hangup on airport security, those three issues.

Everyone would feel better if we passed this legislation. It would determine how airports would be handled. There would be a Federal rule that everyone could see, not a hit-or-miss proposition.

My friend from Idaho is the second person to come to this Chamber and talk about the need to do energy legislation. And the words were: And shame on TOM DASCHLE if it doesn't pass. That is a good reversal role. Senator DASCHLE is here every day trying to move legislation. Although they do not like to acknowledge it, he is the majority leader of the Senate, and he feels an obligation to do some of the things our country requires, such as pass the 13 annual appropriations bills. He has this wild idea—Senator DASCHLE—that you should pass the 13 appropriations bills. They will not let us move to those bills. We have five that have not passed.

They are not going to let us move. Why? Because you are not moving enough circuit judges. We have listed all the people we have in the pipeline who will move, hearings will be held, the votes will be taken here. But that is not good enough. Senator LEAHY has worked weekends on terrorism, helped with airport security, and many other things prior to this legislation. He set times for hearings for judges. But that is not good enough.

So we do not need lectures in this Chamber about what TOM DASCHLE isn't doing. He is doing everything humanly possible to move the agenda of the Senate forward, and we are being prevented from doing so.

We believe that energy policy is important, critically important. I believe we should become less dependent on fossil fuel. That should be part of an energy bill. We need to develop exploration in this country. We need to become less dependent on foreign oil. There is no question about that. We need to move quickly into more solar, more wind, and more geothermal, alternative energy sources.

I believe we need to have an energy policy in this country. Senator DASCHLE believes that. And if we are able to get these emergency matters out of the way, we are going to move to another vitally important thing. That is energy policy.

We always hear these speeches about the need for ANWR. There was a hearing last week during which one of the experts was asked a question that the person who asked it probably wishes he hadn't. The question was: How long would it take to start bringing oil out of ANWR? The answer: About 10 years.

We know the quantity of oil is very limited. Somehow in their minds, this drilling in the pristine wilderness of Alaska is going to solve all the world's problems, when we know if we pumped all the oil that is there now, it would be a 6-month supply for the United States.

There are a number of other problems we have with ANWR. Just last week, a person with a rifle decided to use the pipeline as a target. He shot some holes in the pipeline. By the time they figured out what was happening, 250,000 gallons of oil had dumped out on the Alaskan tundra. That is a very long pipeline. It goes hundreds of miles. I am not sure we need more pipeline in this pristine wilderness.

My friend, the distinguished senior Senator from Idaho, stated that this situation in Alaska would solve lots of the problems of the world. It wouldn't solve many problems at all. We know there are lots of energy problems in the world today. They will not be solved by this situation in Alaska.

There are so many things we need to do, and we need to get to that legislation. We need help from the minority to get to that legislation. They are not letting us move forward on legislation that has to be done.

The first conference they have allowed us to do on an appropriations bill is going to take place this afternoon. I am fortunate enough to be on that conference. At 2:30 p.m. today, there will be a Senate-House conference on appropriations for Interior. I hope we do that. That will be the first of 13 appropriations bills we have been able to finish. But they won't let us move on the five that haven't even passed the Senate.

Using words such as "shame on TOM DASCHLE" isn't senatorial. It is an unfortunate choice of words. Senator DASCHLE understands the importance. I have been in meetings with him just this week, and with Senator BINGAMAN, talking about how important it is to move this legislation. We need to move the legislation. We just need a little help to do it. We have not received the help.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. STABENOW). The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Madam President, I listened with some interest to my colleague from Nevada and previously my colleagues from Arizona and Idaho in their presentations. I compliment my friend from Nevada. Let me also say how much I admire the Senator from Arizona who came to the floor about 20 minutes ago and asked the question: Why are we not moving? Why is the Senate not doing its work on the issue of aviation security? He, of course, knew the answer and answered it himself. We are held up by people who believe somehow that this is not an emergency, this is not a priority, and that there are other issues more important. So they hold the Senate up.

It has been that way now for nearly 2 weeks. We don't vote, we have no debate on the floor, and now we have a colleague today who comes to the Chamber and decides the problem is the majority leader, Senator DASCHLE. Nothing could be further from the truth.

The problem is we have a handful of people in the Senate who are intent on serving as human brake pads to stop this place dead in its tracks. They have succeeded. While the country is worried about the emergency situation that exists as a result of the September 11 terrorist attacks, as a result of an economy that clearly has serious problems, the Senate stands at parade rest. Why? Because a handful of people in the Senate have decided we should not move forward on the issue of aviation security.

It is the easiest thing in the world to take the negative side of anything. All of us understand that. This bill, authored by Senator HOLLINGS and Senator MCCAIN—and I am proud to be a cosponsor of it from the Commerce Committee—deals with aviation security, a whole range of issues: The creation of a large cadre of armed sky marshals to put in American commercial airliners; the development of perimeter security at America's airports; the hardening of cockpits on commercial airliners; and the change in the method of screening luggage and people at airports. All of these things are important. There is much more in this legislation as well. That is the positive side of what we are trying to do on an emergency basis.

There are some who have held it up, and continue to hold it up even now. I am reminded of Mark Twain, who I have mentioned before. When asked one day to get involved in a debate, he said: Of course, as long as I can take the negative side.

They said: Well, we have not told you what the subject is.

He said: It doesn't matter. It doesn't take any preparation to take the negative side.

That is the case in the Congress as well. It takes no preparation to come here and be opposed to almost everything. It takes no skill to be opposed to everything. We have a few folks in my hometown like that. I grew up in a county of 3,400 people. We have several of them who have opposed everything, all along the way, all the time. This Senate is a lot like my hometown, regrettably. The problem is in the Senate a couple of determined people can stop things.

In this country we face real emergencies at this point. Our economy is in serious trouble. Commercial airline service is integral to an economy and its recovery. Going into September 11 and the tragic acts of terror committed against this country, we had a very soft economy. The economy was in trouble even then. One of the leading economic indicators of the economy is airline travel because it is one of the first places people and businesses cut back.

All of our major airline carriers were hemorrhaging in red ink on September 10 going into the September 11 terrorist attacks. On September 11, the Federal Government ordered all commercial aircraft—in fact, all aircraft in this country—to land immediately, and they were grounded. That industry was forced to stay on the ground. There were no airplanes in the sky anywhere.

So this is an industry already hemorrhaging in red ink that was forced to suspend all operations. Then the FAA, under certain circumstances, allowed the restoration of commercial airline flights. What the airlines are discovering is that there are people in this country who have canceled events, conferences, trips, and vacations because there is concern about getting back on an airplane.

I understand that concern. I flew last weekend to North Dakota, and I had also flown the weekend before to North Dakota. But I understand that people are concerned about getting back on an airplane. They and every American saw over and over and over and over again those images of the 767 commercial airliners being flown into the World Trade Center Towers. That is an image most people will not soon forget. So people were concerned and leery about going back to commercial air travel.

This Congress, therefore, must act if it is going to try to restore some health to this economy and give a jump start back to commercial air travel. To do so, this Congress has to put together legislation dealing with aviation security and airline security. That is what we have tried to do. Senator HOLLINGS and Senator MCCAIN, Senator KERRY, myself, and others, have worked on a piece of legislation that makes good sense. We brought it to the floor understanding that this is an emergency, that this is urgent legislation that needs to get done. And guess what. This Senate is brought to parade rest. Nobody is doing anything and nothing happening because we have a couple of people who say: We won't let anything else continue.

You know, we have some people who are crabby about some amendments. My theory is, in a situation like this, if you have some amendments you don't like, stand up and oppose them. If you have some you want to offer, stand up and propose them. Let the Senate vote. Let the Senate make a decision. Do you have good ideas or not? If you don't, tough luck. But don't hold up the Senate and hold up this issue of an urgent need to pass an aviation security bill just because you are a little cranky and have stayed cranky for a couple of weeks. You put the country at risk by doing that.

Now, my friend from Idaho is in the Chamber. He and I have worked closely together. I admire his work. I fundamentally disagree with what he did this morning. He is upset with something Senator DASCHLE has done with respect to an energy bill. Frankly, that energy bill, as Senator MCCAIN said, is separate and distinct from the aviation security bill. We are going to do an energy bill, and we ought to, but the energy bill is going to come together from several sources in the Senate. It is going to come to the floor and we are going to have an opportunity to offer amendments and discuss it. I don't disagree with the notion that central to this country's security is an energy policy. We haven't had an energy policy, under Democratic or Republican administrations, for 30 or 40 years that has meant very much to this country. We need to produce more and find more oil and natural gas. We need to conserve more and, yes, we need to find renewables and a limitless supply of energy, to expand our supply. We need to do all of that, and we need to do it soon.

Let me just say this with respect to security: Security, it seems to me, starts at this moment on the floor of the Senate with passing an aviation security bill. That is where it starts. We will work on a piece of legislation dealing with energy policy. We should do that and that also is urgent. But that ought not hold up an aviation security bill. It should not hold this up. We have a responsibility at this point not to go back to business as usual. Business as usual in the Senate is to have two or three or four or five people hold up the work of the entire Senate. That didn't mean very much under most circumstances because we didn't have a situation that was urgent—not with most pieces of legislation. But if you don't think post-September 11 and the challenges we have to the American economy and the challenges we have in air travel and with respect to providing security for this country at home and abroad—if you don't believe that is an urgent situation, somehow you have slept through the last month.

This country faces an urgent need to do a series of things—important things—that will strengthen its future. Central to those at this moment is a piece of legislation dealing with aviation security. It is past the time—long past the time—when this Senate should have been debating that and voting on it. It simply makes no sense to have a couple of people holding up the Senate because they got out of bed on the wrong side and have a permanent case of ill temper on things about which they are concerned. As a result, they hold up the rest of the Senate.

Mr. CRAIG. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DORGAN. Of course, I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. CRAIG. If Senator DORGAN isn't cranky, and I am not cranky, wherein lies the problem? He and I agree on the importance of airport security. We ought to be debating it right now, right here in this Chamber. Are there some disagreements? Yes, there are some disagreements. Are they big? To some, they are. I don't happen to disagree with all of them. The Senate is working its will, and the leader from the other side who is speaking on the floor right now is doing what he ought to be doing. But he also knows how the Senate works.

At this very moment, we are very close to coming to the floor now with an agreement that cleans up and allows us to focus on airport security. I hope it is sooner rather than later.

The American people deserve an airport security bill. But what I was saying on the floor a few moments ago—quoting from the chairman of the Energy Committee on which the Senator serves—he no longer can craft a bill. He has been disallowed by your leadership from doing so. He is going to, therefore, submit a bill to the majority leader and the majority leader is going to bring it to the floor for our consideration.

What I said on the floor—and I will repeat it—is this: Please do that. Bring that bill to the floor, and sooner rather than later. I will say that it is no longer the responsibility of the chairman of the committee. I serve on that committee along with the Senator from North Dakota. We know that.

The majority leader has spoken. The burden is on the majority leader to get an energy bill to the floor. I believe it is third in the line of actions that should be taken up on the floor. Airport security ought to be done right now. I hope we can do it this week and also do the antiterrorist bill this week. The Senator and I are in total agreement on that. I hope we sort this out sooner rather than later. But once those two bills are done, my guess is that I will be on the floor every day saying: Majority Leader DASCHLE, where is your energy bill? Where is your energy bill? You have taken the authority away from the committee. If you are going to produce a bill, do it, and we will debate it. Agree to get it to the floor with a couple of amendments on either side, or with no amendments, and then get it to conference, get the conferees appointed so we can get a bill on the President's desk. I believe and the public believes if we get into a shooting war in the Middle East and we sever our ties to our dependency on Middle East oil, we send this economy into another tailspin that should be avoidable, but it is not. I thank the Senator.

Mr. DORGAN. I understand the point the Senator made. I say this: The burden that might exist on anybody in this Senate—and especially a majority leader of the Senate—is a burden to get the work of the Senate done. We can't do the aviation security bill because we have a couple of people holding it up in the Senate. Why? Because they don't agree with some things. They have decided aviation security isn't urgent for this country. They could not be more wrong. The burden of the Senate is to pass appropriations bills. We have appropriations bills—in fact, we have more than a half dozen—I believe nine of them—some of which have yet to come to the floor of the Senate to be passed. In fact, very few appropriations bills have been completed at all.

The appropriation subcommittee that I chair had the conferees appointed this week from the House on a bill they passed in June. Think of that. Months and months of stalling, not even appointing conferees to an appropriations bill.

The point is that the majority leader can't bring an appropriations bill to the floor of the Senate. You want to know why? These are bills that were supposed to have been done by October 1—through the House and the Senate. They are not done and he can't bring them to the floor because we have the same few people who object, object, object, and then say to me that the majority leader has a burden.

I will tell you what the burden is. The burden is these objectors who sit on our shoulders all day long and won't let this Senate do its business. We ought to be doing the things that are important at this point and saying to the American people that the Senate understands this situation is urgent in America, that security is an urgent situation, that the threat of terrorism is something we should respond to with great urgency.

Our economy is in an urgent situation. We need to work together to do something about that. But to have this Senate essentially stop in its tracks for 2 weeks is almost unforgivable. I don't handle well people telling me what the burden of the majority leader is. The burden of the majority leader is to get this Senate to get its business done. We have four, five people thumbing their suspenders and saying: No, I object to everything. Well, take your suspenders outside the Chamber, in my judgment, and let's do the work the American people want us to do.

Aviation security is job No. 1. Senator McCain talked about the need to get to this bill. He will be here at 2 o'clock. When he comes to the floor, I am going to be here as well. When he asks unanimous consent to go to the bill, I want to support him. It is unforgivable that hour after hour and day after day this Senate is not doing the business it is intended to do. People talk about the burden of the majority leader. The majority leader has too large a burden, in my judgment, with respect to a few folks who want to hold the Senate up. We know what we ought to do. Let's do it. For those who don't agree—and there are three or four who have deep disagreement with the issue of screening at airports, the screening of luggage—the screening of luggage. If you disagree with that, then offer an amendment. If you win, good for you. You will not, in my judgment, but if you do, fine. Why hold up the Senate and prevent us from passing a bill that is so urgent? It does not make any sense to me.

This really is business as usual, regrettably, at a time when the last thing America needs is business as usual from the Senate. They need a Senate that is engaged and that has its priorities straight and in which everybody steps back a bit, takes a deep breath, and says: We are part of the same team. There is now just us and them. There are the terrorists and the rest of us. The rest of us are trying to do what we can to respond to these heinous acts of mass murder. That is our responsibility.

I remember a story about a person who opened a small retail business on a small Main Street. He had a large glass fish tank installed in the front window for his grand opening. He put out a huge sign that said: This fish tank contains 63 invisible Peruvian man-eating fish. Crowds gathered on Main Street to look at this fish tank. Of course, there was nothing in it, just a sign about invisible fish.

We could perhaps have a sign in the Senate, not about fish, but about invisibility. We are doing nothing. In a time of great national concern, in a time of national emergency, in a time when there are urgent requirements and needs for us to do the right thing, this Senate is doing nothing.

It is not the majority leader's fault. The majority leader has a plan. He has an aviation security bill. He has a national security bill. It is not his fault. It is the fault of two, three, four, or five Members of the Senate who decided for their own reasons they want to shut this place down for a while. What an awful signal to send to the rest of the world.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DORGAN. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. REID. Our friend from Idaho stated the airport security bill is No. 1, terrorism is No. 2, and energy is No. 3. I say to my friend from North Dakota in the form of a question, doesn't the Senator believe we have an obligation to do what is required, and that is pass appropriations bills?

Mr. DORGAN. In response, I say, absolutely. In fact, our colleague from Idaho is on the Appropriations Committee. The first thing you have to do is appropriate the money for the agencies—the FBI, the CIA, the National Security Agency, all the law enforcement functions—and then all of the other functions of the Federal Government. We have to pass the appropriations bills.

We are now operating under a continuing appropriations bill because we in Congress did not get our work done by October 1. It is not as if we are not trying. Senator BYRD and Senator STEVENS, the chairman and ranking member of the Appropriations Committee, are pushing very hard, and we cannot get the appropriations bills to the floor of the Senate.

Do my colleagues know why? Because there is an objection to a motion to proceed to an appropriations bill.

Mr. REID. Does the Senator know the reason for the objections supposedly?

Mr. DORGAN. The objections have nothing to do with appropriations. The objections, as I understand it—there are several different objections to different bills around here; it is one of those pick-your-flavor objections to people who professionally object. As I understand, they do not want appropriations bills to move forward because they are concerned about nominations.

Mr. REID. About judges.

Mr. DORGAN. Yes, nominations of judges. My understanding—the Senator from Nevada might correct me—my understanding is it has taken a substantial amount of time for the administration to move judges to the Congress for consideration. I believe something like 25 or 29 of them came just the first part of August. They are now going through the hearing process.

With respect to judges, as far as I am concerned—and I hope every one of my colleagues feels the same way—let's get judges moving; let's get all the appointments and confirmations moving. As far as I am concerned, the same burden rests on myself. If I object to someone, bring them out and I will vote against them.

By and large, I think most of these nominations are pretty good nominations, but I do not think anybody is trying to hold these up. What has happened is it has taken a great deal of time to get names here, and now the Judiciary Committee is sifting through them to get the hearings in place. The fact we are not even allowed to go to appropriations bills has nothing to do with appropriations; it has to do with some other issue.

Mr. REID. May I ask another question?

Mr. DORGAN. Sure.

Mr. REID. On the Senator's trips back home—and I know he was home this past weekend—has anybody come up and asked the Senator about how the judges were coming in Washington?

Mr. DORGAN. No, I say in response to Senator REID, most people are concerned at this moment about the Senate moving very quickly with some urgency to deal with situations such as aviation security, to deal with the issues of national security and international security responding to terrorism, the antiterrorism bill. Most people are concerned about that.

Obviously, the lingering effects of the September 11 terrorist acts will probably last forever, and it means people are very concerned about this country's response to those specific threats.

Mr. REID. I say to my friend, our friend from Idaho listed 1, 2, 3, his priorities. In listing the priorities of the people from the State of North Dakota, where does the Senator think our moving judges through this system would list in ranking? Does the Senator think they would be in the top 100?

Mr. DORGAN. Probably the top 100. Moving judges is just something we should do. It is not a case that we are not moving judges. That is, in my judgment, a false charge.

If we are talking about what are the priorities, what is the urgency today on Wednesday, first, as Senator McCain said, the urgency is an aviation security bill; second is an antiterrorism bill that has been worked on and largely agreed to; and third, we ought to finish the appropriations bills. We have a responsibility to do that.

The Senator from Idaho is not wrong about energy being a significant issue. It is an issue. I agree with that. I talked today about the commercial airlines and their component part of this economy and their important part of this economy. So, too, is energy. We will not have any economy without energy.

I do not disagree with the notion that energy is a significant issue. I would not necessarily say Senator DASCHLE has the burden of making it third. We have to do the appropriations bills before we do the energy bill. If we can get rid of a few of the objections, we can move these things quickly. There is no reason we should not pass an aviation security bill and send it to the President by tomorrow night. We can pass it today and resolve our differences with the House and move it to the President. There is no reason we cannot do that for this country. We should do that.

The antiterrorism bill I think is about completed. There is no reason we cannot do that as well. What a great signal to the American people.

The interesting thing is—and the Senator from Nevada asked me about what I heard back home—what I heard all weekend in North Dakota was how pleased people were that finally the pettiness seems to be gone from the politics in this country, and good riddance. Finally, people are working together. Finally, it is not so much that you are a Democrat or a Republican. It is not that there is a my side and a your side, it is just that there is an our side. There is only one side in this country, and that is the side that all of us choose to stand on in the fight against terrorism. There is only one side, and it is our side.

That is why I hope that at 2 o'clock this afternoon when Senator McCain comes to the floor with this bipartisan bill on aviation security, that this is something we can clear, move to the floor, offer amendments, and get it done for our side.

Again, it is not Republicans and Democrats. Senator McCain is a Republican. Senator Hollings is a Democrat. They have worked together, I have worked with them and others to put this bill together. This bill represents a response by our side, the American response to an emergency, to an urgent situation. I hope we can avoid the kind of difficulty we have been seeing in recent days.

I ask those who put us in this position of being, as I said, at parade rest day after day when there are so many urgent things to do to rethink that. I can think of several things that make me a bit upset about this body and probably object to one thing or another. I do not intend to do that.

I had an amendment on a bill in the subcommittee I chair. When I brought my subcommittee bill to the floor, I had an amendment that was very important to me and very controversial. I was fully intending to push that amendment and have a big debate and a vote on it. Then September 11 happened, and I brought the bill to the floor after September 11 and said: I do not think it is in the country's interest for me to push this very controversial amendment.

Although it means a lot to me and it is very important to me, I am not going to do it because I do not think that is the way we ought to send signals to the American people about who we are and what we are doing at this point.

I ask others, especially those who have held up the work of the Senate for now about 2 weeks on this issue, think along the same lines and see if we cannot come to some understanding of the urgency of passing an aviation security bill.

We on the Commerce Committee spent a lot of time working on these issues. The leadership of both Senator Hollings and Senator McCain has produced excellent legislation, legislation that will provide real security to commercial airlines and to those who fly in this country, and I hope we are able to do that soon.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE VALUE OF THE FAMILY FARM

Mr. DORGAN. Madam President, I actually came to this Chamber to talk about something else, which I want to do now for about 3 or 4 minutes. But, I was inspired by my colleague from Arizona, Senator McCain, who was talking about the urgency of the aviation security bill and wanted to comment first about that.

I want to speak for a moment about another priority. When I was talking with the Senator from Idaho about priorities, let me describe another one that ranks right near the top, in my judgment. As soon as we finish the legislation dealing with aviation security, the antiterrorism bill, and the appropriations bills, we need in this Congress to turn to the farm bill. If one does not come from farm country, they may not understand the need for a farm bill, but let me describe the urgency of this Congress passing a decent bill that gives family farmers a chance to make a living.

We have been living with a farm bill called the Freedom to Farm Act, which has been a terrible failure for family farmers. It literally has pulled the rug out from under family farmers in our country.

Last Friday, the House of Representatives passed a new farm bill, and good for them. The bill that was passed by the House of Representatives is better than the current farm bill that is now in place. We can make it even better. It shortchanges wheat and barley, for example, on loan rates, and there are some things that I would change.

I say this: The bill the House of Representatives passed is better than the current farm bill. Now the Senate has an obligation to take up a farm bill and pass it before we finish our work this year. We must do that. We do not have the choice. If we do not pass a new farm bill this year and accept the challenge with the House having passed its bill, we will shortchange American farmers in a significant way. There are many families hanging on by their financial fingertips wondering whether they are going to be around to plant the crop next spring. I hope this Congress will say to them that family farmers matter to this country, they strengthen this country, and we are going to give them a farm bill that provides countercyclical help when prices collapse so they can stay around and be part of our country's future.

Now why is that important? Two reasons. One reason is one I have talked about a long time in this Chamber, and that is from both an economic and social standpoint, family farms are important to this country's character and its future. Family values have always rolled from family farms to small towns to big cities, nurturing and refreshing the value system in our country. Having a network of family farm producers producing our food in this country produces more than food. It produces communities, it produces a lifestyle, it produces character in rural America that adds to this country and who we are and what we are.

Even more than that, if one does not care about that—and I do deeply—we could have, perhaps, a country in which we farm from California to Maine with giant agrifactories in which no one lives out on the land. It is just a bunch of corporate bookkeepers. That, in my judgment, erodes and detracts from the culture that has helped make America great. So even if one does not care about family farming—and I do very deeply—even if one believes that agrifactories are the way of the future—and I really disagree with that—from a national security standpoint it makes good sense to have wide dispersal of food production in America.

There was a report the other night on a national television program talking about feedlots that feed 200,000 head of cattle. This report talked about the real possibility of the introduction of bioterrorism through the food supply in concentrations of agriculture production of that size. It is true. How difficult would it be, however, to do that to a food production system which you have a wide network of family farms on America's land producing America's food? From a national security standpoint, it is important that we have support for family farmers.

Europe does it. Europe does it for another reason. Europe has been hungry and decided never again to be hungry and never again to be dependent on concentrations of food producers. So they, in Europe, have a network of producers, small farmers, dotting the landscape of Europe because they have been hungry once and have determined never to do that again, and the best defense against hunger is to have family farmers all across Europe producing their food supply.

The same is true in this country, in my judgment. Exactly the same is true. Add to that the national security implications of having broad distribution of food supplies in this country produced by family farms. Again, as I said when I started, I think family farms produce something very enriching and very important to who we are as a country. Much more than that, they also contribute to this country's national security.

The House of Representatives has passed its farm bill. We have a responsibility in the Senate to pass ours. The difference between the House and the Senate farm bill that would amend or change the Freedom to Farm Act will be hundreds of millions of dollars to farmers in North Dakota alone.

The Freedom to Farm bill was passed when the price of grain was quite high and it collapsed almost immediately, and family farmers have lived now for 4 or 5 years with commodity prices that are far below the cost of production. The result is a whole lot of families are struggling. Many have lost that struggle and have moved from the family farm because they went broke. Others are hanging on, just hoping.

The only thing farmers have ever been able to live on is hope; hope that somehow next spring they would be able to find somebody who would lend them the money to plant a crop; hope if they put the crop in that perhaps it would rain enough so that the crop would grow; hope that it would not rain too much and drown out that crop; hope they did not have insects; hope they did not have hail; hope that crop disease did not destroy the crop.

If beyond all of those hopes they finally raised a crop, hope when they combined or harvested that crop and put it in a truck and drove it to an elevator that there would be a price that was decent. With that kind of hope, farmers deserve our help during the tough times, and it is my hope the Senate will understand its responsibility right now in the next several weeks to take up the challenge of the House and pass a farm bill, a good farm bill, that says to family farmers we are standing with them, we are standing behind them, and we want to provide a bridge over price valleys to try to help them through these tough times. If we do that, it also will strengthen our country. That also will strengthen our economy.

We will not have economic recovery in this country if we say it does not matter what happens to those who live on the land; it does not matter what happens to family farmers.

Economic recovery also begins by helping those who produce America's food supply, and I hope the Senate will take up this challenge in the next couple of weeks.

I conclude by saying this: I come from rural America. I was raised in a town of 300 people. We raised horses, had some cattle. When I left my home county—it was a fairly large county geographically—there were 5,000 people living there. There are now 3,000 people living there. Like most rural counties, it is shrinking. The Lutheran minister in one of the communities in my home county told me she has four funerals for every wedding at which she officiates.

There is this movie "Four Weddings and a Funeral." This is the opposite: four funerals for every wedding. Why is that the case? Because in those small towns and those rural areas, people are getting older, the population is aging. Very few new people are moving in, very few young people are taking over the farms, because they can't make a living.

As the age increases, the economies of the communities are shrinking. What used to be a plum is now a prune—my home county and thousands like it across this country.

If one just thinks this is about numbers and balance sheets, let me again describe how it is not. It is about dreams, about people's lives. There was an auction sale, which happens too often in my State. A fellow named Arlo was the auctioneer. He told me he was auctioning a tractor at the auction sale. People bid and bought the tractor. At the end of the auction sale, where he auctioned many things from the family farm because the farmers could not make it, a little boy, about 9 years old, came up to him. He was the son of the farmer who was being sold out. He grabbed the auctioneer around his leg, and he kind of shouted at him. He said: You sold my dad's tractor. Arlo kind of patted him on the shoulder to try to calm him down. This little boy had tears in his eyes. He looked up and said: I wanted to drive that tractor when I got big.

This is about dreams, about families, about kids. It is about the future. Family farming is much more than just business, it is part of our culture. Our country needs to understand that. We have a responsibility to write a new farm bill, one that works, one that works for family farmers.

In conclusion, as I have said before, if writing a farm bill is not about investing in families who farm in this country, retaining a network of families across the prairies of this country, then we don't even need a farm bill. We don't need a farm bill to help the giant agri-factories. If someone wants to buy 3,000 milk cows and milk them 3 times a day, God bless them. They don't need Uncle Sam's money. But a family with a family yard and a light that shines over where that family sleeps, where the dreams reside, cannot make it through tough times and price depressions. The only way to save family farms when the prices collapse is that the Government say: This part of our economy matters; we hope you get through the tough times—we will build a bridge over the valleys. If the Government is willing to do that, it will retain a food supply network populated on average by family farms that produce that food supply.

In a world desperately hungry, where so many people go to bed at night with an ache in their belly, when thousands die every day from hunger and hunger-related causes, it is unthinkable to me that what we produce in so great abundance somehow has no value. They take it to the elevator, and farmers are told their grain has no value. It has value to the people in the world who are starving. It has value to the 500 million people who go to bed at night hungry. But our farmers are told, that which you produced, which rested on your hope in the spring to produce a crop, has now no value in the fall when it is harvested.

There is a major disconnection in this country about the value of agriculture, its worth to family farmers, its worth to the world and what it contributes to the stability of the world. We had better think through in a more clear way how all of that fits together. Food is an enormous asset. Those families who produce it are a significant asset to this country. It is time the Congress understands that.

I yield the floor and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ANWR

Mr. REID. Madam President, we have spoken several times today about energy policy. I will spend a few more minutes talking about something that has created a lot of confusion and controversy and in some respects bad feelings; that is, what we should do about ANWR.

The majority leader has indicated the volume of the business to be completed by the Senate is heavy. The subject of national energy policy is important. But we also acknowledge the jurisdiction of national energy policy cuts across several committees, all of which have a hand in charting the future of that policy. Of course, that is one of the main reasons Senator DASCHLE yesterday indicated we need to do an energy bill. If we are going to do it sometime in the next few months, it has to be done by bringing it to the floor directly. When it comes, it will occupy much of the Senate time.

I hope, however, we will not devote the Senate's precious time to a debate on drilling in ANWR. That debate, if we choose to have it, will be divisive, as it has been. Many do not believe you can drill in ANWR, and if you do so, it fundamentally changes the character of this national treasure, this pristine wilderness. We also believe whatever the size of the footprint of ANWR, it opens the possibility of a larger, more destructive footprint in the form of an oil spill. It is tough, very difficult to prevent accidents. It is very difficult and tougher still to prevent those who may be out to cause problems in the wilderness. It is not a speculative threat.

At the Trans-Alaskan pipeline last week, as most of my colleagues are aware, a lone rifleman shot some holes through the pipeline. This appears not to have been an act of terror but an act of one person out to do some damage to a critical part of the Nation's infrastructure. This action, where holes were shot in the pipeline, rupturing an 800-mile-long pipeline which spans from Prudhoe Bay to Valdez, gushed oil from 2:30 in the afternoon to 3 a.m. the following Saturday morning. That is 36 hours. They thought something was wrong but couldn't find where the leak was.

It took 36 hours to locate, plug the hole, and stop the rush of oil. I referred earlier to 250,000 gallons, but it was actually 285,000 gallons of crude oil spewed over many acres surrounding this pipeline. The cleanup crews have worked hard to capture about 88,000 gallons of that crude oil, leaving 200,000 gallons over that pristine area.

When you go to the gas station—and most of us have to pump our own gasoline because they are almost all self-service stations—if you fill that tank a little bit too full, the gas runs all over the pavement. When I was a younger man, I worked for Standard Oil and later Chevron. I pumped gas. One of our jobs was to put as much gas as you could in a car, but if it spilled out, just a little, it ran all over, and it was embarrassing. People thought you wasted 25 cents' worth of gas when it was probably half a penny or a penny's worth. Think what 250,000 gallons of crude oil would do to any environment.

It is unclear how we will clean this up. The Environmental Protection Agency and the Alaska Department of Environmental Protection estimate they may leave the oil-soaked land in place and try to treat the land. Others say maybe they have to remove all this oil-soaked brush and trees and even treat the soil. So it is not clear how they are going to clean it up, but it is clear it is terribly difficult to prevent lone acts of ignorance, terrorism, and simply accidents involving our energy infrastructure. I think we would all be well advised to not have another 800-mile pipeline.

Madam President, I will ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a number of editorials. I just picked up a few here. We were on the Defense authorization bill when various Senators on the other side held up this legislation because they wanted the energy bill on it. These editorials from the Philadelphia Inquirer, Los Angeles Times, New York Times, Charlotte Observer, Chicago Tribune, and the Charleston Gazette—just to pick a few newspapers—the last one is the Albuquerque Journal—say this is wrong; you cannot tie energy policy to things that have no bearing, no relation to it.

I hope, as important as energy policy is, that we move forward at the right time and the majority leader understands the importance of it. We are going to do that. But we recognize the divisive nature of ANWR.

I ask unanimous consent these articles be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BACK TO NORMAL

ENERGY ISSUES SIGNAL A RETURN TO PARTISANSHIP

Brief though it was, the hiatus from political hijinks has begun to wane in Washington.

Under the guise of national security, some elected officials have started to slip pet projects into unrelated legislation, grinding progress to a halt.

Last week, the worst offender, Sen. James Inhofe (R., Okla.), stalled an urgent $345 billion defense authorization bill by hitching it to the notion of drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge in Alaska.

Talk about poisoning a bipartisan well. Few issues are more divisive.

One amendment to the defense bill contains the entire House energy bill, which was passed in July. Rather than debate it on its merits, Sen. Inhofe suggested the Senate rubber-stamp it as an after thought to needed defense appropriation.

This is no way to do business—even in wartime.

The energy bill has been shelved all summer, waiting behind faith-based initiatives, campaign-finance reform and a patients' bill of rights. As U.S. policy-makers rightly focus on the Sept. 11 attacks, energy probably should move up on the domestic agenda.

But realize that, since the attacks, gas supply and prices have been stable. The organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries agree Thursday to maintain its current production level, despite a precipitous drop in the price of crude oil. Unlike last fall, the supply of winter heating fuel is stable, with lower prices expected.

A growing consensus among energy analysts, government officials and economists predicts that the Sept. 11 attacks will have no short-term impact on energy supply. Even if the immediate supply were threatened, drilling in the Arctic refuge isn't the answer. No oil would flow for 10 years—the time needed to construct oil fields and a delivery route.

And even if the most optimistic estimates were correct, Arctic refuge oil would reduce imports only a few percentage points. Nearly half of U.S. demand would still be met by foreign oil. The country will remain vulnerable to the world market as long as demand for fossil fuels keeps rising.

The United States needs an energy overhaul, not just more oil. The long-term supply-and-demand problems outlined by Vice President Cheney's energy team last spring haven't changed. Remedies must include new technologies and conservation, as well as improvements in conventional fuels.

An energy program too important to be passed as a tangential political maneuver. The Senate should reject these amendments.

ARCTIC DRILLING IS STILL BAD

The United States needs to take decisive steps to improve its security against terrorism but should be wary of attempts to use the crisis to stampede Congress into bad policy decisions. In one such attempt some lawmakers are trying to rush through legislation to open the Alaska National Wildlife Refuge (ANWR) to oil exploration and drilling.

"We can't wait another day," House Republican Whip Tom DeLay of Texas raged at a press conference. "This country needs energy produced by Americans in America for America," declared Rep. W.J. "Billy" Tauzin (R-La.). Hold on. Drilling in the Arctic refuge was a bad idea before Sept. 11 and is just as bad today. Rushing the energy bill through the Senate wouldn't make the ANWR provision better.

The facts are unchanged. The refuge is estimated to contain 3.2 billion barrels of oil that can be pumped without economic loss, enough to supply the nation for about six months. It would take roughly 10 years for these supplies to reach gasoline pumps. We could save five times as much oil by raising the fuel efficiency standard of new autos by three miles per gallon. There may be just as much oil in other parts of Alaska, including the 23-million-acre National Petroleum Reserve, now open to the oil companies. Domestic production can and should expand where it is economically feasible and does not threaten special areas.

The wildlife refuge, on the north slope of Alaska between the Brooks Range and the Arctic Ocean, is the home of the 129,000-head Porcupine caribou herd, which migrates more than 400 miles to the coastal plain to calve. The refuge also has polar and grizzly bears, Dall sheep, musk oxen, wolves, foxes and myriad bird species.

Once the first drill pierces the tundra, the refuge will be changed forever, despite the denials of drilling proponents. Would we harness Old Faithful for its geothermal energy? Put a hydroelectric plant at Yosemite Falls? You could not measure the potential cost to the environment in Yellowstone or Yosemite, nor can you in the Arctic.

HARD TIMES, BAD LAWS

Congress shouldn't be stampeded by terrorist attacks. Don't get the idea that politics has been suspended while Washington focuses on terrorism. In fact, supporters of some politically controversial proposals are reshaping them to make it appear they're necessary to help win the struggle against terrorism.

Take the Bush Administration's proposal to drill for oil in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, for instance. Some proponents of drilling say Congress should move quickly to allow to it in order to lessen U.S. dependence on oil from the politically unstable Middle East.

Baloney. Drilling in Alaska wouldn't make a dime's worth of difference in U.S. dependence on imported oil. At present the United States produces less than half the petroleum it consumes. Economist Paul Krugman, writing in the New York Times, notes that drilling in the wildlife refuge, at its peak, would supply only about 5 percent of our consumption. Even with drilling there going full steam, we'd still depend on imports for 45 percent of our needs.

The quest for a cut in the capital gains tax is irrelevant to the present crisis. Some Republican backers of a rate cut say it's necessary to pump money into the economy to pull the nation out of a recession.

More baloney. The way to jumpstart the economy is to put money in the hands of people who are likely to spend it quickly. Simply rebating the federal payroll taxes would do that quicker and better than tinkering with the capital gains tax. And a one-time rebate would be in keeping with Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan's caution against making long-term changes to deal with short-term problems. "It's better to be smart than quick," he said. While Mr. Greenspan favors reducing or eliminating the capital gains tax over time, he does not favor doing it now.

The disaster of Sept. 11 didn't change the arguments for and against drilling in the wildlife refuge or cutting the capital gains tax. Politicians who suggest otherwise are attempting to use the terrorist attack to advance an unrelated political agenda. Congress rightly feels a need to do something, but it shouldn't be stampeded into doing something wrong.

STRONG-ARM TACTICS IN THE SENATE

Members of Congress have largely resisted the temptation to exploit this moment of national crisis to promote pet causes. One exception is a small group of senators and House members, led by Senator James Inhofe, an Oklahoma Republican, who favor opening up the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to oil drilling. Last week Mr. Inhofe threatened to take the energy bill passed earlier this year by the House and add it as an amendment to the high-priority Defense Department authorization bill. The energy bill includes a provision opening the refuge to drilling.

Tom Daschle, the majority leader, has scheduled a cloture vote for this morning. If successful, the vote would make it impossible to attach non-germane amendments like Mr. Inhofe's to the bill. Senators who care about sound legislative procedure—not to mention a rational approach to the country's energy problems—will vote for cloture.

Drilling in the Arctic is a contentious issue on which the Senate is closely divided. Railroading the idea through without proper hearings defies elementary standards of fairness. There is also no evidence that drilling in the refuge will significantly reduce America's dependence on foreign oil. The House bill that includes the drilling provision is itself an ill-conceived mishmash of tax breaks that would do a lot for the oil, gas and coal industries without putting the country's long-term energy strategy on a sound footing.

Reducing America's dependence on foreign sources of energy is a complicated business, and there are many experts who believe that the surest road to energy security is to improve the efficiency of our cars, homes, factories and offices, and to invest heavily in non-traditional sources of fuel. Before the terrorist attack, the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee had begun extensive hearings aimed at producing an energy bill that would balance exploration and conservation. This measured process should now be allowed to resume, free of pressure from partisan maneuvering.

[From the Chicago Tribune, Oct. 2, 2001]

THE GREASY POLITICS OF ALASKA OIL

In a display of unity and statesmanship seldom seen in Washington, most politicians have put aside partisanship and personal squabbles to concentrate on helping a traumatized nation recover from the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11.

Then there's Sen. Frank Murkowski, a Republican from Alaska.

Last Wednesday, he threatened to bring all Senate business to a halt unless there was a vote on the Bush administration's energy bill, which contains a provision to open Alaska's National Wildlife Refuge to oil drilling—a pet project of his and a few others in the Senate.

"If I have to hold up normal legislative business, I will do that," he said.

Way to go, senator: Your sense of national priorities is about as keen as your timing. What better moment to push your agenda than now, when your colleagues and the nation are still mourning the dead and pondering how to prevent another terrorist attack?

Though drilling was approved by the House earlier this summer by a comfortable margin, it faces much tougher going in the Senate. Indeed it's a short-sighted proposal that would damage one of the few pristine wilderness areas left in the country. It ought to be defeated; the terrorist attacks don't change that.

Yet, Murkowski and a few others—Sens. James Inhofe (R-OK) and Larry Craig (R-ID)—are using the national crisis to grease the drilling proposal through the Senate with a minimum of debate.

Murkowski's office says the oil could start gurgling through the pipelines as soon as a year from now—if only the Senate would pass legislation to dispense with lawsuits, environmental studies and other inconveniences.

In other words, forget the details and let'er rip.

Any responsible plan to drill in Alaska will take anywhere between 7 and 10 years of study, planning, engineering and construction. At that, the oil from there would have just a small impact on the amount of oil the nation needs to import. In the short or the long term, drilling in the refuge has little to do with the terrorist challenges the country faces.

What an astonishingly crass move, to manipulate the Sept. 11 tragedy to get the energy bill approved. Threatening to shut down the Senate smacks of gross political opportunism.

[From the Charleston Gazette, Oct. 1, 2001]

ENERGY

DON'T USE TRAGEDY

Some energy industry executives would use Sept. 11 to further their own greedy agendas. Sadly, some in Congress are willing to help them use this national tragedy to add billions of dollars to their bottom lines.

Sen. James Inhofe, R-Okla., is attempting to amend the controversial House energy bill into the unrelated defense appropriations bill. That energy bill includes billions of dollars in subsidies to oil, gas and coal interests, and it would open the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to exploration and drilling.

Coincidentally, Inhofe is Congress' top recipient of campaign money from the oil and gas industry. He's already received $56,200 this year from drillers, according to the Center for Responsive Politics—nearly $20,000 more than he received in the entire 1999–2000 election cycle.

Inhofe says this is a natural time to talk about the security implications of the nation's dependence on foreign oil. Fine. What does that have to do with giving billions of dollars to polluting industries? What does that have to do with despoiling the nation's last pristine ecosystem?

If the United States wants to lessen its dependence on foreign oil, there are better ways. Congress could finally raise the gas mileage standards for cars, and apply passenger car standards to minivans and SUVs.

Congress could encourage alternative energy sources that cause less environmental damage.

This debate was poised to happen before the Sept. 11 attack. But energy industry lackeys like Inhofe want to use that tragedy to sidestep Senate debate and get what they want.

This shameful attempt to use the deaths of thousands of Americans is grotesque. West Virginia senators Robert C. Byrd and Jay Rockefeller should show their respect for the dead, and for what the United States has been put through, by voting against this callous amendment.

[From the Albuquerque Journal, Oct. 1, 2001]

POLITICAL MANEUVER BLOCKS DEFENSE BILL

So, is this a time of national unity, in which divisive policy issues are to be set aside while we deal with the emergency at hand? Or, is the rush to pass the enabling legislation to clear our military for action just another golden opportunity to steamroll unrelated partisan issues over the opposition?

For some Republicans, it is the latter.

Sen. James Inhofe R-Okla., has refused to withdraw his amendment to the Defense Authorization Bill that would tack on energy legislation passed by the House and a Senate energy bill sponsored by Sen. Frank Murkowski, R-Alaska. Both would open the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to oil exploration.

Fast-track solving of legislative problems by tacking amendments onto unrelated bills is a congressional practice in normal times, if a bit short on legislative honesty.

But, these are not normal times. The maneuver makes a mockery of the touted bipartisanship to deal with the situation left in the wake of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

There have been bipartisan calls for quick action on the $345 billion defense bill.

"Our troops are counting on it; the Pentagon needs it," said Senate Majority Leader Thomas Daschle, D-S.D. "I can't think of a more urgent piece of legislation than this right now under these circumstances."

Sen. Inhofe, however, sees the urgency only as a rare opportunity for a bit of political war profiteering—if he can get a majority in the Senate to go along.

The question of drilling in ANWR is a contentious issue Congress will have to deal with at some point. But, blocking an essential defense bill in an effort to slip it past without debate on its merits is a reprehensible tactic in these troubled times.

To his disgrace, Inhofe has already blocked action on the defense bill until next week. Senate colleagues should reject his maneuver and get back to unity of purpose in addressing the urgent task at hand.

Time enough to pick up on the contentious and important ANWR debate on its own merits after Congress has done all it can to provide for the anti-terrorism effort ahead.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. INHOFE. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be dispensed with.

CONSIDERATION OF AN ENERGY BILL

Mr. INHOFE. I was hoping the assistant majority leader would stay on the floor so I could tell him I was very pleased with what happened last night. I have dealt with the assistant majority leader and majority leader for several weeks now in an attempt to get an energy bill to the floor. I understand an agreement has now been announced that the majority leader and assistant majority leader will bring one to the floor.

I started to say to Senator REID, when I saw him walk out—I wanted him to be here so he could hear me compliment him on this action. I think it is critical.

I believe we should have gone through an extensive committee markup. On the other hand, as the weeks go by and we get closer to adjournment, I think this would be an impossible thing to do at this point.

Second, I am hoping when this bill comes to the floor—and there is now a commitment from Senator DASCHLE to bring it to the floor during this Congress, before adjournment—that we get it in time to be very deliberative, in time to consider all the amendments.

I do not know what this energy bill will look like when it comes to the floor. I will read this now to make sure it is in the RECORD in case someone else hasn't done so:

At the request of Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee Chairman Jeff Bingaman today suspended any further markup of energy legislation for this session of Congress. Instead, the chairman will propose comprehensive and balanced energy legislation that can be added by the majority leader to the Senate Calendar for potential action prior to adjournment.

While it did not have a chance to go through the committee process, which I would have preferred, when it became apparent that it was not going to go through, I thought the next best thing was to go ahead and send it straight to the floor; let us work on it here. We need to put amendments on it. We need to be in a position where we are able to offer the amendments to make sure it has the necessary provisions to do something about an energy policy for the future.

I do not say this in at all a partisan vein because I started, in the 1980s, trying to get the Reagan administration to have an energy policy.

Then I tried to get the Bush administration, the Bush I administration, to have an energy policy for this Nation. They would not do it. I thought surely he would, coming in from the oil patch, but he did not.

Then of course we tried during the Clinton administration, and they decided they were not going to do it.

So this is our chance right now. As long as we have lip service, saying, yes, it is important; yes, it is important for our national security to have an energy policy, but not doing anything about it, we are doing a great disservice to our Nation.

Here we are in two wars for all practical purposes right now. In Iraq you may have noted this morning another one of our Predators was shot down, and of course what is happening in our war on terrorism around the world. This is no time to be playing around with what is probably the single most important aspect of our ability to defend America, and that is our current reliance upon foreign sources for our ability to fight a war.

When Don Hodel was Secretary of Energy and Secretary of the Interior, back during the Reagan administration, he and I went around the Nation giving speeches as to why our dependence on foreign countries for our ability to fight a war is not an energy issue; it is a national security issue. We went, I remember, to New York and Chicago and different places to try to explain to people we cannot be dependent upon foreign sources for our oil and still be able to fight wars and defend America as the American people expect of us.

At the time that Don Hodel and I went around the Nation, we were 37 percent dependent upon foreign sources for our ability to fight a war. Today that is now 56.6 percent.

What I am saying is we are importing 56.6 percent of the oil we are using to run America and to fight wars. Today, in this current environment, it costs much more, in terms of amounts of oil, to fight a war than it did in the past.

Of the 56.6 percent that we are dependent upon for our ability to fight a war—we have to say it in that way—half of that is coming from the Middle East. Do you know who the largest contributor to our dependency is, in the Middle East? It is Iraq. Here we are at war with Iraq. They just shot down one of our Predators, a third one, this morning. We are sending battle groups over there to defend America, sending them into combat situations with Iraq, yet we are dependent upon Iraq for our ability to fight a war against Iraq. That is preposterous. It is not believable that this could be happening.

That is why I say we have to get out of this position. We have to establish a national energy policy that is comprehensive, that does have as one of its cornerstones the maximum that we are going to be dependent upon foreign sources for our ability to fight a war. And that is not just the Middle East; that is other parts of the world also.

To be in a 56.6 percent dependency—and, incidentally, by the end of this decade, if we don't do something to dramatically change it, it is going to be 60 percent. That is 60 percent dependent upon foreign governments for our ability to fight a war.

What happened last night is a major breakthrough because we now have the majority leader stating that he will have a comprehensive bill before us to vote on before we adjourn. That is major. We are going to have to consider all aspects. I don't want to see something coming down that is not comprehensive. It is going to have to talk about where our untapped resources are in this country.

I can see right now all the lobby of the far left environmental extremists are going to say this is an ANWR bill. It is not an ANWR bill. Of the comprehensive bill, H.R. 4, from the House of Representatives, that passed—and that is the one we will probably go into conference with—out of 200 pages, only 2 pages talk about ANWR. That is a very minuscule part of it. It covers a lot of items. For example, we have untapped resources in the United States other than ANWR. We have some offshore opportunities, where we have tremendous reserves.

I happen to be from the State of Oklahoma. We had huge stripper well production. When we talk about stripper wells, we are talking about small wells, shallow wells that only produce 15 or fewer barrels a day.

But if you had producing today, right now, all of those stripper wells, or marginal wells that we have plugged in the last 10 years, then it would equal more oil than we are currently importing from Saudi Arabia. That shows it is out there.

Why can't they do it? They can't do it because to lift a barrel of oil out of the ground, it costs us 10 times as much in the United States in marginal production as it does in Saudi Arabia, for example. So it is not the price of the oil so much as, when they make this decision as to whether or not to explore for these marginal wells, they have to have some idea of what the price of a barrel of oil is going to be when it is ultimately produced—and that will be a period of a year. We have jumped around from $8 to $35 a barrel in less than a year, so how can they predict that? That has to be included in a comprehensive energy policy so we can exploit all of these opportunities.

The other day I was on a program with one of our well-respected Senators, and I made the comment almost in jest that you can't expect to run the most highly industrialized nations in the history of the world on windmills. He said, in fact, you can. He talked about this wind technology. Fine. We want to go after these other technologies and exploit other opportunities out there—hydroelectric, the sun, and the wind. But until that comes along, we have to look very seriously not just at oil and our dependency upon foreign nations but almost nuclear.

I can remember back in the 1960s when people would protest nuclear plants. Now they realize there is a serious problem with the quality of our air. A lot of those people are saying: Let's go back and reexamine nuclear energy. No. 1, it is the cheapest; No. 2, it is the cleanest; and, No. 3, it is the most readily available.

I think we should address that in a comprehensive energy policy. That is what I hope will be on the floor.

We have something that is very significant. I am sure the American people, since the days of my going around the Nation with Don Hodel back in the 1980s, and since we went through a very large Persian Gulf war in 1990, now realize we can't be dependent upon the Middle East. That is the hotbed. That is where the problems are today. We are concerned about North Korea and Afghanistan and about many areas, but the Persian Gulf region is where there is a tremendous threat—yes, almost a terrorist threat.

I commend the majority leader for making the agreement to bring up a comprehensive bill. But I am asking him, since it is in his lap—he is totally responsible for keeping his word on this—that he bring something to the floor early enough so we can go through the process, debate it, and have amendments. Then we can go to conference with the House. They have already passed theirs way ahead of us. We can come up with an energy policy, which we have been trying to get through. The President, I am sure, will be happy and anxious to sign it. He already stated that he would this year before we adjourn.

It is something that we must do. It is something that is long overdue. But the opportunity is here today.

I feel very strongly that this is an opportunity we cannot bypass. I commend the majority leader and am anxious to see what that product looks like. I hope we are able to work on that product and get it to conference so we get an energy policy and get it signed.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DAYTON). The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. EDWARDS). Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS SUBJECT TO THE CALL OF THE CHAIR

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the Senate stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

Thereupon, the Senate, at 1:07 p.m. recessed until 2:04 p.m. and reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. BAYH).

CHARGING OF TIME

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield for a unanimous consent request?

Mr. CLELAND. I yield.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I think it is clear for the record, but we wanted to make sure that the last approximately hour and a half is charged against the postclosure proceedings on the bill before the Senate. I am quite sure that is the case, but I wanted to make it clear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AVIATION SECURITY ACT—MOTION TO PROCEED

Mr. CLELAND. Mr. President, almost exactly 1 month ago to the day this Nation was rocked by the most horrific act of terrorism ever leveled against the United States. Following the events of September 11, we resolved as a nation to work together to secure our borders and do all in our power to prevent a repeat of the kind of assault that shook this country 30 days ago. Key to the security of America is our ability to quickly put in place enhanced security measures at our airports and on our planes to ensure that our skies are safe and that Americans are no longer afraid to fly. Yet the legislation that is key to ensuring that America's aviation system is secure—the very measure that is our most direct legislative response to the hijacking of four U.S. airliners—has been stalled now for a week. This body is in agreement on many issues in this bill and we have compromised on others. It is time that we bring this critically important bill to the floor and openly debate the differences which remain.

Whether or not to "federalize" airport security personnel is an issue that still deeply divides this body. I also attended the briefing by El Al officials which the distinguished Chairman of the Commerce Committee and others have referred to throughout this debate. We are all aware of the extraordinary security measures the Israeli airline has put in place and the extraordinary success of those measures. Because of the constant threat of terrorism to Israel and the Israeli people, El Al has taken the following steps to ensure the safety of its passengers and the integrity of its operations: armed, plain-clothes, in-flight guards; extensive passenger questioning and Interpol background checks; extensive luggage inspections, both visual inspection by employees and high-tech explosive detection, including the placing of luggage and cargo in decompression chambers; and secure cockpit doors that remain locked from the inside. Since the implementation of these measures, no Israeli airline has ever been hijacked. This record speaks for itself.

In that briefing the El Al officials were asked if airport security personnel were government workers or contract workers. The response was telling. The El Al officials did not even know what contract workers are. They want government workers on the front line to enforce the tightest security measures possible. As others have pointed out, we want Secret Service, government employees to provide the greatest protection possible to the President of the United States. We want Federal law enforcement officers to protect the elected members of the House and Senate. Why would we want any less for the people of this Nation?

There was a recent article in the Atlanta Constitution about an Atlanta-based security company which provides baggage screening for 17 of the 20 largest airports in the country, including baggage screening for Dulles and Newark airports—where two of the four hijacked planes originated on September 11. According to the Atlanta Constitution:

The company has 19,000 employees and provides security for office buildings, colleges and Federal facilities. In the past year, it pled guilty to allowing untrained employees—including some with criminal backgrounds—to operate checkpoints in Philadelphia International Airport. Its parent company was fined $1.2 million. In addition, the company is also said to have falsified test scores for at least 2 dozen applicants and hired at least 14 security screeners with criminal backgrounds ranging from aggravated assault and burglary to drug and firearm possession. The highest advertised job at this company pays $7 to $8.50 an hour.

Mr. President, to repeat, these workers are paid $7 to $8 an hour. With minimum wage pay like this, no wonder many of these screeners look at going to work at a fast-food restaurant as a promotion. Clearly we cannot have this attitude as our first line of defense.

In the El Al briefing, there was a slide describing the onion-like layers of security in their aviation system. At the outer layer was the layer of intelligence—key to any effective protection of our skies and borders. In Israel, when there is knowledge of a possible security threat, there is immediately a line of intelligence communication from the highest levels of government down, and in that intelligence loop are the security officers at Ben Gurion Airport. This is a compelling reason why we should have Federal workers at the airport checkpoints in this country. There are over 700 of these checkpoints at over 420 airports. We need a domestic version of the Customs Service as our first line of defense against hijackers.

The General Accounting Office in assessing our aviation vulnerabilities stated that "the human element is the weakest link in the chain." We saw that on September 11. The airline industry is in favor of federalizing airport security personnel. More importantly, the American people support it.

In a recent national poll, 82 percent of the people surveyed said they would support having the Federal Government take over security screening at U.S. airports even if it cost $2 billion a year.

All of us appreciate the value of rapid response in combating terrorism. It is time to bring the aviation security bill to the floor and fulfill the number one responsibility of Congress: to work to ensure the safety and protection of the Nation and its citizens. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I note the Senator from Oklahoma is not in the Chamber, so I will withhold until he reaches the floor. What I intend to do when he does reach the floor is ask unanimous consent that we vitiate the remaining hours on postclosure and proceed to immediate consideration of S. 1447.

Today there was an ABC news poll that showed 42 percent of the American people are still concerned about flying on an airliner.

The day before yesterday there was a meeting in New York City between the Speaker of the House, the Democrat leaders, Representative GEPHARDT, and 20 business and labor leaders, as well as Alan Greenspan, Chairman of the Federal Reserve. According to published media reports, there were strong recommendations by all these individuals to move on airport security so the confidence of the American people could be restored and the economy would have a chance to recover.

For 2 weeks we have been trying to get this bill considered. Meanwhile, we have American men and women who are in combat, putting their lives on the line for the safety of American citizens and we cannot even act on an airport security bill. I don't feel like running through the litany of all the things that have happened, all the meetings the Senator from Texas and I have had, and not had, the scheduled meetings and the unscheduled meetings, the canceled meetings, and the negotiations. This legislation is being held up for reasons that have nothing to do with airport security. There are legitimate differences of opinion on this issue. I respect those differences.

The Senator from Oklahoma was going to state when he objects that he is afraid a nongermane amendment or nonrelevant amendment may be added to the bill. I oppose, as does the distinguished chairman, Senator HOLLINGS, nonrelevant and nongermane amendments, but, at the same time, that is not reason to block the legislation from being considered.

Because there are objections that are related or nonrelated to this legislation, we are blocking the legislation because of certain select interests or concerns. That is not the way we should do business. The way we should do business is to take up bills, vote on them, have debate, have amendments, and vote on them. That is the way the process is supposed to work.

Is this an issue that is a minor policy disagreement? Is this an issue that has to do with only a small number of Americans, maybe the State of Arizona or just the State of Texas? No. This is an issue of compelling requirements. Very few Americans, if any, will ever forget the sight of those airliners flying into the World Trade Center. All of us will remember it as long as we live. Every time they see it, they will want to know that their Government, working with the elected representatives, not by Executive order but by working with their elected officials, has taken every measure possible to ensure the safety of the flying public, which is a large number of Americans.

Supposedly at 4:57, as a result of my parliamentary inquiry before lunch, we will be going to the bill, but the reason I propose a unanimous consent request now is by the time there are opening statements tonight, we will have killed another day. Perhaps we may even use all of tomorrow. Usually we don't do a lot of work around here on Friday. And we would then have expended another week before we could get on this legislation.

I thank the Senator from Texas for all of her hard work on this issue. I know the Senator from Oklahoma will object and give his well-thought-out reasons for doing so. I know the Senator from Texas will make her comments. The time for backroom negotiations and conversations and proposals and counterproposals is over. We have a bill. We had hearings in the Commerce Committee on airport and airline security. This legislation is a direct result of those hearings. This is not something made up in the backroom. This legislation was produced through thoughtful consultation with the best minds in America that we could find. We think it is vital we move forward with this legislation.

At this time, I ask unanimous consent we vitiate the remaining hours in postclosure and move directly to the consideration of S. 1447, the Aviation Security Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. NICKLES. Reserving the right to object, I wonder if my colleague and friend from Arizona would be willing to modify his unanimous consent request, that he amend it to say that all amendments be relevant to the underlying airport security bill?

Mr. MCCAIN. In response to the Senator from Oklahoma, that would be a highly unusual request, as he knows, because the normal procedure in the Senate is to take up legislation. If there is a concern about nongermane or nonrelevant amendments, then a cloture motion is filed, as has already been filed in one case.

So, no, I do not agree to modify my request for that because I think it would be depriving Members, at least temporarily, of their voice and their concerns and their amendments that they might want to propose. I promise the Senator from Oklahoma I will object and vote against and argue against, as the distinguished chairman of the Commerce Committee stated, any nonrelevant and nongermane amendment. I hope that satisfies his concerns.

Mr. NICKLES. Further reserving the right to object, I appreciate the remarks of my friend and colleague. If we can keep the bill itself pretty much to relevant amendments, I think and believe we can get this bill passed this week.

For the information of our colleagues, we are very close to concluding the antiterrorism package. I appreciate the patience of my friend and colleague from Arizona. We have been trying to pass two bills this week: one, an antiterrorism package, and the other an airport security package. I hope and believe we can pass both this week. The antiterrorism package is much closer to being there. In fact, it is our hope we can pass it today. We are in the process of trying to conclude a unanimous consent request to pass the antiterrorism package today that will be in agreement and hopefully have the vote by 6 o'clock tonight.

With that in mind, the fact we are so close to doing the antiterrorism package and getting it to conclusion at this point, I object to the unanimous consent request proposed by the Senator from Arizona.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is heard.

The Senator from Texas.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I am getting as frustrated as the senior Senator from Arizona. We have been working on aviation security since September 12, 2001. I introduced the bill that would increase the number of sky marshals that very week. I could see the traveling public was going to be stunned. Of course what has happened is even worse than that. The impact on the economy of having people stay out of airplanes and airports is staggering. It was a domino effect. The airlines are flying at half capacity. They are not flying as many flights. Hotels are not full. Rental cars are not being rented. The cancellation of conventions all over the country is being reported.

We can do something about this. We have been working on it in a very bipartisan way. There are very few disagreements on the bill—things we can work out or have amendments, vote them up or down, and we can send a decent package to the President.

What is holding the legislation up is extraneous amendments. These amendments may have merit, but they are not worked out yet and they are not relevant to aviation security. We are dealing with some very complicated matters. Antiterrorism is complicated. We have tried to keep that clean so that the disagreements are on the bill and disagreements on other issues don't encroach on that bill.

We need to do the same thing for aviation security so we are not talking about differences on an unemployment bill in the middle of other differences on the relevant bill and not be able to come to the conclusion on the aviation security bill because of something that does not relate to aviation security.

The President wants to deal with unemployment. We want to deal with unemployment. We can do that in the economic stimulus package or in a freestanding bill. That would be the responsible thing to do, particularly when we know if there are going to be other jobs available. Right now we have a huge loss of jobs in the aviation industry. But we are trying to add jobs in aviation security. We are trying to add jobs in the defense industry because we are going to be ratcheting up our defense needs. So let's give our employees a chance to seek other jobs before we pass something when we are not even sure how much we are going to need or if that is relevant by the time we see if these other jobs can be filled.

But it is a whole different issue. So why not talk about aviation security? I see the distinguished Commerce Committee chairman, Senator HOLLINGS. He has worked with Senator ROCKEFELLER, the chairman of the Aviation subcommittee. I am the ranking member of the Aviation subcommittee, and Senator MCCAIN is the ranking member of the full committee. We have worked on this bill.

We have worked with the White House trying to come to the agreements on this bill, and we are very close. We are going to strengthen the cockpit doors. You would think that after what happened just yesterday on the airplane where the deranged man fought his way into a cockpit—just yesterday—there would be an impetus to take up this bill.

We are going to add air marshals in the bill that I introduced the week of September 11, because we know people will feel safer if there are air marshals on airplanes. We know the more we can get in, the more likely people are to fly and the less likely we are to have incidents, because we will have on those airplanes trained law enforcement personnel.

We are trying to upgrade the screening. Everybody who has been through an airport knows there have been holes in security, in the screening process. Today in many airports there are long lines at the screening stations. We want to regularize that process so people know what to expect and so we can get through on a more expedited basis using trained people with good equipment.

Those are the things we are trying to do with this bill. So I support Senator MCCAIN's motion. I think we need to proceed to the bill, and I think we need to keep extraneous amendments off, and that should be a bipartisan agreement. Then we can argue legitimately about the bill itself and how much federalization we have and where it goes and what the dollars are. All of that is legitimate disagreement. Let's get to the bill. Let's do what we must do to get people back into airplanes feeling safe and secure. Let's give them that security, and let's help the economy strengthen.

We must do that. We are wasting valuable time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Texas, and our ranking member, the distinguished Senator from Arizona, Mr. MCCAIN.

We did not come to our particular bill for the federalization of airport and airline security in America in a casual fashion. The truth of the matter is that having been on this committee for over 30-some years, I can say we have been trying to beef up security for quite some time.

I could go back to the 1970s in speaking on this topic, but I will bring you right up to 1988. When Pan Am Flight 103 exploded over Lockerbie, Scotland, we heard of security breaches there—which have now been proved in court. As a result, we had hearings, we had conferences with the White House and the leadership and the airlines and everyone concerned, and what did we come up with?

We wanted to keep it just the way it is with privatization, but what we were going to do is have higher standards, more training, more supervision, more money: The same old same old after 1988.

Then, of course, they had the TWA Flight 800 disaster in 1996, 5 years ago. Following the disaster, we had the Gore commission, and what did we come up with? We came up with more training, higher standards, more supervision, more money—the same old same old.

So I determined, along with Senator MCCAIN, that bygones were bygones with all this fetish about privatization. In a time of war we can't relegate security and safety to any kind of low-cost bidder.

You can put in the words, is my point, of higher standards and more supervision and more training and more money, but you have to fix the lack of accountability and standards, as they have in Israel.

Right to the point, while the distinguished Senator from Texas was talking about just the screeners, I believe we must focus on the whole security picture, including the outer perimeter or rim in the Israeli onion ring plan—the outer ring is intelligence.

Incidentally, I have just been in a discussion where they were talking about too many leaks of classified information to the public. Let me say this, the war on terrorism is not a military war, it is an intelligence war, and intelligence operates on a need-to-know basis.

You do not have to tell the Senator from South Carolina anything. Just tell me what we have done. Don't tell me you are backing up aircraft carriers and you are going to do this and you are going to jump from the helicopters like they have in the headlines, or that you are working with this group and that group—they don't know how to run a war, particularly against terrorism.

Mr. President, this war is not the hundred-yard dash. This is going to be an endurance contest, and it is going to be off the front pages if there are going to be any successes.

Back to the screeners, they have to have the highest security clearance. When we get terrorist watch lists from international security, we might get it from the Brits, we might get it from the French, we might get it from one of the Muslim countries themselves. But these watch lists are not going to be effective prevention tools to that screener who is being paid $5 or $6 an hour and has only been on the job for 3 weeks.

We must have the highest type of personnel, not only as screeners, but as trustworthy security professionals. That is what we are talking about. That not only relates to the screener but to the person who vacuum-cleans the rug in the airplane. Don't worry about somebody going through with a pistol in an airport to get on a plane. What they are going to do is have someone working the tarmac, with a loaded gun available, and I call up ahead of time, and I say I have seat 9-A, and you tape the weapon underneath the seat. We must address these types of security weaknesses.

You have to understand, you are in a war with a clever bunch of rascals, absolute fanatics. In this kind of war you can't have 20 percent of security personnel privately contracted, for instance. Someone came to me late last evening and said: How about 20 percent of the screeners? Go out there and tell that to the Pentagon—let's have the privates and the corporals and the sergeants privately contracted.

They have 669,000 civilian civil service security personnel in defense. But they are wrangling about 18 plus 10, or 28,000 new government airport security personnel. It is not money. We have paid for it.

I have mentioned ad nauseam the $917 round-trip coach class ticket to Charleston, SC. I will willingly pay a fee to know my life is safe and there is no chance ever again of using a flight in the United States of America as a weapon of mass destruction. The pilots ought to be able to seal that cockpit door, which should have been done—they ought not have to be waiting for legislation. The airlines should not have to delay safety because of bureaucracy. They have pilots to fly airplanes—not to fight—once they go on and secure that cockpit door. As the chief pilot of El Al told this Senator: If my wife is being assaulted back in the cabin, I do not open that door. So everybody will know that, hereafter, no matter if they are hijacking a plane to run it into the Golden Gate bridge, or into a building, or into the Sears Tower, or anyplace else—they are picking out all kinds of targets in people's minds—airplane hijackings are not going to happen; that is done with.

We have to move along to protect other terrorist targets, because that is how the terrorist's mind moves. They can maybe get 100 trying to wrestle the plane down. I don't believe they can get the plane down. Once the pilot hears a disturbance, yes, people can be hurt, someone can be killed, but he immediately knows his orders. Rather than open the door and say, "Do you want to go to Cuba? Let's go"—no; now the doors stay closed, and he immediately lands the plane. He wires ahead, and the FBI and security is there to take charge. They are not going to get very far trying to hijack the plane.

Having taken these preventive steps, the Israelis knew, almost proof positive, when the plane that came out of Israel and went down with an explosion over the Black Sea, that a bomb had not been put on that plane. You have to go through those parameters of defense, of security and safety, in Israel. There is no way to get a bomb on the plane unless you have the pilots and everybody conspiring together.

That is not going to happen. The security system that we have set up and planned to pay for was approved by whom? By the pilots. We have their official approval of our approach in this particular bill. The flight attendants approved of it, and begged for it. The executives of the airlines are for it. The municipal associations, the tourism associations—I am getting boiled up.

We have held this bill up on the floor for 1 week on the motion to proceed. Why? On account of procedural Mickey Mouse nonsense, or—there is no better word—constipation. Everybody wants to add this or that measure onto it. We have to get Amtrak. No. We have to get benefits. No. We have to have a stimulus bill. No. We have to get this. Sure, let's take care of all those issues, but in order.

It is unforgivable to stand around here now for a week just on a motion to proceed. Objection just occurred when the distinguished ranking member of the committee and chief cosponsor said let's move to it, debate it, and listen and learn about these amendments, and vote them up or down; that is all. But we apparently have a minority. I am ready to vote, because I think I have some votes. Being in the minority does not surprise me, with all the undercurrents and the lobbying going on by the contractors. We read in Roll Call yesterday that when I am talking on the floor to an empty Senate, the lobbyists are back talking on individual treatment to the Senators.

Should I have to go around and call on the 99 other Senators and explain this bill to them and get past the lobbyists? What has the Government come to in a time of crisis? Let's move on. Don't wait until 5 o'clock and maybe then file some amendments and maybe have some more cloture and some more delay.

This bill, from its origin, should not have been called airline safety but airline stimulus. Ironically, this crowd will go forward with any kind of stimulus.

We are under limited time. We are on the motion to proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is informed that his 1 hour of cloture has expired.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I ask unanimous consent that I continue with an additional hour from any other Senator, that I proceed for another few minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I will conclude with a thought I just expressed about stimulus.

This measure would stimulate the airline industry—exactly what we are trying to do all over America. When you get people traveling, when you get them on the airlines, when you get them in the hotels, when you get New York going again, and when you get all of these other places back to normalcy, the best way to stimulate the airlines is to get safety for them.

What the bureaucracy has done up here with the procedural hangups is to give $15 billion to keep the airlines alive and then guarantee that they go broke by not giving them the safety and, therefore, ensure that the traveling public is not on the planes.

This is the best way I know of to not just stimulate the airlines and air travel but to stimulate the economy. Please come forward. Let's move on this particular bill.

I thank the distinguished Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Alaska for indulging me the extra moments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska.

DEVELOPING A BALANCED ENERGY POLICY

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I thank the Chair. I will try to be brief to accommodate my colleagues who are seeking recognition.

I would like to call attention to a release that came out of the majority and the chairman of the Energy and Natural Resources Committee, Senator JEFF BINGAMAN, indicating that at the request of the majority leader, Senator DASCHLE, the chairman of the Energy Committee, Senator BINGAMAN, suspend any further markup of energy legislation for this session of Congress. I emphasize "this session of Congress." That sounds pretty definitive to me. Instead, I quote the release:

The chairman will propose comprehensive and balanced energy legislation that can be added—

I emphasize "can be added." It doesn't say "will be added;" it says "can be added;"— by the majority leader to the Senate Calendar for potential action—

It doesn't say "action;" it says "potential action."

I certainly have the highest respect for the majority leader. I notice that this is very carefully worded. It says that it "can be added;" it doesn't say "will." Not that there is a proposed action but "potential action."

Very frankly, that is not good enough for me. I will ask the majority leader to specifically respond as to whether or not he intends to develop a balanced energy bill. I question the word "balanced" because that means no input from the minority, no input from the Republicans, an effort to circumvent the committee of jurisdiction, the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, of which I am the ranking member. I question how it could be balanced.

So I urge the leader to address specifically whether he will take up and introduce an energy bill, and whether or not it will be placed on the calendar, and whether or not we will have sufficient time to offer amendments on the issue of fairness and equity in the contribution of the minority.

I would also add, the reason for this action, apparently, is twofold. One is the question of jurisdiction. In other words, there are other committees involved. There is the Committee on Finance, on which I serve, relative to tax implications associated with an energy bill. And as you tax forgiveness, accelerated depreciation, here is obviously the role of the Committee on Environment and Public Works in certain areas—perhaps the Committee on the Judiciary. But clearly, the majority of the jurisdiction is within the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

We have been working a long time on this. We began and introduced a bill early in the session, early in February, as a matter of fact. We have been working with Senator BINGAMAN on his comprehensive bill. We were committed to try to report out, tomorrow, Senator BINGAMAN's expedited bill on energy infrastructure, which I support.

I do not know the rationale. I can only assume that perhaps the leadership thought there was not the votes in the committee to block certain amendments that might come up or perhaps the majority thought there is not the support in the Chamber to stop an energy bill.

I think it is interesting to note that the public polling indicates about two-thirds of the individuals polled nationwide support an energy bill; polling on the contentious issue of ANWR is about 64 to 36 in favor.

So as we address what is behind this shroud of sudden reluctance to pursue an energy bill, one can only deduce that perhaps they did not want to give the President a victory. The President, as we know, presented an energy package very early, an energy task force report, and it worked to try to get that through.

We have held numerous hearings. We have had hundreds of witnesses. We are about at the altar, so to speak, and suddenly the rug has been pulled out from under the authorizing committee.

Another point that was brought up is that this might be contentious; there might be differences of opinion. That is what the amendment process is all about. We need a vote. We need a vote, an up-down vote on an energy package. We need an up-down vote, in a democratic manner, on the proposed amendments that would be offered.

So I would first encourage the majority leader to reconsider his action and let the committee do its work and report out a bill and schedule it for action on the floor. If he does not, I would ask that he consider giving us the assurance that his bill will go on the calendar prior to adjournment; that we will have time to take up amendments and debate it in its entirety.

Mr. President, I am going to conclude my remarks—and I see another Senator seeking recognition—but I will be directing further remarks later on tying in, if you will, how terrorism is funded, and the realization that written statements from bin Laden, who we all agree is the perpetrator, to a large degree, behind much of the terrorism, are directly related to his appeal to many of the Muslims relative to the issue of our increased dependence on Mideast oil and his belief that the United States owes Muslims $36 trillion as a payback for “the biggest theft in history,” and that is the purchase of cheap oil from the Persian Gulf.

Bin Laden claims that the United States has carried out “the biggest theft in history” by buying oil from Persian Gulf countries at low prices. According to bin Laden, a barrel of oil today should sell for $144. And based on that calculation, he said the Americans have stolen $36 trillion from Muslims; and they owe each member of the Muslim faith $30,000.

There might be some motivation there, but there is certainly a communication of consideration.

I yield the floor and thank my colleague who is seeking recognition, the Senator from Delaware.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. CARPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak as in morning business and that my time will count against cloture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CARPER. Mr. President, as it turns out, I am pleased to be speaking immediately after the Senator from Alaska and thank him for the sentiments he shared with all of us. It is not the first time we have heard these sentiments, but it is a message he has delivered consistently.

I have been in this body less than a year, as a new Member of the Senate. I came to the Senate as an old Governor, as did the Presiding Officer. And we, as Governors, tend to be more anxious to get things done. We are not so much interested in rhetoric, not so much interested in symbolism; we want results. We are not interested in process. We want product.

Before I ever got into politics, before I moved to Delaware, I was a naval flight officer. I finished up my tour of duty in 1973. I moved to Delaware to go to the University of Delaware Business School on the GI bill.

One of my first memories being in Delaware, 28 years ago, literally this month, was sitting in line to buy gasoline for my car because we were in the midst of an energy crisis—embargo—at the time and it was tough to buy gasoline.

I thought, 28 years ago, we needed an energy policy for our country. Twenty-eight years later, we still need an energy policy for our country. We did not have one then; and we do not have one now.

We have learned a number of difficult lessons coming out of the tragic events of September 11, but, for me, one of them is that, more than ever, we need a comprehensive energy policy that will reduce our reliance on foreign oil, that will enable us to provide more energy from within our own country—some of it from corn that is grown in Indiana, some of it from soybeans that are raised in Delaware, some of it from wind, and even some that is harvested from the Sun. We should seek energy from a variety of sources, as well as from the over 500 years of coal beneath the ground of this country, and from nuclear powerplants that provide roughly 20 percent of the electricity in this country.

And in addition to producing new energy sources, we need to conserve energy. There is so much we can do to conserve energy, and not just with moving from internal combustion engines in our cars, trucks, and vans to hybrid-powered vehicles, to eventually, this decade, fuel cells. We can literally go out today and buy, off the shelf, air-conditioners that use half the electricity that most of the air-conditioners in our homes use. The same is true for the furnaces that will warm our homes this winter.

The question before us now is, How do we proceed to an energy bill? How do we take it up? I have been urging my leadership, for months now, to take up an energy bill. My guess is, before I finish, my leader will regret having ever put me on the Energy Committee, but I want us to debate and report to this body, and to debate in this Chamber, an energy bill. I want to have a chance to do it this month. I want us to have a chance to vote up or down on Senator MURKOWSKI's proposal of opening up the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. I want us to have a chance to vote on a whole host of other issues.

But I want us to debate them, and vote on them, and move on. I do not want the debate to be, in what form do we bring the bill to the floor? Do we go through the Energy Committee? Do we then go through the Finance Committee, and then the Environment and Commerce Committees because they have jurisdiction over different parts of the bill.

I want to get the bill to the floor. And as we do, I want to make sure that the Senator from Alaska, the Senator from Delaware, the Senator from Indiana, and others, have every opportunity to amend that bill in ways that are germane to the legislation that is before us. Debate them, vote them up or down, and move on.

As it turns out, there is probably a lot more on this front that we agree on than we disagree on. One of the ways to find that out for sure is to have the debate.

I pledge to my colleague from Alaska and my colleague from Indiana to do my dead-level best within the Democratic caucus, within the Energy Committee itself, and with my own leadership to make sure we have the opportunity to have fair and open debate on the amendments and a policy that we can then work out with the House and send something to the President to sign.

We may actually have a chance of coming closer to producing a comprehensive energy policy by taking the approach Senator DASCHLE has now suggested. We may actually have a better chance of getting to the debate and the adoption of an energy bill than we would have had if we had gone to regular order. I was not so sure of that 24 hours ago, but having thought it through, I think we may enhance the chances for those of us who want a comprehensive energy policy.

I ask all of my colleagues to work across the aisle, within the committees of jurisdiction, and in the Chamber, and have a good debate this month or next month and be ready to cast the tough votes and to move on.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CORZINE). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I ask that I be allowed to speak as in morning business for 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ANWR

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I call attention to some of the comments made in this Chamber earlier today relative to the issue of taking up a national energy security bill before this body. I spoke a little earlier on the floor today and indicated that, clearly, it is in the national interest that we in the Senate proceed with an energy bill—report it out, bring it to the floor, and vote on amendments in an orderly manner.

As I further indicated earlier, the majority leader has indicated that it is his intent to develop an energy bill—in his words, a “balanced bill”—and it would be introduced by the majority leader. Of course, this excludes the process associated with the committee reporting out a bill.

Further, in the discussion that has taken place today, the issue of ANWR came up as the bone of contention. I want to address a couple points because there is a good deal of misunderstanding around this issue. There was a reference today that the accident that occurred when a bullet penetrated the pipeline earlier this week was proof that we should not rely on increasing the supply of oil that would traverse through that pipeline.

I remind my colleagues that that pipeline is about 28 years old. It has provided the Nation with 25 percent of the total crude oil produced in the United States for that period of time. That volume has dropped from 25 percent to 17 percent. The pipeline capacity was a little over 2 million barrels a day previously, in the early development of the Prudhoe Bay oil fields, that flowed through that pipeline. Today, with the decline in Prudhoe Bay, it has dropped a significant amount, to roughly 1 million barrels a day. But it still supplies this Nation with 17 percent of the total crude oil produced in this country.

Now, to suggest that this firing by a very high-powered rifle penetrated the pipeline is not quite accurate because it has been shot at numerous times. It is half-inch, high-tensile steel. It is my understanding that this particular firing—a blast of five bullets—penetrated an area where there is a valve and, as a consequence, because of pressure in the pipeline, there was a significant leak, a spillage. The question of whether there is any permanent damage done has been addressed in the cleanup. There was no movement of any oil into any water or streams in the area. The security group of Alyeska found the incident as a consequence of the notification of a drop in pressure. They went out with helicopters and not only found the leak but identified and arrested the perpetrators. You can criticize anything, but the system did work. Everything is subject to, obviously, the exposure of terrorist activity, but in this particular instance this was a fellow who was extremely drunk, bored, or he lost his mind, and he simply decided it would be fun to start firing at the pipeline.

That pipeline has been bombed; bombs have been wrapped around it. It has been wrapped with hand grenades, shot at, and it suffered exposure of numerous earthquakes over the 27 years and it continues to be one of the wonders of the world. So to suggest that somehow this bullet-piercing accident is somehow questionable relative to the integrity of that pipeline is an expression of very little knowledge—factual knowledge—on behalf of those who suggest that somehow the pipeline can't be trusted for additional flowthrough if indeed ANWR is developed.

I am going to conclude, as I promised my friend from Pennsylvania that I would be brief, with an explanation of some of the more common myths associated with the ANWR issue. I hope we can get ANWR up before this body and vote on it up or down in conjunction with an energy bill. That is the democratic process. Clearly, that did not prevail in the Energy and Natural Resources Committee because I can only assume the votes were there to report out a bill with ANWR in it. I can only assume the votes are in this body to pass an energy bill with ANWR in it. Polling seems to indicate nearly 60 percent of the American public support opening ANWR as a significant contributor to reducing our dependence on imported oil.

Some say there is an insufficient amount of oil. Some say it is only a 6-month supply and not nearly enough to justify exploration. That is nonsense. The U.S. Geological Survey, experts who have studied the 1002 ANWR area, estimate that between 6 and 16 billion barrels of oil are economically recoverable; 10 billion barrels is equivalent to what we would import from Saudi Arabia over a 30-year period; 10 billion barrels is the equivalent of what we import from Iraq for a period of 50 years.

We are importing a million barrels a day from Iraq and enforcing the no-fly zone. We are taking the oil, putting it in our airlines, bombing some of the targets in Iraq, and have for some time. They take our money, pay the Republican Guard, develop a missile capability, and aim it at our ally, Israel.

Maybe that is a short synopsis of foreign policy, but nevertheless I think one can conclude that is the ultimate outcome.

We do not know what is in ANWR because we have never been allowed to determine through modern exploration, through seismic exploration, specifically what is available. Only Congress can authorize it.

What is the extent of the area? It is interesting because ANWR is about 19 million acres—about the size of the State of South Carolina. The proposal is to allow exploration on 1.5 million acres. The House-passed bill, which is H.R. 4, has limited that to 2,000 acres. That is the size of a small farm in the entire State of South Carolina—the wilderness, if you will, as a comparison.

Prudhoe Bay was supposed to produce 10 billion barrels. It is on its 13 millionth barrel today. It is absurd to think ANWR is only a 6-month supply of oil. That is to assume ANWR is the country's only source of oil; that there is no oil produced in Texas, or Louisiana, offshore, or no other oil is being imported into the country. The American people are wise enough to see that argument just does not hold oil, if you will.

Clearly, the potential for this country's domestic supply is ANWR, and the abundance associated with the likelihood of a major discovery is second to none identified in North America. It is almost like wondering if you have a strategic petroleum reserve in your own backyard, but if you do not know, and if you do not have the ability to develop it, you really cannot use it.

What is required in development? Very little. We need authorization by Congress. The House has done its job. The House passed a bill. H.R. 4 includes ANWR. It is a challenge to the Senate to do its job.

Some say it will take as long as 10 years before the oil is flowing and that is too long to make a difference. If the previous President had not vetoed the budget reconciliation bill in 1995, today ANWR would be open, or if the oil was not there, it might have been a park. We could have been less dependent on foreign oil, and our energy future would look a lot more certain if, indeed, we had taken that action back in 1995, but we could not overcome a Presidential veto.

We built the Pentagon in 18 months. We built the Empire State Building in a year. Industry says if they make a discovery, they can develop and get oil online in somewhere between 18 months and 2½ years, depending on our will to give them the authority within the environmental parameters to do it safely.

Some people say our energy policy is misguided; we need to focus on natural gas. We found 6 trillion cubic feet. Let's use gas. Recognize that America moves on oil. Our planes, our ships, our trains move on oil.

In response to the September 11 attack, we are preparing now for a long, sustained war. Are we going to count on unstable governments in the very part of the world where we are fighting to assure our energy security? We need to begin at home with energy solutions found within our borders, and if we make the commitment to authorize the opening of this area, I assure my colleagues it will be very symbolic. It would send a very solid message to that part of the world were we to continue to increase our dependence on imported oil.

About 67 percent comes from foreign sources, a majority of that from the Mideast. Fighting a war uses a lot of energy. Mr. President, 450,000 barrels of petroleum products were estimated to be used daily, and that was through 582,000 soldiers in the Persian Gulf war. It is estimated we are using over 500,000 barrels a day currently in this conflict.

Some say it is America's Serengeti, its mountains; it is deserted; it is beautiful. Again, it is the size of the State of South Carolina. It is 19 million acres. Can we open it safely? Yes.

Some say we can get the energy from the National Petroleum Reserve in Alaska; that is why it was established. That is wishful thinking because actually just 15 percent of that entire coastline is open for exploration. Just 3 years ago, the Federal Government closed vast amounts of NPR to protect the birds that live in the lakes. If you look at the model and lakes over NPR, that is where bird life is. There are very few lakes associated in the ANWR area.

Finally, there is a concern of the Porcupine caribou and the Gwich'ins, but no one mentioned what is happening on the Canadian side and involvement of the Gwich'ins who are participants in putting up land for lease.

There was an extraordinary article in the Vancouver Sun newspaper indicating the Gwich'ins are benefiting greatly from oil and gas exploration because Canada expanded its oil and gas leasing program to include testing exploratory wells, et cetera.

The bottom line is there seems to be a great fear suddenly to take up an energy bill, with no particular explanation, particularly when the administration has encouraged Congress to take it up, particularly when the House has done its job, and now we are advised by the majority leader that the committee of jurisdiction, the Energy and Natural Resources Committee, is going to suspend any further markup on energy legislation for "this session"—this session.

I have a press release that states that instead the chairman will propose comprehensive and balanced energy legislation. The chairman will. It does not say with the participation of the committee or the minority or the Republicans. It says the chairman outside the parameters of the committee.

It further says "the comprehensive and balanced legislation that can be added"—it does not say "will be added;" it says "can be added"—"by the majority leader to the Senate calendar for," it says, "potential action." It does not say "action."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the press release be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ENERGY COMMITTEE SUSPENDS MARK-UPS;
WILL PROPOSE COMPREHENSIVE AND BALANCED ENERGY LEGISLATION TO MAJORITY LEADER

At the request of Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, Senate Energy & Natural Resources Committee Chairman Jeff Bingaman today suspended any further mark-up of energy legislation for this session of Congress. Instead, the Chairman will propose comprehensive and balanced energy legislation that can be added by the Majority Leader to the Senate Calendar for potential action prior to adjournment.

Noted Bingaman. It has become increasingly clear to the Majority Leader and to me that much of what we are doing in our committee is starting to encroach on the jurisdictions of many other committees. Additionally, with the few weeks remaining in this session, it is now obvious to all how difficult it is going to be for these various committees to finish their work on energy-related provisions.

Finally, and perhaps most importantly, Bingaman said, the Senate's leadership sincerely wants to avoid quarrelsome, divisive votes in committee. At a time when Americans all over the world are pulling together with a sense of oneness and purpose, Congress has an obligation at the moment to avoid those contentious issues that divide, rather than unite, us.

Bingaman will continue to consult and build consensus with members of his committee, with other committee chairs and with other Senators as he finalizes a proposal to present to the Majority Leader.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. I encourage again the majority leader to reflect on this action, give us the assurance he will take it up during this session and allow sufficient time for Members to provide for amendments, provide us with an opportunity to have an up-or-down vote on contentious issues, and that we meet our obligation as the Senate, as the House of Representatives has done, in addressing what is in the national security interests of our Nation, and that is the passage of the comprehensive energy bill.

I thank my colleague from Pennsylvania for allowing me this extra opportunity to speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. MILLER. I ask unanimous consent to speak as in morning business for up to 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

A LOYAL ALLY

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I rise today to offer thanks and praise for a world leader who has been as stalwart and as loyal an ally for the United States as anyone could ever ask.

These past few weeks, British Prime Minister Tony Blair has gone above and beyond the call of duty for America. He has left no doubt that we will be able to count on him and his country over the long haul.

To paraphrase his own words, he was with us at the first and he will stay with us to the last.

He was there in the gallery of the House of Representatives when President Bush made his moving and forceful speech to this Nation in a joint session of this Congress.

He was there at Ground Zero in New York City, witnessing the destruction with his own eyes and mourning what he called "the slaughter of thousands of innocents."

He was there in Pakistan, near the dangerous heart of this war, reassuring a nervous Pakistani President that he made the right decision in choosing the United States over the Taliban regime.

Since September 11, Tony Blair has served valiantly as our voluntary ambassador to the world.

In London, Berlin, Paris, New York, Washington, Brussels, Moscow, Islamabad, New Delhi, and Geneva, Blair has rallied international leaders and built a coalition of support for the United States. He has done so with a diplomacy, eloquence and strong resolve reminiscent of Winston Churchill during his finest hours.

In his latest brilliant stroke, Blair acted swiftly when he saw Osama bin Laden's videotaped speech Sunday night. Blair immediately summoned a reporter from the Arabic network to his office at 10 Downing Street and taped his own strong rebuttal to bin Laden. It aired on the same day, on the same Arabic network.

It should not be surprising that Blair would rise to the occasion as ably and powerfully as he has. The British have a tough, resolute attitude when it comes to defending themselves. They are willing to take risks on the battlefield. They are willing to risk casualties for the greater good. They are the ones you want on your side in times like these.

He was with us at the first, and he will stay with us to the last, he said. For that, we owe Tony Blair our deepest gratitude. We could not ask any more of him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, in the absence of any other Senator seeking recognition, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to speak up to 20 minutes as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT NEEDS STRUCTURAL REORGANIZATION OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I have sought recognition to discuss the pending emergency caused by the horrific terrorist attacks on September 11. There is a need for some structural reorganization of the Federal Government in accordance with the recommendations of a number of distinguished commissions which have studied these problems and in accordance with our own findings, as we have worked through the matters in the Senate Intelligence Committee and the Senate Judiciary Committee. There is also the need for legislation to expand the powers of law enforcement on terrorists.

With respect to the newly created Office of Homeland Security, it is my thought there needs to be a structure whereby the position is made a Cabinet position. The Federal Government is fortunate to have secured the services of former Governor Tom Ridge of Pennsylvania to take on this responsibility. For the moment, the office has been created in the executive branch by an Executive Order, and I believe former Governor Ridge is correct when he says, even though other Government officials may not necessarily listen to him if there are turf battles, they certainly will listen to the President. That, I do believe, is true, as former Governor Ridge has represented it.

When we talk about homeland security and that function, we are talking about something which needs to be institutionalized in order to go beyond the term of any President, to go beyond the term of any person who is in charge of that Department, and that, in accordance with our structure of Government, requires legislative action, in my judgment. This is something which we will have to work through with President Bush, with former Governor Ridge, and with the executive branch. However, I offer these thoughts as many Members of Congress are now considering this issue and considering legislation.

Representative THORNBERRY has already introduced legislation in the House of Representatives. Senator LIEBERMAN is working on similar legislation. Senator ROBERT GRAHAM of Florida is working on legislation, as well. My staff and I have been in the process of working on legislation which I am not yet prepared to introduce, but at the conclusion of these remarks I will ask that draft copies of two bills be printed in the RECORD.

We have had a number of very distinguished commissions analyze these problems. We have had the Hart-Rudman Commission analyze the problems directed to a secure national homeland. That commission pointed out that the keys to prevention are the following tools: 1. diplomacy; 2. U.S. diplomatic, intelligence, and military presence overseas; 3. vigilant systems of border security and surveillance. In order to enhance the effectiveness of the third key, the Hart-Rudman Commission recommended creating a national homeland security agency which would consist of the Coast Guard, the Customs Service, the Border Patrol, and FEMA, the Federal Emergency Management Agency. The legislation I am submitting today, which is in draft form, would adopt the recommendations of the Hart-Rudman Commission.

There has been another distinguished commission, the Brown-Rudman Commission, which has studied the issues of intelligence and has come up with a method and a procedure for streamlining and restructuring the intelligence community.

One of the considerations is that in many Departments of the Federal Government, there are smaller intelligence agencies, for example, in the Departments of Treasury, State, Agriculture, and many other Departments.

At the present time, there is no effective way for dealing with all of these various Departments. The recommendation of the Brown-Rudman Commission was to consolidate and centralize, to give greater authority and power to the Director of Central Intelligence. The Director is charged not only with the operation of the Central Intelligence Agency, but also with the oversight of all the intelligence functions in the United States.

Now, there has admittedly been some gaps and some failures—some major gaps and some major failures—in these turf battles. During the 1995–1996 session of Congress, I had the privilege of serving as the Chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee. I served in that position for 2 years, in addition to the 6 other years of service on the Intelligence Committee. There is a term limit of eight years on the Intelligence Committee. During the course of that work, I saw the turf battles among the various agencies and became very deeply involved in the issue of weapons of mass destruction, finding that there were dozens of agencies dealing with that issue.

In the Intelligence Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1996, a commission was created to study weapons of mass destruction. The commission was chaired by former CIA Director John Deutch, and I served as the Vice Chairman of that commission. During the course of the commission work—work that was very similar to that of the Hart-Rudman Commission, the Rumsfeld Commission, and the Brown-Rudman Commission—we noted the difficulties accorded to all of these important activities. It was the judgment of that commission that the structure be given to the Vice President of the United States on the ground that he or she—whoever the Vice President may be—would be the only individual, except for the President, who could handle intelligence coordination and the kinds of turf battles which are inevitable when there are numerous intelligence agencies at the Departments of State, Defense, Treasury, and Justice.

So, it is my thought that we need to address the intelligence function so that we have the appropriate coordination and so that we do not have somebody on the FBI Watch List who enters the United States, buys an airplane ticket, and later becomes a terrorist, such as those that were part of the massive attack on September 11.

The legislation which I suggest seeks to accomplish a structure for homeland security and also revises the intelligence functions of the U.S. Government.

I ask unanimous consent to submit the text of a draft bill—and I emphasize that it is a draft because we are working on this with quite a number of Members—entitled “Homeland Defense Act of 2001.” I ask that this draft bill be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the conclusion of these remarks. I further ask unanimous consent that the text of a draft bill—and again, I emphasize draft because we are still working on it entitled “Intelligence Reform Act of 2001” be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the conclusion of these comments.

There being no objection, the draft bills were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.—

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

EXPANSION OF LAW ENFORCEMENT ACTIVITY

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I will further discuss briefly the terrorism legislation which we expect to come to the floor later today. I have a reservation of some 30 minutes on the unanimous consent agreement which will be propounded later by the majority leader, but I think a few comments are in order at this time.

I have no doubt that there is a need for expanded law enforcement authority. That has been demonstrated by the fact that offenses of terrorism do not have the availability of electronics surveillance which other offenses can employ. This is demonstrated by the fact that there have been significant failures under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act and that the Attorney General has represented a need to have additional detention for aliens who are subject to deportation.

When the Senate Judiciary Committee held a hearing two weeks ago yesterday, I questioned Attorney General John Ashcroft on the record about the scope of the Anti-Terrorism bill. The bill did not delineate the Attorney General's needs for law enforcement. Attorney General Ashcroft commented that what the Department of Justice had in mind was the detention of aliens who were subject to deportation. It may well be that there is existing authority for the Attorney General to accomplish that, but if additional authority is necessary, then I think the Congress is prepared to give that additional authority. However, the bill as drafted, did not so delineate the detention to those subject to deportation.

Attorney General Ashcroft further made representations about the need to change the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act. He said before looking to use content there would be a statement of probable cause. Again, in reviewing the specific legislation, that was not present in the bill, so there had to be a revision of the text of the bill.

The Senate Judiciary Committee had only an hour and 20 minutes of hearings, two weeks ago yesterday. The Constitutional Law Subcommittee had hearings last Thursday morning. I have grave concerns that there has not been sufficient deliberation that would establish a record and withstand a constitutional challenge in the Supreme Court of the United States. I will expand upon this point during the course of the consideration of the bill later today or tomorrow morning and will cite the Supreme Court decisions which have struck down acts of Congress where a sufficient showing of the deliberative process has been lacking.

In my judgment, that has been an overextension, a usurpation, by the Supreme Court of the United States of the separation of the powers. For the Supreme Court of the United States, in effect, to tell Congress that Congress has not "thought through" legislation that is part of the congressional function, that legislation violates a specific term or provision of the Constitution, that it is vague and ambiguous in violation of the due process clause of the 14th Amendment, or that Congress has run afoul of some other constitutional provision, then so be it. However, it seems to me an extraordinary stretch of judicial authority for the Supreme Court to say that the Congress has not been sufficiently deliberative, and that only the Supreme Court of the United States can gauge what is sufficiency on the deliberative process. That is the case law.

In the absence of hearings and in the absence of a record, there is a concern on my part that the legislation will withstand constitutional muster. There is no doubt there is a need to act with dispatch.

In my judgment, and I have communicated this to the Chairman and Ranking Member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, we could have held a hearing three weeks ago. We could have worked on a Friday or Saturday. That is not beyond the workload of the Senate. Perhaps, we could have held closed sessions on confidential material. Also, we could have marked up the bill, undergoing the usual deliberative process—the Senate Judiciary Committee works on bills of much lesser importance—and then have had it reported to the floor. Instead, the bill lay unproduced and held at the desk for action under Rule 14 without that customary committee hearing process, committee deliberation, and committee markup in executive session.

I thought, in the absence of any other Senator in the Chamber, that it would be appropriate to make a few comments in that regard at this time.

But there is no doubt that there is a very heavy overhang on Washington, DC, at the present time as a result of the September 11 terrorist attacks. That very heavy overhang really exists, as I see it, across the country. I felt this when Senator SANTORUM and I went to Somerset County, Pennsylvania on September 14, 3 days after the September 11 attack. Although there had been no casualties on the ground, 40 Americans had lost their lives in that ill-fated plane, and there was a great urgency in hearing from Washington, D.C. alongside a great sense of concern.

Earlier today I went to Pennsylvania to meet with the Pennsylvania Business Roundtable. Again, there is a sense in the air of a heavy cloud over America, which we have to work through. I am confident that we will. I believe the Bush administration has done an excellent job in organizing an international coalition and not acting precipitously, but rather, acting very carefully. I believe Osama bin Laden will be brought to justice.

In the interim, as we look through the kinds of problems which law enforcement faces, I think it is important for Congress to have acted with dispatch—really even earlier than that. However, that could be done only with appropriate regard for constitutional rights. We can have deliberation, with hearings and analysis, get the job done for law enforcement, and protect constitutional rights at the same time. As we work through the very important issue of homeland security and the issue of reorganization of the intelligence community, I welcome comments from my colleagues on the draft legislation which I am submitting into the RECORD. It is going to require collaboration from many Members.

As I have said, Congressman THORBERRY has already introduced legislation in the House; Senator LIEBERMAN and Senator ROBERT GRAHAM of Florida are working on it, as am I. I think from this we can structure some legislative changes which can better protect America.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I was not able to be here prior to the statement of the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania. I would note both on the Intelligence Committee and on the Judiciary Committee his has been one of the most consistent and most clear voices on these issues. In fact, one of the things that disappointed me when we brought up the terrorism bill is the Attorney General was able to stay there only for part of the hearing. I was glad he was able to stay long enough for what was intended to be the first round of questioning, questioning from the senior Senator from Pennsylvania. He has a way of getting to the crux of the matter. I would have liked to have gone further on that.

These are serious matters. I get concerned when we have to rush things through without the kind of deliberation and scrutiny they deserve. The Senator from Pennsylvania has raised the obvious fact of making, for constitutional purposes, a record demonstrating legislative intent. Among all the suggestions he made, this is one to which we should pay the most attention. Sometimes as we rush—I say that as one who wants to get a terrorism bill up here and voted on, and hoping the House can do the same and we can get on to conference. But, frankly, we can spend a lot of time on this floor sometimes debating matters that are of minuscule moment and we would be better off if we did the kind of long-range thinking that he and others have discussed.

I think in the report, our former colleagues, Senator Rudman of New Hampshire and Senator Hart of Colorado, after September 11, after the fact, made everybody come and dust them off and say a lot of what happened was predicted here, and how we respond to it.

I worry sometimes also we think by passing a new law we will protect ourselves. We will go back, the Senate will go back—and I am sure the House will, too—and review the files of the Department of Justice, the FBI, and others for information that was there and perhaps not looked at nor acted upon prior to September 11. That is not to find scapegoats but to say: Was this a mistake? Had it been done differently would we have stopped this terrorist attack?

Sometimes we close the barn door after the horse has been stolen. We spend billions of dollars around this country so you cannot drive a car bomb into the lobby of buildings. In this case, the bomb came through the 80th floor of the building.

We should look at this matter very carefully, find out where mistakes were made prior to the 11th—and there were—find out what is needed, and I suspect it will not be just new laws but new ways of doing things to take care of it.

On the question of better use of computers, certainly the better use of translators, if you have after the fact the Attorney General and the FBI Director having to go on public television saying, please, we need some people and we will pay $35 or $40 an hour to translate Arabic material or whatever other languages, somebody has to ask the question: Why weren't you doing that before?

There are so many things we have to do. But I hope people listen to the Senator from Pennsylvania. I intend to. I yield the floor.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AVIATION SECURITY ACT

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I hope that in about an hour we will be moving to the Airport Security Act since those 30 hours will then be close to expiration.

I want to clarify a statement that I made on the floor earlier. I do oppose nongermane, nonrelevant amendments. I announced that when this bill was first—we thought it was going to be considered. But I want to point out that I have been in negotiations and discussions with various Members who are concerned about those individuals who have been directly impacted by Federal action, closing down the airways and the airports, including Reagan National Airport which just recently reopened.

I think if we can reach an agreement, scale back dramatically the original proposals, that we could come to some agreement and attach that to this bill. But it would have to be acceptable to a large majority of the Members of the Senate.

Although I oppose nongermane amendments, I also think we need to act on the issue of those who are directly affected by Federal action as a result of the shutdown of the airlines across this country.

I wanted to make that clear.

I continue to hold discussions on both sides of the aisle to see if there is a way we can come to agreement and thereby have it as a part of this legislation, particularly since the administration has not made a commitment at this time to have it on any pending vehicle.

I wanted to clarify my position on the issue.

I yield the floor.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, what is the parliamentary situation? Are we in morning business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is considering under cloture the motion to proceed on S. 1447.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be able to proceed for 5 minutes as if in morning business but with the time applying against the clock on cloture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SENATOR MIKE MANSFIELD

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, today is one of the days I have had kind of a bittersweet experience. For me, the bittersweet experience was going to the funeral of the former distinguished majority leader of the Senate for 16 years, Mike Mansfield; bitter because you never want to see such a person and such a giant's life come to an end; sweet though because he had 98 very fulfilling years.

At the end of those 98 years, we listened to the tales from his family, associates, and others who reminded all of us what a great man he was. The irony is that Senator Mansfield would not have let any one of us talk on at such length and be so praiseworthy about him here on the floor. He was very modest. But I thought of the wonderful moments that could remind each other—those of us who had the privilege of serving with Senator Mansfield and those of us who came later—of what a great man he was.

I first met Mike Mansfield when I was Senator-elect. I came in here as a 34-year-old prosecutor. The terms actually overlapped. I came into this building I used to visit as a law student. But now I carried this mantle of U.S. Senator, and I was probably far more nervous than I once was as a law student.

Senator Mansfield was one of the first people I got to see. I remember him inviting me into his office. He asked if I wanted some coffee. My nerves were shaky enough at that point, I didn't need it, but I said: Of course. He poured it out and handed it to me. He asked me about my life, and all that. I was trying to ask questions.

I always called him Mr. Leader. But I remember one thing he said was: You are going to be here at least 6 years. You may be here a lot longer. But remember, in the Senate we keep our word. And if you commit to something, if you tell another Senator you are going to do something, then always keep your word, even if it turns out that politically it is not going to be helpful for you because it is the only way we can operate in this body. We do it on trust.

He also said: The other thing is, if you vote on something, and afterward you think you cast the wrong vote, don't worry about it. I guarantee you, the issue will come up again, and you will get to vote the right way.

He was right on both occasions. I have cast votes that afterward I thought: That was kind of a dumb thing to do. I will wait for another time to bring it up. It will come back up, and I can vote the right way.

But I do remember what Senator Mansfield said: Keep your word. You always keep your word.

We had some real giants serving in the Senate at that time. I remember Senator Mansfield, when things would get bogged down in this Chamber, would come through and sort of tap a few people on the shoulder and suggest they come in the back room; and then we would pass a great deal of legislation in that back room, as Senator Mansfield would puff on his pipe, and with very few words he would get warring parties to seek peace and move on with the Nation's business.

He was very nice to my family. He used to give a speech every year to the caucus, saying: There is no seniority. There is no juniority. We are all equal. He gave that speech one day, and Senator Abourezk of South Dakota, who, like me, was one of the most junior Members here, stood up and said: Mr. Leader, I was so impressed with that speech, especially as one of the most junior Members, that there is no seniority, no juniority. Senator Mansfield thanked him for his statement, and Senator Abourezk said: Because of that, could I borrow your limousine and driver tonight? Senator Mansfield took the pipe out of his mouth and, with a quiet smile, said: No.

There were certain limits, but then, when I was a young Senator, he loaned that limousine to my wife Marcelle and me and our three children to go to a movie premier and then to drive elsewhere to meet the cast afterward.

I recall so many times, when I was stuck here late in this Chamber and I could not get home to my family, that my children would remind me, when I came home and apologized: Remember that wonderful evening Senator Mansfield let us take his car and even use the telephone in it.

He would do things like that. He cared very much about those of us who had young children. One, he remembered the names of the children who would come in here with us. Even a few months ago, when I ran into him at an event, we started talking, and he immediately asked: How is Marcelle? He started naming the children. What a remarkable person.

He taught Senators that you have certain responsibilities. There are only 100 of us at any given time to represent the country, but within responsibilities you can have personal relationships across the aisle.

I remember Hugh Scott, traveling with both of them on the plane and them puffing on their pipes. But those personal relationships made the Senate work so well.

I remember the great speech he gave in the Leader's Lecture Series in the Old Senate Chamber. It was the speech he was going to give on a Friday afternoon on November 22, 1963. As he walked in this Chamber to give it, he was told that President Kennedy had been shot. But he gave it in the Old Senate Chamber, and it was just as new as it would have been then, just as responsive.

He said: We have to lower the level of partisanship. We have to work together—of course, not give up our principles—this is not a unibody of opinion—and have the personal relationships that make it work.

He spoke in many ways. He was from a different era of the Senate, but in many ways a better era, where individual Senators, person to person, would work out problems. I think today, as I have seen so many Senators come together on some of these problems since the terrible events of September 11, Senator Mansfield would be proud of us for doing that.

People sometimes ask me what I consider the greatest thing about being a U.S. Senator. I always say one of the greatest was having Senator Mansfield here as leader when I came to the Senate. I have served wonderful leaders in both parties, but what he did to help all of us, as new Senators—to talk with us, to advise us, to work with us, to make us feel we belonged; and then to ask us to make sure others felt they belonged—was unique. The country was better for his service in the Senate.

I think life has shown that each one of us, whether we are leader or not, has the privilege of being 1 of the 100 people in this Chamber who serve our Nation of a quarter of a billion people. And we owe great responsibilities to each other and to the country. That is a great legacy.

So I say it was bittersweet to be there. But it was wonderful to celebrate such a full, full life, a life that so few people ever equal. So I bid adieu to a dear friend.

I yield the floor.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to the life of a great American, former Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield, who passed away on October 5 at the age of 98.

Senator Mansfield's legacy as a Member of Congress will leave a shadow as long as his very life. Born in New York, the son of Irish immigrants, in 1903, Michael Joseph Mansfield experienced tragedy at an early age when his mother died when he was only 3. Sent to live with relatives in Great Falls, MT, Senator Mansfield soon began a lifetime of hard work, first in the family grocery store, then enlisting in the Navy before his 15th birthday, and later, when the Navy discharged the young Senator Mansfield after discovering he was underage, serving in the United States Army and Marine Corps, all before the age of 20. In 1922, Senator Mansfield returned to Montana and began working as a "mucker" in the copper mines near Butte, MT. Five years later, he met Maureen Hayes, to whom he would be married from 1932 until her death just last year.

It was his wife that encouraged Senator Mansfield to continue his education, first at the Montana School of Mines then completing his high school education through correspondence courses. In 1930, he left the copper mines and enrolled in the University of Montana where he later became a professor of Far Eastern and Latin American history and political science after completing graduate work at the University of California at Berkeley.

Although he did not follow a traditional path, Senator Mansfield's education provided him with the background that would allow him to become one of Congress' foremost experts on foreign affairs. After losing his first bid for elected office, Senator Mansfield was elected to the House of Representatives in 1942 and was immediately assigned to the Foreign Affairs Committee. Just two years later, then-Representative Mansfield was sent on a confidential fact-finding mission to China by President Franklin Roosevelt, returning in 1945 to report on the state of that nation. In 1952, he narrowly defeated an incumbent to win a seat in the Senate where he was again called upon to use his expertise on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, completing another fact-finding trip, this time to Indochina, and serving as a representative to the Manila Conference.

Outside the realm of foreign affairs, Senator Mansfield quickly rose through the ranks of Senate leadership, first as party whip in 1957 and becoming the Democratic Majority Leader just four years later in 1961. In his 16 years as Majority Leader, Senator Mansfield helped steer the Nation through some of our most difficult times. After President Kennedy's assassination in 1963, Senator Mansfield delivered a eulogy at a Capitol Rotunda memorial service that was broadcast across the country and helped all Americans mourn the loss of our great President. Senator Mansfield was a vocal critic of our Nation's involvement in the Vietnam War, and warned three administrations, from Eisenhower to Johnson, about the extent of U.S. military actions there. Although his position on the Vietnam War strained his relations with the Johnson administration, he was able to work with the President on passage of landmark civil rights legislation. The turmoil of that era was immediately followed by the Watergate scandal that resulted in the resignation of President Nixon and shook the faith of some Americans in our government. But throughout all of these trying times, Senator Mansfield led the Senate with quiet determination that exemplified his service in Congress.

And that truly is how we will remember Senator Mansfield. Through the most difficult of times, Senator Mansfield led this great body with a sense of purpose and integrity. He put his trust in the rules and procedures of the Senate to reach a result that was right for the American people. He encouraged Committee Chairmen to lead Senate debate on bills under their jurisdiction, and inspired young Senators to make their voices heard on the floor. He delegated responsibility to others, making the Senate a more democratic place, instead of a body dominated by the "old guard." And when the Senate failed to live up to the high ideals embodied in the Constitution, Senator Mansfield would say so. It has been reported many times in the past few days that Senator Mansfield nearly resigned his position as Majority Leader in 1963. Following President Kennedy's assassination, Senator Mansfield put that speech aside, but delivered the remarks in 1998 as part of a lecture series in the Old Senate Chamber. We would be wise to remember those words now, and to follow Senator Mansfield's example of thoughtful consideration and respect for others in the difficult times we face today.

Senator Mansfield's service to our Nation did not end with the 16 years he spent as Majority Leader. His expertise on Far East matters led very different Presidents, Jimmy Carter and Ronald Reagan, to choose him as their ambassador to Japan. Ambassador Mansfield spent 11 years in this difficult diplomatic post. After leaving Tokyo in 1987, the Japanese ambassador to this country predicted the Ambassador "could have run for prime minister and won." Leaving public service, Senator Mansfield would still not retire and served as a senior advisor on East Asian affairs to Goldman, Sachs until his recent death. He remained active in policy matters and the Senate remained close to his heart as he attended the Senate's weekly prayer breakfasts on a regular basis.

Mike Mansfield brought to the United States Senate some of the best characteristics of Montanans, he addressed issues in a straight-forward, honest way, never forgot the people that put him in office, provided a calming influence in good times and bad. In a turbulent and uncertain time, Senator Mansfield was a beacon of dignity, common sense, intelligence, and above all, wisdom. I would like to offer my condolences to his daughter, Anne, his granddaughter, and his many friends and admirers here in Washington and in his beloved home State of Montana.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to proceed for 5 minutes as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. MURRAY). Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONSIDERATION OF AN ENERGY BILL

Mr. BINGAMAN. Madam President, I want to just make a few brief points regarding an announcement I made last evening about how we would try to proceed through the remainder of the session to get consideration of an energy bill. I indicated in that announcement that the majority leader had asked me to work with other Senators on the Energy Committee, as well as Senators on other committees, to put together a proposal that could be brought to the floor by the leadership for consideration, and that in light of that, we would not proceed to try to mark up a bill in the Energy Committee, as I expect probably there will not be mark-ups of other portions of a proposed energy bill in some of other committees that would have jurisdiction.

First, as I understand it, the majority leader's assignment was clear. He wants the Senate to be in a position to move to consideration of an energy bill in a timely fashion. And it was his view that this process of putting a bill together, and hopefully on a consensus basis, involving input from all Senators—Democrats and Republicans—was the best way to do that.

We will now have an opportunity to deal with some of the energy issues that cross committee jurisdictional lines; and there are many of those. I think it is clear to people that many of the energy issues also involved the Environment and Public Works Committee. There are clearly issues involving the Finance Committee regarding energy-related tax incentives or incentives for use of particular types of energy. All of that, of course, would be expected to be part of a larger piece of legislation with which the Senate would deal.

Second, I want to respond to a couple of the comments that were made earlier in this Chamber by some of my colleagues, particularly on the Republican side of the aisle, indicating that they believed this was partisan and this would make the consideration of energy in the Senate a partisan issue.

I see it as just the opposite. I am interested in the input from all Senators. I think those on the committee know I have invested a substantial amount of time, in the past several months, seeking and having individual meetings with Senators on both sides of the aisle to discuss some of these difficult issues.

My hope is that we can put together a piece of legislation that will reflect the provisions around which we can form a consensus; and some of those will come from the Republican side of the aisle and, certainly, some will come from the Democratic side of the aisle.

My colleagues on the committee are aware we have made that effort to work in a bipartisan way. I see no disadvantage to any member of the committee from the procedure the majority leader has proposed. If there are good ideas related to energy policy, of course, the first choice would be to try to have them included in the bill the majority leader brings up for consideration. If those ideas are not included in that package, for whatever reason, any Senator, whether Democrat or Republican, would be in a position to offer those as an amendment.

I don't see anyone being disadvantaged by the procedure the majority leader has proposed. I was disappointed to hear in one of the statements this morning a somewhat colorful account of how this decision was supposed to have been made. That purported account was not accurate in any respect, as far as I know. The decision was simply made by the majority leader that if we proceeded in this way, in his view, this process would hold out the best chance for us to get an energy bill considered by the Senate and passed in a timely fashion. On that basis, it is advisable for all Senators to support the decision of the majority leader to try to move ahead on a bipartisan basis. That will certainly be my best effort in the committee.

I look forward to working with all colleagues, both on the Energy Committee and with other committees that claim jurisdiction and have jurisdiction on different aspects of a comprehensive energy bill.

Madam President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. TORRICELLI. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to address the Senate for 10 minutes.

TRANSPORTATION SAFETY

Mr. TORRICELLI. Madam President, I am sensitive to the desire of Members of the Senate to avoid extraneous issues in this debate. The need for airline security is self-evident. The failure of confidence in our Nation's airlines is having a devastating economic impact on the country and its economy.

I am certain Members of the Senate will understand that to those I represent, indeed to millions of other Americans around the country, railroad or bus or other modes of transportation safety are not only not extraneous, they are central. Three hundred thousand residents of New York and New Jersey cross the Hudson and East Rivers every day to their homes and places of business. Indeed, a significant multiple of the number of people who fly on airplanes every day is on these commuter trains. I cannot suggest to them that somehow their lives or their fortunes are less important than those who are on airplanes.

It appears to me the debate in the Senate to concentrate exclusively on airplane safety is based on the assumption that terrorists will accommodate us by choosing the same means, employing the same strategy to strike our country that they used previously. Why is it that I doubt they will be so accommodating?

There is nothing about an airplane that somehow makes it more vulnerable than a bus or a train or, for that matter, a powerplant or a reservoir. But as this legislation is focused on transportation and the assurance of safety and security, it must, therefore, by necessity, include other modes of transportation, particularly when those other modes are utilized by millions and millions of Americans and where the exposure to potential danger is so enormous.

I will use for illustration simply those that are utilized by my own State of New Jersey because I know them so well. I suspect the arguments I will share with the Senate could be made by the Senators from California or Massachusetts or Illinois or Florida, Missouri, or a host of other States that have large metropolitan areas.

In Penn Station in New York, through which hundreds, thousands of New Jersey residents travel every week, there are six tunnels that began construction in 1911. The four tunnels under the East River and those under the Hudson are 2½ miles long. As I suggested, they accommodate 300,000 people.

In August the State of New York, by a strange coincidence, issued a public report which concluded the tunnels are "woefully inadequate to deal with a major fire, accident, terrorist attack or other emergency situation."

The report went on to explain that the tunnels lack escape routes for the up to 2,000 people who can ride on a single commuter or Amtrak train. They are without anything but the most basic of ventilation and do not even have standing water pipes which today would be required in even the most modest of such facilities under current construction rules.

The chart on my left illustrates for a major tunnel that can accommodate up to 2 trains and can have 2,000 people on every train, the kind of ventilation that is used is small, singular fans. If there were for some reason a fire on this train because of a terrorist act, it would not begin to be adequate to help the escaping passengers.

The second chart illustrates something even more troublesome: For the 2½-mile tunnel under the Hudson River, accommodating tens of thousands of commuters every day, a single spiral staircase through which 2,000 people would have to climb 90 feet while firefighters were using it as the only entrance to get to a burning train. It would not happen. Indeed, they would be lost.

The greatest illustration of this is that the published plans of the fire department call for using a locomotive to tow the burning train out of the tunnels with passengers on board. It is assumed they could not exit.

I use New York and New Jersey as the illustration. Were I to speak about train access from southern New Jersey to Philadelphia, I could make the same arguments. There would be the same vulnerability; only the numbers would be lower. Indeed, I could also make the same arguments about the Baltimore tunnels, built in 1877, tunnels for which 150-mile-per-hour trains must now slow to 30 miles per hour to traverse.

I could be talking about Washington, DC, itself, where the tunnels along Union Station by the Supreme Court annex, carrying 50 to 60 trains a day, were constructed with the safety designs of 1907.

In response to these concerns and those of Chicago and San Francisco and St. Louis and a host of other cities, Amtrak has proposed a multibillion-dollar security and safety plan.

First, $471 million for additional police, bomb-sniffing canine units, and bomb detection systems for luggage. It is essential to get to even the minimum standards we are now using for the airlines.

Second, $1 billion for the structural and safety improvements that I just outlined in tunnels across the Nation.

Third, $1 billion in capacity enhancements to rail, bridges, and switching stations, which are necessary to support the massive increase in ridership that rails are now receiving across the country.

The daily Acela Express in the Northeast alone has had an increase in ridership of 40 percent to 50 percent per day. It cannot be accommodated as people move from airlines that are not operating at full capacity, to trains that are now operating beyond capacity.

For example, Amtrak has had to add 608 seats on 18 Metroliners and Acela trains just to accommodate this demand between Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington alone.

Madam President, like my colleagues, I understand our obligation to the Nation's airlines. They are the backbone of our economy. We owe it to the American people to put an armed Federal marshal on every airplane that flies in this country. We dare do no less. I believe the necessity of federalizing the check-in and inspection system is now manifest. It is also clear to me that in every aspect of air transportation, the need for security needs to be enormously enhanced. But it would not be responsible—indeed, I could not in good faith represent my constituents in New Jersey—to not simultaneously demand that all other modes of transportation receive equal protection. To protect our aircraft and leave vulnerable targets on other major transportation that carry not as many people but more people, not with the same degree of vulnerability but potentially greater vulnerability, would not be right. It would not be defensible, and I could not explain it to the people of New Jersey, who have already lost 2,000 or 3,000 people from the terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center. We refuse to lose yet another citizen, and I refuse to have another citizen of New Jersey live in vulnerability such as those who lost their lives on September 11.

I want my colleagues to know—and indeed I put them on notice—that we will insist that this Senate deal with the broader issue of transportation security in this country.

I yield the floor and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT AGREEMENT—S. 1447 AND S. 1510

Mr. DASCHLE. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to S. 1447 and that the majority leader, after consultation with the Republican leader and the chairman and ranking member of the Commerce Committee, may turn to the consideration of S. 1510, and the bill be considered under the following time limitation: That there be 4 hours equally divided for debate on the bill to be equally divided between Senators LEAHY and HATCH or their designees; that 30 minutes of the Republican time be allocated to Senator SPECTER; that there be a managers' amendment in order to be cleared by both managers; that the only other amendments in order be four relevant amendments to be offered by Senator FEINGOLD or his designee on which there shall be 40 minutes for debate on each, with 25 minutes under the control of Senator FEINGOLD and 15 minutes under Senator LEAHY's control, on which there shall be votes on or in relation thereto; that if at the conclusion of the time for debate on this bill the managers' amendment has not yet been adopted, it be agreed to; that the bill be read the third time, and the Senate vote on final passage of S. 1510.

Mr. MCCAIN. Reserving the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Madam President, reserving the right to object—I do not intend to object—I thank the leader and the leadership for working with me to make it possible to take up some amendments on the floor. These amendments directly address issues that were brought up at the only hearing on this issue in the Senate Judiciary Committee, a hearing held in the Constitution Subcommittee which I chair. I think it is good for the body, and the bill, that we consider the issues that were raised in the hearing. We should have the debate, have the votes, and resolve these issues in public.

I thank you.

Mr. MCCAIN. Reserving the right to object, I ask the majority leader, in light of the fact it is very unusual in a unanimous consent agreement to say after consultation between both leaders and managers, then they move to the antiterrorism bill, why not just have a unanimous consent agreement to go to third reading and final passage of the bill, and then go to the antiterrorism bill?

Mr. DASCHLE. If I could respond to the distinguished Senator from Arizona, we would get bogged down on the aviation security bill again. If there is time in which we are in quorum calls, it seems to me we could more productively use that time, given the time constraints under which we now have agreed to take up the counterterrorism bill, to use that time more productively.

Mr. MCCAIN. May I continue to ask the majority leader, suppose we just had a scenario, for example, out of my imagination, that immediately a so-called Carnahan amendment is proposed which would then occasion a filibuster or a cloture motion. Then we might be in that scenario almost immediately. Is that possible, I ask the majority leader?

Mr. DASCHLE. It is possible, certainly, I agree with the Senator.

Mr. MCCAIN. In fact, it may be even likely. I am very concerned about this unanimous consent agreement. Because I think what we will do is have an immediate presentation of the Carnahan amendment which will tie up the Senate to prevent us from further consideration of amendments and final consideration of the aviation security bill, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is heard.

Mr. REID. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NELSON of Florida). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DASCHLE. I again propose the unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, before the clerk reports, let me thank all of our colleagues. I know this has been a very difficult, extremely contentious matter, and I appreciate very much the support of all of our colleagues. While he dislikes it when I do it, I especially again thank my colleague, Senator Reid, for all of his effort and work getting us to this point. I thank Senator LOTT for his corroborative effort.

I appreciate, again, the work we have been able to do to get to this point. I thank all Senators and yield the floor.

AVIATION SECURITY ACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 1855

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Mr. DASCHLE. I ask unanimous consent the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

CLOTURE MOTION

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I send a cloture motion on the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The cloture motion having been presented under rule XXII, the Chair directs the clerk to read the motion.

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close the debate on the Daschle amendment No. 1855 to S. 1447, the Aviation Security bill.

Harry Reid, Bob Graham, Bob Torricelli, Jean Carnahan, Jeff Bingaman, Maria Cantwell, Richard J. Durbin, John Kerry, Jay Rockefeller, Mark Dayton, Ben Nelson of Nebraska, Evan Bayh, Tim Johnson, Russell Feingold, Kent Conrad, Tom Daschle, Bill Nelson of Florida, Edward M. Kennedy, Barbara A. Mikulski, and PAUL WELLSTONE.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I announce to all our colleagues there will be no more rollcall votes today. Details about tomorrow's schedule will be made available a little later in the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri is recognized.

Mrs. CARNAHAN. Mr. President, I spoke yesterday about the need for the Senate to act on behalf of the workers in the airline industry—those men and women who lost their jobs as a result of the September 11 attacks. The time to act is here and now.

My amendment is designed to provide assistance to those who were laid off as a result of the September 11 attacks and the corresponding reductions in air service. They include employees of the airlines, airports, aircraft manufacturers, and suppliers to the airlines.

Using the framework of the Trade Adjustment Assistance Act, this legislation provides income support, job training, and health care benefits for these laid off workers.

This amendment extends unemployment compensation for 20 weeks, after eligible employees have exhausted their State's unemployment benefits.

It also provides for job training, so that those unable to return to the airline industry can acquire new skills.

Many laid-off workers and their families will face the frightening prospect of losing their health insurance. The legislation that I am proposing would enable families to continue their health insurance by reimbursing COBRA premiums for 12 months.

We know that some workers may not be eligible for extended health coverage through COBRA. Therefore, my proposal also enables States to provide Medicaid coverage for those workers and their families.

Lastly, my amendment acknowledges that the unemployment compensation program is imperfect. Many workers who lose their jobs are not eligible for any assistance under current law.

Under my proposal, those who are ineligible for their State's unemployment insurance programs would receive 26 weeks of income support. These payments are designed to mirror unemployment compensation.

This legislation is not a panacea. It is a first step. We acted quickly to shore up the airline industry. That was appropriate. But that legislation did nothing for the 140,000 who are being laid-off despite the assistance provided in the stabilization package.

There are other Americans who have also lost their jobs due to the slowing economy. Their needs should be addressed as part of the economic stimulus package. But, we must act now to assist employees of the airline industry who have suffered immediate, abrupt layoffs of enormous proportions.

The amendment I have proposed has broad support. The nation's Governors have asked Congress to pass it.

The major airlines support this assistance for their former employees. Republican and Democratic Senators support it.

Now is the time to act. The Senate ought to pass this measure now and move on to our other pressing business.

I have reached across the aisle in crafting this proposal. The amendment has three Republican co-sponsors: Senators BROWNBACK, FITZGERALD, and GORDON SMITH.

I have also scaled back my original legislation to make it more attractive to my colleagues. The total cost is $1.9 billion—half the cost of the original package.

The amendment includes an offset so this package of benefits is entirely paid for.

Let me assure my colleagues that it is not my intention to slow consideration of the important airline security legislation. I am a co-sponsor of the airline security bill and am eager to see it pass the Senate. We need to institute permanent security measures and restore Americans' confidence in the safety of air travel.

I have been ready, and eagerly awaiting the opportunity, to debate this amendment for the past week. And I am ready to go to a vote right now.

So for those concerned about delay of the airline security bill I hope that you agree we should vote on this proposal tonight. I am not interested in delay. I am interested in helping workers. I would have liked both the airline safety bill and the worker relief packaged completed last week instead of being subjected to a filibuster.

I am aware of comments that some believe that this amendment should not be considered as part of the airline safety bill, but rather should be considered later, as part of other legislation. But that is precisely what I was told over two weeks ago. I originally proposed to provide relief to laid off airline workers at the same time as we provided relief to the airlines.

I did not offer my amendment then because the leadership of both houses of Congress had reached agreement on the airline package and we had to pass the bill immediately.

We all agree that airline security legislation is extremely urgent. So is relief to airline workers. It is time to show some urgency on behalf of the men and women in the airline industry.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished chairman of the committee for the usual cooperation and bipartisanship which he has displayed on many occasions in the past in his duties as chairman of the Commerce Committee. It has also been my pleasure to have had the opportunity to work with him, including on this very important piece of legislation. Perhaps the distinguished chairman and I have not worked on a bill that is more important and significant as this one.

This bill would significantly enhance aviation security by making the Federal Government directly responsible and accountable for the screening of airline passengers and their baggage. Although there are many other parts of this bill that are intended to improve security, the shift in responsibility for passenger screening is the most profound. But nothing less is required given that the events of September 11 have forever changed how we view air travel. Unfortunately, we have learned a hard lesson that we face an enemy that is willing to sacrifice itself and thousands of innocents to obtain its ends. Aviation security has now become a critical element of national security, and this requires a fundamental change in our approach. Congress must act to ensure that safety and security remain our foremost concern.

To handle and coordinate all aviation security matters for the Federal Government, including the new screening functions, the bill creates a new, high-level position within the Department of Transportation (DOT). Nevertheless, there would be close coordination with other Federal agencies, particularly those involved in law enforcement, intelligence and national security. Cooperation among Federal agencies will be just as important to our effort to safeguard aviation as it will be in our larger battle to root out and destroy terrorist networks. Accountability is also important, and when it comes to aviation security, there will not be one Federal official to serve as the focal point for all our efforts.

This bill includes numerous other provisions designed to improve aviation security. For example, the Federal air marshal program is broadly expanded, and airports are required to strengthen control over access points to secure areas. In addition, cockpit doors must be strengthened and flight crews would be given up-to-date training on how to handle hijacking situations. The bill would also take steps to ensure that our Nation's flight schools are not being used by terrorists. For the current fiscal year, airports would be given the flexibility to use Federal airport grants to pay for increased costs associated with new security mandates.

I know that some of my colleagues may have concerns about the Federal Government assuming the burden of screening hundreds of millions of airline passengers each year. As a proud fiscal conservative, I do not advocate this move lightly. But the attack last month was an act of war, and we must respond accordingly. As a matter of national security, passenger screening can no longer be left to the private sector. I am one of the most ardent proponents of free enterprise and the entrepreneurial spirit of America. However, this is not an area where decisions should be driven by the bottom line. The Federal Government does not contract out the work of Customs agents, the Border Patrol, the INS, and many other agencies that perform functions similar to the screening that we are dealing with here. We should not contract out the screening of airline passengers.

By the way, recently there was a CNN poll taken where people could instantly respond as to whether screening employees should be done by Federal employees or contracted out. Eighty-seven percent of the hundreds of thousands of people who responded to that CNN poll said the Federal Government should assume that responsibility.

It is also a question about whether the Department of Justice or Department of Transportation should have the authority in this matter. In all candor, one of the reasons is because of the lack of success in the past of some of the programs and implementation of some of the recommendations that were made by the Department of Transportation Inspector General, the GAO, and others. That will be a subject of debate as we consider this legislation.

The present legislation gives DOT the authority to fire or suspend any screener and prohibit him or her from returning to screening duties regardless of any civil service employment laws to the contrary. Furthermore, screeners would also be prohibited from striking. To offset some of the additional costs to government, airlines would be charged a security fee based upon the number of passengers they carry.

Because there are many small airports across the country that may not need a full complement of screeners throughout the day, the Department of Transportation would have the option of requiring smaller airports to contract out the screening work to State or local law enforcement officials. This could only be done if the screening services and training of local officers are the same and the Federal Government reimburses the airport. There would also be some flexibility for DOT to adopt different security measures at smaller airports depending upon airport conditions and the level of airline activity.

I know that some people may be concerned about the transition period if we do move to full Federal control over the screening process. Some believe that screening services may suffer if current employees and companies know that they will be phased out in the coming months. The bill addresses this concern by giving DOT the flexibility to make whatever arrangements are necessary to ensure security in the interim. For example, DOT could enter into new, short-term contracts with screening companies that provide for upgraded services while at the same time compensating the companies, and perhaps employees, for the temporary nature of the new arrangement.

I would also point out that the average turnover, because of the low pay in salary and benefits, at major airports is 125 percent per year. At one airport it is as high as 400 percent per year, but that is because the people who now are employed as screeners can make more money by going down and working at a concession at the same airport.

So let's have no doubt about the transience, the documented transience of these people who work there, who are good and decent, fine American citizens, but they are low paid, and they are ill-trained. That is not their fault. I want to make that perfectly clear.

The Commerce Committee has held several aviation security hearings over the last few years, including one 3 weeks ago. We have repeatedly been told by the DOT Inspector General, the General Accounting Office, and many others that there are flaws in our aviation security systems, especially in the area of passenger and baggage screening. Although we addressed some of these concerns in legislation enacted last year, we clearly must go much farther now. Anything approaching the status quo is no longer acceptable. It is vital that aviation security be provided by professional individuals who are well paid, well trained, and well motivated.

The events of the past few days underscore the need for us take action immediately. Our military strike against terrorist bases increases the risk of another terrorist attack on our own soil. While more than aviation is threatened, we know all too well it is an area that terrorists have targeted before and something they have gone to great lengths to learn about.

Aviation is more important than ever to our economic and social well-being. We cannot avoid the tough choices when it comes to security. The traveling public needs to have its confidence restored in the safety of flying. Federal control of the passenger screening process and greater oversight of other aspects of aviation security can get our aviation industries back on track. Anything less than a full Federal effort would be an abrogation of our duties as lawmakers.

There was a poll taken yesterday by ABC which I would like to refer to, ABC News.com. The question was: Are you worried traveling by airplane because of risk of terrorism? Forty-two percent of the American people today still are worried about traveling by airplane because of risk of terrorism.

There was a meeting in New York City the day before yesterday. According to the Wall Street Journal:

Lawmakers are eager to resolve the dispute partly because they are being told by business leaders and even Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan that airline security is central to restoring consumer confidence and getting the economy back on track. In a meeting at the New York Stock Exchange yesterday, about 20 executives urged Mr. Hastert and House Minority Leader Richard Gephardt of Missouri to take drastic action quickly. "The consensus was that the whole system has to be federalized," one House aide said.

It is very clear that we need to act. I am very disappointed it has taken us a couple weeks before we could get this bill up on the floor of the Senate.

Senator HOLLINGS and I would be more than happy to consider amendments, in addition to the present ones. I want to point out that there would be some added expense associated with increasing security, but I would also like to point out that security has obviously become paramount.

So, Mr. President, I again thank Senator HOLLINGS, the chairman of the committee.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina, the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, the events of September 11 forever changed how we feel about the security of our world, our Nation, and our families. We are wrestling with tough issues here: Balancing safety and security—against convenience and the tradition of our free, open, and democratic society.

But one thing is clear. We need to make our skies safe. The American people deserve it—and they demand it.

Securing our skies is becoming a Federal responsibility that needs the full resources of Federal law enforcement, immigration services, and intelligence agencies. Making our skies safe is a complicated endeavor that we cannot leave just to the airlines and the private sector.

We do not contract out our Nation's defense or law enforcement to private security guards. Likewise, we must not contract out the security of our nation's skies or the vulnerable structures and people on the ground.

The American people are willing to contribute to the cost of making our skies safe. A recent poll of 900 people found that 68 percent of Americans are willing to pay $25 per airline ticket to increase security.

By those standards, airline passengers will find our plan to be quite a bargain.

I have worked closely with Senators MCCAIN, ROCKEFELLER, HUTCHISON, and many others in a bipartisan effort to fix what has been a long-standing problem in aviation security. I believe the legislation we developed will close our current vulnerabilities and create new safeguards to stop those that would harm our American way of life.

Our legislation will professionalize the more than 18,000 screeners in our Nation's airports who are now employees of the airlines and private screening companies. We will give the screeners better training and advanced security equipment.

Our bill will increase the number of Federal Air Marshals on both international and domestic flights. It will enable the Transportation Department to deploy Federal Air Marshals on every flight.

Our legislation mandates cockpit doors and locks that cannot be opened during flight by anyone other than the pilots. The new cockpit doors will be able to withstand forced entry. With our pilots safe, they can better keep our nation's passengers safe.

These measures also will help restore Americans' confidence in the safety of our airlines. When passengers feel safe, they are more likely to fly, which will revitalize tourism in America—and the local economies that rely on it.

The terrorist attacks last month demonstrated that airline safety is an issue of national security. Other countries have had extraordinary success using the tactics called for in this legislation. Our American citizens deserve the same.

Mr. President, right to the point, let me thank Senator MCCAIN, our ranking member, Senator HUTCHISON of Texas, who is the ranking member on our Aviation Subcommittee, and Senator ROCKEFELLER. We have banded together in sort of an emergency situation.

Right to the point, a lot of this could be done, and should be done, and was to be done under present law. For example, you could get an order for securing the cockpit. I called the distinguished Secretary of Transportation 2 days after the 11th—on that Thursday—and I said: I am going to have a hearing. But do not wait for hearings. Let's secure that cockpit. You can order that immediately. You can order marshals.

Now, what have we seen? Three weeks after 9-11 we find a plane being apparently taken over on its way from Los Angeles to Chicago. The fellow was distraught and upset, mentally sick, but he charged the cockpit. So the cockpit was opened, and the pilot immediately called about a hijacking, and the passengers had to overpower him.

First, why weren't there marshals on that plane? We have an authority right now for marshals. What I am trying to say is, somehow, somewhere this administration has to work just as diligently—and they are to be commended on their diligence on correlating a coalition abroad—they have to correlate a coalition here in the country; and we have not done that.

This bill, in other words, is absolutely urgent because they seemingly want to wait for this intramural to work its way out with respect to the fixing of accountability and authority here. And that is what we are all for, in a bipartisan fashion agreed upon. We do not want to just hire a bunch of people. That isn't the problem. The problem is absolute security.

This war is not a military war. And the headlines are misleading: so many aircraft carriers; so many B-2 bombers; so many this; so many helicopters; so many that. The truth is, if you are going after terrorists who are spread amongst 50 countries—and they are zealots, they are fanatics—if you are going after them, you have to go on sort of an individual way; and it is an intelligence war.

Now, No. 1, if we had secured that cockpit, then you save the F-15 that was necessary. Are we going to have F-15s flying all over everyone's domestic flight; have military flights on top, domestic flights on the bottom? Is that America? Is that what we are going to have? Absolutely not.

So how do you forestall that? Secure the cockpit. But they have not done it. Boeing said within 2 weeks they could retrofit all the doors in their airplanes, until you get a steel or a kevlar door put on such as they have in Israel. But they are waiting on studying and studying and everything else.

Our first conference—I say this advisedly—dismayed me, when we conferred with the administration authorities on this particular bill. They were talking about its implementation 9 months to a year—can you imagine that—literally. That is what has gotten this Senator disturbed and exercised, along with the Senator from Arizona, about the urgency. We don't want to have F-15's and everybody in the Guard and everybody in the Air Force flying over all the domestic flights in America.

So you secure that cockpit and there is one thing they know: They are not going to run it into a building. And if it is a hijacking, that pilot doesn't open the door but he calls wherever he is going to land immediately, and have law enforcement there. You wipe out the expense and the calling up of the F-15 pilots and the expense of the F-15 planes.

These are the kinds of things that ought to be done immediately, but they are not being done. I am introducing and pressing for it on this bill. I don't want to have to agree to any set-aside for another bill. There is too much procedural intramurals going on. We have been agreeable, agreeable, agreeable.

And in that context, I guess I have to, with a smile, say I don't mind being a little disagreeable in order to get this one done.

I emphasize again the intelligence. Suppose you had someone and you were with the intelligence of one of these Middle East countries, be they Muslim or not, and you had information, you know it, whatever it is, but if you finger "X" on a watch list and know if it can get through now, that is the communications, it isn't high tech—high tech, everybody wants to get bam, bam, bam and you have the computer, and it immediately goes in. No. You have the Central Intelligence Agency not telling the FBI because they are afraid of a leak, and it will reveal their source.

I saw this 40 years ago when I served on the Hoover commission investigating the Central Intelligence Agency. That is just inherent. What you want to do is protect your sources. So do you give the information ahead and give it to unreliable sources and everything? While the FBI is absolutely reliable, certainly the screeners aren't, the ones we have. Everybody will agree to that. So you have to have high-tech personal, professional. It has to be a federalization where we can check these people, recheck them, not have any labor difficulties.

I supported President Reagan on the controllers. You can't have them striking and negotiating and everything else. This is a war of intelligence. The people at the airports, if they are going to stop would-be terrorists, have to be positioned to receive that watch list information. And they are not going to be giving it to them until our Government can guarantee they are secure. That is just bluntly put.

In that light, the President of the United States has to get in not whether we are going to get first the Amtrak, no; we have to do the seaports, no; we have to do benefits, no; we have to do counterterrorism and get into all of these procedural things. He has to tell the country to bug off, relax. You are not going to get a heck of a lot of information. I am your President. I have a team and we are working and if we can get this bin Laden fellow, you might know of it days or weeks afterwards. We might get him but we might not want to reveal how we got him for a period of time.

That is the kind of war we are in. You don't have to satisfy this media crowd and everything else like that that wants the story of the day, the headline. This is a war not to be run on the 7 o'clock news. They can relax, take weekend leave and everything else of that kind and, like the President says, go to Disney World. But forget about all this information to be had.

We need this bill. We can't tarry around. We need professionalism in it. It is not like the Israelis have, where intelligence is the outer rim, but it goes all the way down, as I have said before, to the person vacuuming the carpet in the middle of the aisle of the plane, because that person, with access to the plane itself, could put in a weapon like we found a bunch of these cardboard cutters and everything else of that kind, as we are finding in some other planes now on a diligent inspection.

My distinguished colleague from Texas is here. I will yield because she has been a leader for several years on this particular score. I am grateful for her leadership.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from South Carolina for all the work he has done. He is chairman of the Commerce Committee; I am the ranking member of the Aviation Subcommittee. We have worked very well together and crafted a bipartisan bill that would address the issues of aviation security.

As Senator McCAIN said earlier today, the people of our country are not going back to the airlines. This is causing a rippling effect throughout our economy. We need to stem the flow of job losses by getting the airlines back in business so the hotels will fill up, people will rent cars again and people will be able to go about their business in as normal a way as possible.

The last thing on Earth we want is to have the economy be so shaky that we are unable to gear up the national defenses that we know we need.

We have men and women putting their lives on the line as we speak for our country, for our freedom. For us not to do the right thing and get our country back on an even keel after this terrible incident of September 11 would be unthinkable. That is why all of us are working to come to an agreement on this bill.

We are 95 percent in agreement. There are a few issues on which we disagree. Most people know what these are. But what we cannot afford in this legislation is to put extraneous amendments on it. This is not the kind of bill that should be a Christmas tree where you have this amendment and that amendment and somebody's pet project. This is too important. This is aviation security for our country. It is for the people who are going to airports, people who are flying. People are afraid right now. I don't think they should be, because in all the flying I have done since September 11, and it has been every single weekend and also flying around during the weekend, I have been on a lot of flights that are half full. These flights were very safe. People are going all out to make flying safe.

The bottom line is, the people are not coming back. The planes are half full. It is going to take aviation security legislation to get us back on track.

We need to stop the process arguments. We need to stop the extraneous arguments. We need to say: I understand Senator CARNAHAN wanting her bill. I do understand that. It is a very important bill. At some point in the next few weeks, we will take up her bill. We will take up other kinds of legislation also. I want to support Amtrak security, but if it is not going to be agreed to totally, it is not going to go on this bill. I hope it can. But if it can't, then we are going to complete aviation security. That is the bottom line.

I am very pleased to work with Senator HOLLINGS, Senator McCAIN, Senator ROCKEFELLER, and many others who have taken the position that we must do aviation security.

What this bill is going to do is give us more air marshals. I introduced the bill for air marshals the week of September 11, but we still have not acted on adding air marshals. The President has done it on his own with emergency powers, but that is not an answer. We want a long-term solution. We want people to know there is a stable, seamless aviation security system in our country with air marshals, with screeners who are qualified, with supervisors who are qualified, all of which are law enforcement personnel. And we want to reinforce cockpit doors so that no pilot will have to worry about security in the cabin. The pilot should be focused on flying the airplane safely. We should not ask him to do anything else.

Now is the time to act. We need to finish this bill. I hope we can go to cloture right away. If we are going to go to cloture, let's do it tomorrow, or even tonight. Let's stay and finish all of the extraneous things and get on with this bill. We have legitimate disagreements. Let's get on with it and determine how much is going to be federalized. I have one position, and maybe someone else has a different position. Those are legitimate. Let's argue it, debate it, vote and go on.

The bottom line is that we are 95 percent in agreement; it is time to have aviation security for our country, for our citizens, and for our economy.

I thank the Senator from South Carolina. I yield the floor.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may follow Senator MURRAY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Chair recognizes the Senator from Washington.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I thank the chairman of the Commerce Committee for bringing this bill to the floor. Aviation security is a critical measure. I agree with the Senator that we have to do this right and we need to pass this bill. It is critical. It is critical to the American public that we bring this bill up, move it forward, and get it passed, and reassure our constituents in the country that air travel is safe because we have done our part as well.

I have come to the floor to speak on behalf of the more than 100,000 American workers who are now facing layoffs as a result of much of what has happened in the last month. For weeks, these workers have been waiting for this Senate to pass a workers assistance package, and today we finally have an amendment on the floor to help them. I have come to the floor to speak on behalf of that amendment and encourage its immediate passage.

For many of our workers, the clock is ticking. In fact, this Friday, 10,000 Boeing workers are going to receive notice that they are going to lose their jobs. They are very concerned about how they are going to feed their families, get health care, and how they are going to pay their mortgages. They need the Senate to take action.

Just look at the layoffs that have been announced so far. On September 15, United Airlines announced it was laying off 20,000 workers. On the same date, Continental announced it was laying off 12,000 workers. On September 17, US Airways announced it was laying off 11,000 workers. On September 18, the Boeing Company announced up to 30,000 layoffs. On September 19, American Airlines announced 20,000 layoffs. On September 26, Delta announced another 13,000 layoffs. These aren't just layoffs; these are people—people with families, people who are in our communities, people who are very frightened and insecure about their future. They are workers who are losing their jobs every day, and they need our help.

In my home State of Washington, we are really feeling the impact because of these layoffs in the aviation and aerospace industry. The Boeing Company plans to lay off 30,000 employees, as I said: That is 30 percent of its workforce. By the Christmas holiday season, I will have at least 10,000 of my constituents out of work. And it is not just Boeing; hundreds of suppliers across the Nation will be impacted as well.

The clock is ticking. This Congress has still not passed a workers assistance package. I urge my colleagues to support the Carnahan amendment so we can help those workers. Congress, as we all know, has taken care of the airlines by passing $15 billion in assistance. I supported that package because it was the right thing to do. Getting the airlines back up and running quickly helped us avoid further layoffs.

We have also recognized that we have a responsibility to help the many workers who are losing their jobs through no fault of their own. So far, this Congress has not provided any help for the 110,000 airline workers and their families who will be laid off or the 30,000 Boeing workers who will be laid off. These workers have to put food on the table; they need to make car payments and pay their rent or their mortgage. They are losing their jobs, and they need our help. The Carnahan amendment will help them.

In fact, these efforts are even more important today given the underlying problems we are having with the U.S. economy. Before September 11, our economy was teetering on the edge of recession. Unemployment is currently at 4.9 percent, and that is the highest level in over 4 years. Some economists are now predicting that unemployment will reach 6.5 percent by the middle of next year. Every one of us will have families in our States who will be impacted by this.

Even worse, these economic problems are affecting workers in all of the related industries, and we have heard from them—the travel agents, hotel and restaurant employees, caterers, car rental companies, and many more; the slide will keep moving. We are now working with the Senate and the House on a stimulus package that is intended to help our broader economy. Some predict the pricetag will be as high as $75 billion.

I want to make sure we meet the needs of the men and women, the moms and dads, who are facing layoffs right now. We need to adopt the Carnahan amendment to assist our displaced workers.

The amendment will provide an additional 20 weeks of cash payments to airlines and aircraft manufacturing employees who lost jobs directly as a result of September 11. For individuals who are laid off but who do not qualify for State unemployment assistance, our bill will provide unemployment benefits for 26 weeks. This will mean so much to those who are very worried about losing their homes and feeding their families in the coming weeks and months. Our amendment will also provide worker training benefits for laid-off employees and for those threatened by layoffs, so that they are better equipped and more confident and can find a new job as we see the economy and where it develops in coming years.

Finally, this amendment will provide 12 months of COBRA health insurance payments for our affected workers. This is really critical for our families who need to know that their loved ones are not losing their health care along with their jobs. No one in our country should live with that fear right now.

I urge my colleagues to adopt this much-needed amendment. The clock is ticking, and these workers facing layoffs cannot wait. We have to move forward and get these workers the help and give them the confidence they need now. I urge our colleagues to vote for this workers assistance package, to move the underlying bill and do what we need to do to get this economy back on track so that our country can be confident again.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Minnesota is recognized.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I will be brief. I feel as though every day I have been speaking on the same issue. I think I am a cosponsor of the Hollings airline safety bill. It is a fine bill. I ask unanimous consent, in case I am not, to be a cosponsor of the Carnahan amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, first of all, I say to Senator HOLLINGS I can do this in 1, 2, 3 order.

Senator MURRAY, I appreciate her statement. She has an awful lot of hard-pressed workers in her State. I appreciate her advocacy for working families in Washington.

To Senator HOLLINGS, he has given enough speeches to deafen all the gods about how the industry gets back on its feet when people feel safe to fly, and aviation safety is the first priority. He is absolutely right, and this is a critically important piece of legislation. I look forward to passing it. We will have passed an important piece of legislation for our country.

Then the third point I want to make is that I heard the Senator from Texas—and I am sorry she is not here now, so I won't go into big debate. I heard her talk about the need to not have extraneous amendments, and then I heard her reference the Carnahan amendment. I will tell you something. The 4,500 Northwest employees who are out of work right now believe they are extraneous. They believe they are central—central to their families, central to our communities, central to Minnesota, and central to our country.

I would like to say to Senators who are opposed to this amendment or blocking this amendment, if you were to have a poll—I am just about positive of this—anywhere in the country and asked whether or not people think in addition to our helping the industry we ought to help employees, 90 percent of the people would say, "Of course." Of course, you should help working families. You helped the industry; now you should help the employees and, of course, this should be a priority. As a matter of fact, one of the biggest criticisms—and there are not a lot of criticisms people have right now about what we are doing in the Congress—one of the criticisms is how can you bail out the industry and not help the employees? When I hear my colleagues say this is an extraneous amendment—tell that to the men, women, and children who are hurting right now.

We help people when they are flat on their backs. We provide the support to them. The Carnahan amendment does three things scaled down. I wish it was even more comprehensive, but it is extremely important. It extends the unemployment benefits, it provides the job training, and it provides—the Senator from Massachusetts is always the leader on health care issues—up to 12 months 100-percent payment of COBRA payments, which employees cannot afford when they are out of work otherwise.

This is a lifeline for these employees. It is extremely important. It is the right thing to do. Frankly, if this is the dividing line between Democrats and some Republicans, so be it. I would rather there be 100 Senators who are for this. I sure do not mind having a spirited debate about whether or not we should be helping these employees. I sure do not mind being on their side. That is what they expect from us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KERRY. I thank the Chair. Mr. President, it is somewhat extraordinary that so many weeks after the events of September 11, in the immediate days thereafter, almost all of the relevant personnel within the aviation industry—the people who fly the planes, the screeners, the people at the airports responsible for security, the flight attendants—all of them came forward and said we need a Federal system with Federal employees and Federal standards that guarantees the safety of our aircraft access and our airways.

Here we are, after this extraordinary outpouring of emotion and genuine bipartisanship within the Congress that came together to pass $40 billion immediately, and that united to provide a clear statement of the will of the American people expressed through the Congress with regard to our reaction to those events in a series of measures on which we found the capacity to come to the floor of the Senate and vote as one, here we are now weeks later still procrastinating over when we are going to have a final vote, or how we are going to get to a final vote on the question of aviation security.

It seems to me extraordinary that at a moment when we are trying to prove to a lot of countries the virtues of democracy we are struggling in the greatest deliberative body on the face of the planet—as we are often referred to or even like to call ourselves—we are struggling to find the capacity to have a vote, to let the votes fall where they may. Let them fall where they may.

Some people do not like the Carnahan amendment. I am amazed that they would call extraneous assistance to people who went to work on one morning and found out a few hours later their jobs were gone. I wonder how one can call extraneous a flight attendants who got on a plane after the events of that day to help people get back to their homes or locations from where those planes flew, to return them, and then got home and found after taking that risk they got a pink slip, their job no longer existed.

Mr. President, 140,000 aviation employees have lost their jobs since September 11. How anybody can suggest that for those people who did not have the opportunity to plan for a layoff, for those people who did not have the savings put away because of these events that clearly altered their lives in such a dramatic way, that we are not going to find it in our capacity, even as we bail out the airlines to the tune of billions of dollars, that we somehow are not prepared to extend health care benefits to them by paying their COBRA premiums or making training available to them to find another job or find additional unemployment compensation once the State unemployment compensation has run out.

That is not extraneous. That is fundamental to who we are as a people and to the kind of reaction we ought to spontaneously summon as a consequence of the events that happened.

I also hear my colleagues talking about the need to have some kind of boost to the economy. We have had a rather sizable tax cut which enormously benefited those people at the upper end of the income scale, but for some 28, 29 million Americans who pay most of their taxes through the payroll tax, they did not get any break.

For a lot of Americans, the best way to begin to bring back the economy as fast as possible is to give people the ability to spend money, to give them the ability to pay their bills and do the things that people do which will have the most profound impact in terms of stimulus at this point in time.

For those who look at the tax cut side of the ledger—and we have all embraced those tax cuts over the course of the past months in one form or another—the fact is certain kinds of business tax incentives and certain kinds of monetary efforts—for instance, lowering the interest rates at this point in time—are simply not going to make a difference in the rapid restoration of the economy. We could lower the interest rates to zero at this moment and it is not going to affect the creation of a new plant or the investment in some new business where that business is already affected by an intense overhang of excess capacity. For somebody who built their plant in the last year and a half, of course, that has a negative effect.

What you have to do is use up that capacity. Most of that, most people would agree, is going to take place on the demand side and the consumer side, and we have to face that.

It seems to me, both as a matter of fairness and common sense about how we are going to deal with the economy under these circumstances, providing assistance under the Carnahan amendment is the proper way to address the needs of 140,000 people who were summarily thrown out of work as a direct consequence of the events that took place, and I might add not just as a direct consequence but also to some degree as a calculated effort by some of the airlines to position themselves differently from where they were positioned prior to September 11.

Every one of us on the Commerce Committee and on the Aviation Subcommittee, those of us who have been following this issue for a period of time, know the aviation industry was already a significant percentage off, maybe 30 percent and in some cases more, prior to September 10. What we are seeing now, even after we have taken taxpayer dollars and provided billions of dollars to help bail out the airline industry, they are reducing capacity and adjusting the numbers of flights and the number of personnel well beyond the impact of September 11.

So if it is okay and appropriate—and many of us believed it was—to help bail out that industry because of the impact that industry has on a whole set of other downstream industries: the car rental industry, the restaurant industry, hotel, entertainment, a lot of things are tied to getting people back into airplanes, at the same time as the health and long-term welfare of that industry is being sought, we ought to be looking at the health and long-term welfare of those employees who have suffered as a consequence of both of those linked facts.

I think it is critical we pass the Carnahan amendment, as a matter of fairness to those workers.

Let me also say something about the aviation bill itself. I have heard from a number of pilots who have privately contacted me in the course of the last weeks to tell me stories that have not necessarily reached the public about why it is so critical to have this national standard applied to our employees. When you walk up to any counter anywhere in the country and talk to the people who check you in and talk to them about why they think it is important, you will really gain a much stronger understanding of the virtue of having this national system of employees who are accountable to one standard, accountable across the country to one system, and who work with an esprit de corps and with an expertise that provides those people flying on our aircraft the sense of safety they both want and deserve.

I think most of us who have been following this issue for a long time are convinced it is only when you have that kind of system and not a sort of disparate, multiheaded effort that stems from the contracting out of various airports all across the country to the low bidders for those particular airports, we know that by virtue of the imperatives of the bottom line and the structure of the airlines themselves and the way in which that has been managed that there has been an incentive to find employees that do not cost a lot, that do not require a huge amount of training, do not require a huge amount of supervision because that costs a lot more money for airlines that have already been in difficult straits. Unless we raise the pay level of those employees, the training level, the supervisory level, and the standards to which they are supervised and under which they have to work, we are not going to have that kind of control.

Senator HOLLINGS, again and again, has referred to El Al. El Al is a classic example of a security system that has escaped the kind of terror we witnessed on September 11. It does so because of the layered structure of government input that guarantees a standard which can be adhered to and which is accountable to those standards.

If we want to get people back in our airplanes to the levels they were previously and to even greater levels as we go down the road, we need to make certain we have the highest standards possible, the greatest accountability possible, and the broadest supervisory standards, with accountability, that we could put into place. The American people demand nothing more and they deserve nothing less.

Ultimately, if we are doing less than that, we leave ourselves open to the possibility that not in the next weeks—I do not believe that will happen in the next weeks or even the next months—but when people begin to relax a little bit, as is normal, when you begin to back off because you have these different companies and you do not have the kind of standardization that we are seeking, that is when someone will once again look to find the weakness in the system.

Even as we talk about the airlines, I want to reiterate what a number of us have said on a number of different occasions. It is not just the airlines that require standards with respect to security. Our trains are exposed and our buses, as we have seen, other forms of transportation. If we are truly in the kind of conflict we have described to the American people—and we are—and if indeed threats are possible down the road as we proceed forward—and they are—and all of us know that, then it behooves us to try to minimize the potential exposure to the American people with the maximum return in effectiveness.

We currently have the National Guard, the FBI, marshals. You walk into an airport today and you have this conglomerate of people who are there. Why? Because everybody knows what we have before them in terms of that screening system is inadequate. What we need to do is guarantee those marshals can be on the aircraft not waiting at a screening section; that the Guard can be doing what the Guard may be called on to do in the course of the next months; that the FBI and the other personnel can be following up on leads and preventing rather than guarding our airport entrances, and the only way we will ultimately have the kind of esprit de corps that we need is to build the supervisory capacity and supervision and accountability that we have within the INS, within the Border Patrol, the Coast Guard and all of those other security measures that we take at other levels.

I hope the Senate, within the next 24 hours, will finally vote on this legislation. I thank the Senator from Arizona and the Senator from South Carolina for their leadership on this on the Commerce Committee. I am pleased to be an original author and cosponsor with them of this legislation, but I am frustrated we cannot have a series of votes and let the votes fall where they may. If the Carnahan amendment deserves a majority of support from the Senate, then it should receive it. If it does not, then we move on, and we have a final vote on the question of aviation security. We need to get this done, and we need to get it done now. We should have had it done previously. I hope in the next hours the Senate will end this process of procrastination and restore the sense of unity and purpose and urgency that has guided us to this moment.

I yield the floor.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I rise in support of Senator CARNAHAN's amendment regarding assistance for airline workers. As Senator CARNAHAN has described, her amendment would provide much needed help to workers in the airline industry who have been laid off as a result of the horrific events of September 11, and such help is desperately needed.

The need to help these workers is an issue that we failed to address when we gave $15 billion in aid to the airlines. Yet these airline workers need immediate temporary assistance in order to find new jobs. Delta Airlines, based in my home State of Georgia, has already cut 13,000 jobs. And this is not the end of the layoffs; many more Americans are going to be affected.

The approach to this problem outlined in Senator CARNAHAN's amendment is a measured and moderate one. It addresses only the most immediate needs of these workers: The need for unemployment benefits, the need for continued health insurance coverage, and the need for job training so that they can begin to again contribute to our Nation's economy. In addition, the benefits provided in this package are temporary; they in no way would be taking on permanent responsibility for a new group of Americans. Finally, the provisions of this amendment are narrowly crafted to apply only to those workers who lost their jobs as a direct result of the attacks of September 11 or due to security measures taken in response to the attacks. We would, therefore, not be providing assistance to those who are the victims of the general economic downturn.

In short, this is a sensible, middle-of-the-road approach to one the most pressing problems we face as a result of the September 11 attacks. It makes good sense to address this issue now, and I urge my colleagues to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, the distinguished manager and I have a couple of amendments, if I could ask the indulgence of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask that the pending Hollings-McCain amendment be considered agreed to and the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, that the amendment be considered original text for the purpose of further amendments, and that the Daschle-Carnahan amendment 1855 remain in its current status as a first-degree amendment.

Mr. GRAMM. Reserving the right to object, I'm not sure I understand the unanimous consent request. Could you repeat it.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I ask consent that the pending managers' amendment, the Hollings-McCain amendment be considered agreed to and the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, that the amendment be considered original text for the purpose of further amendments and that the Daschle-Carnahan amendment No. 1855 remain in its current status as a first-degree amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment (No. 1854) was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1857

Mr. HOLLINGS. I have an amendment on behalf of the Senator from Vermont, Senator LEAHY, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the pending amendment is laid aside.

The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS], for Mr. LEAHY, proposes an amendment numbered 1857.

Mr. MCCAIN. I ask unanimous consent the reading of the amendment be dispensed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To amend title 49, United States Code)

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. ____ . ENCOURAGING AIRLINE EMPLOYEES TO REPORT SUSPICIOUS ACTIVITIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter II of chapter 449 of title 49, United States Code, is amended by inserting at the end the following:

“§ 44938. Immunity for reporting suspicious activities

“(a) IN GENERAL.—Any air carrier or foreign air carrier or any employee of an air carrier or foreign air carrier who makes a voluntary disclosure of any suspicious transaction relevant to a possible violation of law or regulation, relating to air piracy, a threat to aircraft or passenger safety, or terrorism, as defined by section 3077 of title 18, United States Code, to any employee or agent of the Department of Transportation, the Department of Justice, any Federal, State, or local law enforcement officer, or any airport or airline security officer shall not be civilly liable to any person under any law or regulation of the United States, any constitution, law, or regulation of any State or political subdivision of any State, for such disclosure.

“(b) APPLICATION.—Subsection (a) shall not apply to—

“(1) any disclosure made with actual knowledge that the disclosure was false, inaccurate, or misleading; or

“(2) any disclosure made with reckless disregard as to the truth or falsity of that disclosure.

“§ 44939. Sharing security risk information

“The Attorney General, in consultation with the Deputy Secretary for Transportation Security and the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, shall establish procedures for notifying the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration, and airport or airline security officers, of the identity of persons known or suspected by the Attorney General to pose a risk of air piracy or terrorism or a threat to airline or passenger safety.”

(b) REPORT.—Not later than 120 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Attorney General shall report to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, the House Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure, and the Judiciary Committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives on the implementation of the procedures required under section 44939 of title 49, United States Code, as added by this section.

(c) CHAPTER ANALYSIS.—The chapter analysis for chapter 449 of title 49, United States Code, is amended by inserting at the end the following:

“44938. Immunity for reporting suspicious activities.

“44939. Sharing security risk information.”

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I am pleased that the Senate will accept my amendment to improve aircraft and passenger safety by encouraging airlines and airline employees to report suspicious activities to the proper authorities.

In addition, this amendment requires the Department of Justice and the Federal Bureau of Investigation to share security risk information with the Federal Aviation Administration and airport or airline security officers.

I want to commend Senator HOLLINGS and Senator MCCAIN for their good work on this airport security legislation. I support the Hollings-McCain Aviation Security Act and believe this amendment improves an already excellent bill.

The Leahy amendment provides civil immunity for airlines and airline employees who report information on potential violations of law relating to air piracy, threats to aircraft or passenger safety, or terrorism to the Department of Justice, Department of Transportation, a law enforcement officer, or an airline or airport security officer.

This civil immunity would not apply to any disclosure made with actual knowledge that the disclosure was false, inaccurate or misleading or any disclosure made with reckless disregard as to its truth or falsity.

In other words, this amendment would not protect bad actors.

According to press reports, two of the suspected September 11, 2001, terrorists were on an FBI watch list. Both the Secretary of Transportation and the Attorney General, however, testified before Congress that the FBI, the INS, and the Department of Justice do not currently supply these watch lists to the FAA or to the Nation's airline carriers to match up passenger lists with potential threat lists.

It is time for that policy to change. This amendment requires the Attorney General to establish procedures for notifying the FAA of the identity of known or suspected terrorists.

Monday's Wall Street Journal reported that the National Commission on Terrorism has stressed the importance of more effective coordination and dissemination of security information including the FBI's watch list of potential terrorists and their associates.

Indeed, the Wall Street Journal reported:

A government-created task force recommended ways to plug what historically has been one of the most glaring loopholes in aviation security: a lack of clear-cut procedures to circulate timely information about potential threats to airlines and airports.

My amendment will put those needed procedures into place by requiring the Attorney General, in consultation with the Deputy Secretary for Transportation Security, which is created in the underlying bill, and the Director of the FBI, to establish procedures to notify the FAA and airport or airline security officers, of the identity of persons known or suspected to pose a risk of air piracy or terrorism or a threat to airline or passenger safety.

Finally, the amendment requires the Attorney General to report to Congress on the implementation of the procedures to identify these suspected or known hijackers or terrorists.

I believe the Leahy amendment will improve aircraft and passenger safety and provide the flying public with greater security. Indeed, this amendment has the support of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce among others.

I thank Senator HOLLINGS and Senator McCain for accepting this amendment.

I ask unanimous consent that this article from the Wall Street Journal, entitled, "U.S. Task Force Proposes Ways For Sharing Security-Risk Data With Airlines, Airports," be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Wall Street Journal, Oct. 8, 2001]

U.S. TASK FORCE PROPOSES WAYS FOR SHARING SECURITY-RISK DATA WITH AIRLINES, AIRPORTS

(By Andy Pasztor)

A government-created task force recommended ways to plug what historically has been one of the most glaring loopholes in aviation security: a lack of clear-cut procedures to circulate timely information about potential threats to airlines and airports.

The recommendations submitted to Transportation Secretary Norman Mineta urge, among other things, creation of a "federal security agency" that would "fundamentally" improve integration of "law enforcement and national security intelligence data."

The proposed entity, supported in concept by the White House as well as congressional leaders, would be responsible for directly passing on such threat information to senior security personnel at each airline and airport. Officials of the Federal Aviation Administration have acknowledged that they only received partial information from the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

"We have access to the names that the FBI gives us," but don't "normally have access" to the full "watch list" of potential terrorists or their associates assembled by the bureau, U.S. immigration officials and other law enforcement agencies, Monte Belger, the FAA's acting deputy administrator, told lawmakers last month.

Despite extensive debate over giving the FAA access to certain intelligence data, there was no resolution of that issue prior to Sept. 11. After the attacks, the FAA instituted some makeshift security procedures. Before any commercial jetliner can take off, airlines must check the names of all passengers against a lengthy and continuously updated "watch list" of names supplied by the FBI.

Paul Bremer, chairman of a blue-ribbon government panel called the National Commission on Terrorism, has stressed the importance of more effective coordination and dissemination of security information.

Since the FBI "is in charge of catching criminals and prosecuting them," historically it has had some reluctance to quickly pass on potential evidence to the FAA or airlines. "Part of the problem in the FBI is a cultural one," Mr. Bremer has said, adding "we need to find a way [such information] can be disseminated" more rapidly and predictably.

But in certain of its conclusions, the task force also appears to have been keenly interested in trying to minimize delays.

Citing "an urgent need" to find more efficient methods of moving people through the security system as passenger volume ramps up, the panel recommended "a nationwide program for the voluntary prescreening of passengers." By issuing frequent travelers special credentials or checking their identities and backgrounds before they arrive at the airport, such travelers would be subjected to less scrutiny. That would allow security personnel to focus extra attention on other passengers. Meanwhile, a companion task force appointed by Mr. Mineta to recommend changes in onboard security systems stopped short of supporting some concepts previously proposed by the White House.

Members of this task force said "while there may be value" in installing video cameras designed to show pilots' activity in the cabin, "we have no consensus on whether to proceed with this technology." The panel concluded that calls by President Bush to install double doors to cockpits were premature. Such a "design will have limited applicability to most aircraft in the U.S. fleet" partly because there isn't enough room between the current door and the flight deck to accommodate such a system, the task force concluded.

Mr. HOLLINGS. The amendment is agreed to on both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, Mr. LEAHY.

AMENDMENT NO. 1858

Mr. HOLLINGS. On behalf of the distinguished Senator from Nevada, Senator ENSIGN, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS], for Mr. ENSIGN, proposes an amendment numbered 1858.

Mr. MCCAIN. I ask unanimous consent reading of the amendment be dispensed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To permit the Secretary of Transportation to appoint retired law enforcement officers to serve as air marshals)

At the appropriate place in the section relating to air marshals, insert the following subsection:

() AUTHORITY TO APPOINT RETIRED LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICERS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of Transportation may appoint an individual who is a retired law enforcement officer or a retired member of the Armed Forces as a Federal air marshal, regardless of age, if the individual otherwise meets the background and fitness qualifications required for Federal air marshals.

Mr. HOLLINGS. We agree with the amendment.

Mr. MCCAIN. If we could withhold for 30 seconds to describe the amendment of Senator ENSIGN, it allows retired law enforcement officers or retired armed forces personnel to serve as Federal air marshals if the individual meets the background and fitness qualifications. I think this is a good amendment that will provide some highly qualified, trained and experienced individuals. I urge its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1858) was agreed to.

Mr. MCCAIN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, it is my understanding, we now have of the underlying bill the Carnahan amendment, which is a first-degree amendment; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is correct.

AMENDMENT NO. 1859 TO AMENDMENT NO. 1855

Mr. GRAMM. I send a second-degree amendment to the desk and ask for its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM] proposes an amendment numbered 1859 to amendment No. 1855.

Mr. GRAMM. I ask unanimous consent reading of the amendment be dispensed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The text of the amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Amendments Submitted.")

Mr. GRAMM. I'm not going to spend a lot of time tonight talking about this amendment. We will have an opportunity to talk about it tomorrow. However, I do want to try to make a couple of points tonight.

First, I want to make a point we are trying to pass a bill on aviation security. In my opinion, this bill is far from perfect. It seems to me there are 100 Members in the Senate who believe we need to do everything we can do to act quickly and act efficiently in making air transportation safe again. We want the American people to be and feel secure and we want to get planes flying. Our economy is very much affected by the ability of Americans to travel, and in the process, to go about their business, because the business of America is business.

We now have a pending amendment, the Carnahan amendment, that has nothing to do with aviation security. I know some of my colleagues will argue that the amendment is meritorious. I have been somewhat amazed by the argument that we took action to "bail out" the airlines, and now it is time we do something for the employees of the airlines. I beg to differ. For the last 140 years, the distribution of resources in the American economy has been roughly 80 percent for labor and 20 percent for capital. There is no reason to believe that of the $5 billion of assistance we provided to give emergency relief for the limitations placed on the airlines on the 11th and the ensuing weeks, that approximately 80 percent of that money did not go directly to the benefit of people who worked for the airlines. In fact, the whole purpose of the funding was to prevent weak airlines from going broke and to try to stabilize the situation.

Now to come back and say we need another bill dealing with special benefits for people who work for airlines, it seems to me, approaches piling on. Quite frankly, I don't understand the logic that if you work for an airline, and I work for a travel agent, and we are both out of work, why you are more deserving of Federal benefits than I am. I don't understand the logic that treats people differently in unemployment compensation, and to carry over their benefits based on who they work for. That system makes no sense whatever to me.

I think it is important to note that the Carnahan amendment, at least by my rough and rugged calculations, would cost $95 billion a year if the same benefits were applied to everybody in the American economy, rather than simply being applied to people who work for airlines.

To sum up the points I want to make about the Carnahan amendment: One, people who work for airlines were the principle beneficiary of the $5 billion of direct aid and the $10 billion of loan guarantees. The whole objective was to try to keep airlines operating so they could provide service and so that employees would not be dislocated economically by losing their jobs. I don't understand the logic of an amendment that treats people who work for one private employer differently than people who work for other private employers, even though both may have lost their job as a result of what happened on the 11th.

I am not for the Carnahan amendment. I don't make any excuses for being opposed to it. I think it is bad policy. And quite frankly in this era of bipartisanship it looks awfully partisan to me. It seems to me since the decision has been made that we are going to offer extraneous amendments on the Aviation Security Act, both sides can play that game. My amendment is a straightforward amendment that opens up 2,000 acres of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge for oil and gas production. In the process, it adds more oil reserves to America's proven reserves than 30 years of supply from Saudi Arabia. It would require the use of the best available technology for environmental protection. The provision has been adopted by a fairly substantial bipartisan vote in the House of Representatives.

One might ask, what does energy security have to do with the Aviation Security Act? My answer is it has a lot more to do with the Aviation Security Act than the Carnahan amendment. If we are going to vote on extraneous amendments that our Democrat colleagues want to vote on, then I want to vote on amendments that I think will benefit the country.

Quite frankly, I think nothing could do more to immediately bolster national security than enabling us to produce more oil and gas here at home at a price consumers can afford to pay to turn the wheels of energy and agriculture. So I wanted to come over today and offer this amendment.

Finally, let me reiterate, before I yield the floor and let our colleagues speak, my concerns about the Aviation Security Act. I think 100 Members are in favor of doing something here. But I think we should be trying to do something within two constraints: No. 1, how can we provide additional airport and aviation security in a way that will minimize the amount of time it takes to put it in place? And, No. 2, how can we do it in such a way as to maximize the effectiveness of the security we provide?

I personally believe we would have been well advised and the country would have been well served if we had allowed the President, in implementing this program, to decide when to use Government employees and when to use employees from the private sector and to pick and choose in such a way as to implement a program as quickly as possible that would be as effective as possible.

I think we have made a mistake by mandating that the people who are employed under this act in our major airports all be Federal employees. It seems to me that will add to the amount of time it takes to put the program in effect, and I think it is highly questionable that that kind of binding constraint on the executive branch of Government is aimed at making the system the most efficient possible.

I think we could have written a better bill had we allowed the President to do this within the two constraints of doing it as quickly as possible and having a system that is as effective as possible. The decision was made not to do that, to move ahead even though the President expressed a preference to have flexibility. The decision was made to move ahead by mandating Government employees.

I think that is not good public policy. I am not saying we would not be better off having a bill that is non-optimal than not having a bill. But I am simply saying, in this spirit of bipartisanship, it seems to me that the right way to have done this would have been to trust the President and give him the flexibility. That the bill did not do.

So in yielding the floor, let me reiterate where we are. We now have the underlying substitute as the pending bill. We have a first-degree amendment, the Carnahan amendment, and we have a second-degree amendment which would open a very limited area of ANWR, 2,000 acres. It would add to the oil reserves of the country the equivalent of 30 years of Saudi Arabian imports. And it would require that this oil and gas be produced with the best available technology.

I am sure Senator MURKOWSKI will speak about why this is something we should do, as the former chairman of the Energy Committee, if we are in fact going to consider the Carnahan amendment. Let me say if we simply decide to focus, as I believe we should, on aviation security, if we should decide to drop the Carnahan amendment, I would be willing to pull down this amendment. But if we are going to deal with extraneous matters, then we ought to be dealing with extraneous matters, in my opinion, that are more related to the crisis we face than is the Carnahan amendment.

So if we are going to press ahead with that amendment, then I am going to press ahead with voting on ANWR. I understand the rules of the Senate. The majority leader has filed cloture on the Carnahan amendment. I will vote against cloture. I hope cloture will be denied. But if cloture is adopted, then my amendment to the Carnahan amendment will fall. But I will offer it again as a first-degree amendment.

I want to reiterate, if we are going to get in this business of dealing with extraneous amendments, which I think is a mistake—I think under the circumstances that, on a united basis, we ought to move ahead with aviation security—but if we are going to get into these extraneous amendments, then I think everybody ought to have the right to get into them. I cannot imagine anything that would be more important that we could do tomorrow on the floor of the Senate than to adopt a House-passed provision that, on a very limited basis, would open ANWR and would add more proven oil reserves to the Nation than 30 years' supply from Saudi Arabia.

I appreciate the Chair's indulgence and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I welcome the opportunity to join with Senator CARNAHAN in urging the Senate to provide some important relief for workers and workers' families whose loss of jobs were directly related to the terrible terrorist attacks which took place here earlier in September.

I think all Americans have been struck by a variety of different emotions in these recent weeks. I absolutely found them inspiring, almost beyond description in so many different ways. Obviously, the extraordinary loss of life was breathtaking in its scope and its impact on so many families. But we saw absolutely extraordinary heroism by many individuals who never, probably, considered themselves to be heroes or heroines. I think that has been emblazoned on the minds of people all over this country, and really all over this world. It will be a proud part of our Nation's character and history.

Something else we have seen is extraordinary acts of generosity towards our fellow citizens. Americans are a generous people. I think all of us have seen, in small, personal ways as well as in large ways, the scope of these contributions to the Red Cross, the contributions of blood, doctors running down to hospitals—so many different acts of generosity. That really is the background of the time we are meeting. It is true of the time we are meeting here this evening.

In the immediate wake of the tragedy, this institution responded to the challenge to our transportation system, our airline transportation system. In a very short period of time, because of the nature of the emergency, because there had been direct governmental intervention, where airlines were closed down, we took action in order to try to provide some relief to that industry. We took those steps, and we are very hopeful they will be enough to make sure that industry will continue to play an important role in our national economy.

Now we took care of management during those actions. They are going to make sure their salaries are going to be paid. The management of the airline industry was taken care of, some of them in extremely generous ways. But we believed at the time we had to take that kind of action.

Now what are we being asked to do under the Carnahan amendment? All we are saying is, fair is fair. We have taken care of the management in the airline industry, we have taken care of the airline industry, now we are talking about being fair to the workers in the industry. Fair is fair. The American people understand fairness. That is what the Carnahan amendment is basically all about. It is reflected in unemployment insurance, COBRA assistance and training. But it is about fairness.

Those workers include the reservation personnel, customer service personnel, flight attendants, baggage handlers, mechanics who fix the planes, the workers who clean the planes, the food service workers, the shuttle drivers—you could go on and on.

One hundred and twenty thousand of them have been thrown out of work—not because of their failure to perform good services, not because they were not working hard, and not because they weren't producing, but because of terrorist acts. On the one hand, we have taken care of management. The Carnahan amendment says we are now going to try to take care of the limited group, the workers. Fair is fair. Americans understand it. We are using the first vehicle to be able to do it. Some of us would have preferred that we did it at the time of the airline action, but so many of the voices that are opposed to this tonight said: Oh, no. We can't do that now. We shouldn't do that at this moment. We have to look out for the airlines. When we bring it up, they say: No. It is an extraneous matter.

Americans understand what is happening. More than 120,000 of these workers expect someone to speak for them. And the someone who is speaking for them will be the Members of Congress, the Senate, in a bipartisan way, I might add, with this amendment. In a bipartisan way we are going to speak for those workers.

That is what this debate and discussion is all about. Let us get to the business of voting on this measure. Let's get to the business of completing the action on airport security. Then let us go ahead and deal finally, hopefully, in the next 2 weeks with the economic package to look after other workers who are also suffering.

I am always interested when I listen to voices on the other side complain about unemployment insurance. We should really understand that workers have already indirectly paid into the unemployment compensation. Do we understand that? Workers pay into unemployment compensation. I am not sure how much management paid in and how much they paid at the time that we took care of the airline industry. And I voted for it and I support it. But we are talking about a major aspect of this program being extended unemployment compensation. Workers pay into unemployment compensation over a long period of time. Because we have been blessed with a strong economy, with strong price stability, economic growth, and low inflation, there has not been the necessity for unemployment compensation. But it is part of the safety net that has been accepted and supported in our society.

I know there are people who are opposed to that in this body as well, and continue to be opposed to it. But it is there. Workers pay into it. They need it. They need it at a time such as this when they have lost their jobs. This is a very modest program. It is unemployment compensation where workers receive a small percentage of what they otherwise would have received had they been able to retain their jobs. It helps them to maintain health insurance.

All of us understand the dangers. Every family understands the dangers if they lose their health insurance and what kind of additional pressure that puts on the families. For lower income families, it helps them in terms of buying into Medicaid—a very modest program in terms of the training for those who understand, as the persons did whom I talked with last night in Boston. They had been laid off when Eastern Airlines collapsed. They are now laid off by US Airways. They said they were going to try as people in their middle years to take the training programs that are out there to try to find a different sector. They just believe they have to start in a new area and a new career.

I look forward to the vote. The American people know this is relevant. It is absolutely essential. They can understand when you take care of the management, as we have, and take care of the industry, that workers have been a part of that whole process. If it had not been for those terrorist attacks, probably 95 percent of those workers would have been working either today, tonight, or tomorrow. As a direct result of that attack, these individuals have lost their livelihood.

The question is whether we are going to be responsive in a measured, modest way that will permit them to at least hold their families together for a short period of time until they can either find the training or be recalled to work. That is the least we can do for working families in this country.

I hope cloture will be obtained on this particular amendment.

The airline industry suffered enormously in the September 11 terrorist attacks. Congress has already made billions of dollars in federal relief available to the airlines. And now it is time for us to give urgently needed relief to the thousands of airline workers who have also been financially devastated by this tragedy.

The men and women who worked for the airlines and airports deserve our help today. We know that layoffs in the airline industry alone are expected to total about 120,000 workers. American Airlines and United have each announced layoffs of 20,000 workers. Continental, Delta, Northwest, and US Airways have each announced layoffs of more than 10,000 workers. Workers with smaller airlines have been hit even harder. Spirit has laid off 30 percent of its workforce while ATA is laying off about 20 percent of its workers.

We need to do more for workers like Penny Bloomquist of Minnesota. She was just laid off from her dream job as a flight attendant for Northwest Airlines. After working a range of different jobs while raising her children, Ms. Bloomquist sacrificed mightily to enroll in Northwest's six-day a week training program. Instead of living her dream today, she is instead selling off many of her belongings.

The Carnahan-Kennedy amendment will provide much-needed relief for Ms. Bloomquist and thousands of workers like her. Extended unemployment insurance benefits, job training benefits, and health care coverage will be available to airline workers, for workers who build our airplanes, and for airport workers, including airline food service employees. Only those workers who lost their jobs as a direct result of the attacks of September 11 or security measures taken in response to the attacks will be eligible for these benefits.

Fair is fair. Congress treated the airlines fairly, and now we must treat the workers fairly. Tens of thousands of other airline employees deserve unemployment insurance benefits. They deserve job training assistance. They deserve fair health care coverage, and they deserve it as soon as possible.

Under our amendment, workers who have exhausted their 26-week eligibility for state unemployment insurance would be eligible for additional weeks of cash payments funded entirely by the federal government.

This amendment will also provide unemployment insurance benefits to airline workers who are not currently eligible for state unemployment benefits. Workers who do not meet their State's requirements for unemployment insurance would receive 26 weeks of federally financed unemployment insurance.

The amendment will provide job training benefits to get people back to work. Workers who are not expected to return to their jobs in the airline industry will be eligible for retraining benefits. Other workers who are not expected to return to their original jobs, but who may find some alternative job in the airline industry, will be eligible for training to upgrade their skills.

Our amendment will also provide health care benefits to laid off airline and airport workers. Too often families cannot afford to pay to continue their health coverage after layoffs. They are forced to choose between health care and other basic family needs. In fact, almost 60 percent of the uninsured today have lost their job in the past year.

For airline workers who are currently covered under their employer's health plan, the federal government will reimburse 100 percent of their COBRA health care premiums. Workers who did not receive health care through their employers will be eligible for Medicaid, with the federal government covering 100 percent of the premiums.

We also need to do more for workers in other industries—especially the travel, tourism, hospitality, and restaurant industries that have been hit so hard. Last week, the Labor Department announced that unemployment claims climbed to the highest level in nine years. New claims for unemployment increased by 71,000 to a total of more than 528,000 in just one week.

Relief for these workers must be a significant part of the economic stimulus legislation that Congress will soon take up. These workers have lost their jobs with little, if any, severance pay, and little, if any, health insurance. We cannot abandon these workers and their families.

These attacks have also jeopardized the nation's overall economic health. In New York City alone, the overall cost of the World Trade Center attack could be as much as $105 billion over the next two years. Nationally, the Department of Commerce recently reported our worst quarter of economic growth in over 8 years.

Expanding Unemployment Insurance is one of the most effective ways to get our economy moving again. Unemployed workers have to spend every penny just to feed their families and pay their rent. So, for every dollar we give to unemployed workers, we expand the economy by more than $2.15. We must do all that we can to strengthen our economy.

Helping workers during a slowing economy is good economic policy. The unemployment insurance system will be critical to the nation's recovery and economic strength.

Historically, Congress has ensured extended benefits for each recession since the 1950s. Surely as we face this national crisis we should do the same for today's workers. If we act soon to provide extended benefits nationally, we will avoid the mistakes of the early 1990s. At that time, we waited the better part of a year to act. At the same time, hundreds of thousands of workers exhausted their benefits.

This time must be different. We need to act now. Not only will millions of workers be directly helped financially, but according to a recent study commissioned by the Department of Labor, unemployment insurance with the federally extended benefits reduces the number of workers who become unemployed. By improving and extending unemployment insurance, history shows that we will have a shorter, less severe recession.

Good unemployment benefits will help workers bridge the gap between jobs, and put money in their hands. Unemployed workers will spend these unemployment benefits, rather than save them. In fact, the DOL study concluded that unemployment insurance, with its extended benefits, mitigates 15 percent of the loss of GDP that otherwise would occur during a recession. We need this stimulus for the economy.

Every day we delay, more workers suffer. Working men and women are waiting for this help. We owe it to them to act, and we will have the chance to do just that one the economic stimulus legislation that we soon take up.

The issue before us now is relief for airlines workers. A strong airline industry is critical to the national economy. We need to keep the airlines flying—but we also must provide critical assistance for the airline workers who lost their jobs, and now is the time to do that.

I urge my colleagues to stand up for airline workers by passing the Carnahan-Kennedy amendment to give these workers the genuine relief they need.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington is recognized.

Ms. CANTWELL. Mr. President, I came down to the floor this evening to reiterate the comments of my friend from Missouri, Senator CARNAHAN, and the comments that the Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. KENNEDY, made in expressing the frustration about the lack of progress on the aviation security bill and the need to immediately consider worker assistance in this amendment.

We have spent a week now simply on the motion to proceed to consideration of one of the most important bills that we need to pass this year. Every day that we wait, critical measures to enhance the American public's confidence in the aviation system are not enacted—and, thus, economic activity dependent on this sector is not generated.

We have no time to waste. The issues that divide us are not terribly far apart. Like my colleague from Missouri, I don't want to slow this bill down. I had wanted to see both the security provisions and the worker assistance dealt with during the consideration of the airline assistance package that we passed several weeks ago. But people told us to wait, and do it after we pass that package.

So I think it's time that we all step back and reflect on the importance of these measures. I call on my colleagues to reconsider these differences that remain and get down to actual consideration of this bill, and the Carnahan amendment.

I would like to thank Senators HOLLINGS and MCCAIN for putting together an aviation security measure that will give this country the confidence to fly again. In the wake of the September 11 attacks, Senators HOLLINGS and MCCAIN began to work on this package immediately.

The package they put together I call on my colleagues to support:

First, it expands the air marshal program, improves passenger-screening requirements in our airports, and provides for hijacking training of flight crews.

It requires more background checks for flight school students, strengthens cockpit security, and increases perimeter security at our Nation's airports.

And, it will bring the passenger screening function under Federal control, something I believe is a necessity for restoring public confidence that a well trained, well paid, and more integrated security workforce is on duty at airports in every corner of this Nation.

We have a long way to go in bringing the passengers back, but I am confident they will come back.

I would like to thank Senators CARNAHAN, KENNEDY, and Majority Leader DASCHLE for their hard work on this legislation, particularly their effort to include airline worker assistance. It is a strong first step in easing the blow to workers in the aviation industry who will be greatly impacted.

I appreciate my colleagues' leadership on this issue and their willingness to include aircraft manufacturing workers who are about to suffer the severe impacts of others in the industry. We should have done this 2 weeks ago. That is why we cannot afford to wait.

The Carnahan amendment will help thousands of families who are facing economic turmoil. These are people who are suddenly left holding numerous household bills that they will soon be unable to pay. They have mortgages, car payments, credit card debt, utility bills, and school loans. What thousands of them won't have much longer is a job.

Major U.S. airlines expect to cut more than 100,000 jobs this year alone and tens of thousands have already received pink slips. The September 11 attacks affected all of us very deeply. We should think about the individuals who have directly lost their economic security as a result of these events.

In my State, the Boeing Company recently announced it will be forced to lay off 20,000 to 30,000 workers by the end of 2002. Those are just numbers of direct jobs that will be lost in the airline and aircraft manufacturing industries. The overall economic toll will be far greater.

For Boeing workers, notices will be sent on October 12—just 2 days from now—to inform them that in 60 days they will be out of a job. So that means that on December 14—less than 2 weeks before Christmas—a significant number of workers in my State are going to be jobless.

While dealing with how to meet their bills, the average Boeing worker who elects to continue to try to cover their health care coverage—their family medical and dental—will have to pay nearly $850 per month. That is $850 a month on top of other bills that unemployed workers are going to have to face.

These layoffs will certainly mean hardship for thousands of individual families, but they will also create a serious economic ripple effect in my State—the State of Washington—and nationwide.

The Seattle Times recently reported that the Boeing layoffs alone will take $1.76 billion out of the economy in regions of the country where the layoffs occur. More than 70 percent of those layoffs are expected to happen in Washington, which means a loss of $1.29 billion to our region's economy.

The economy is already reacting with uncertainty resulting from the many layoffs and the fear of layoffs. Consumer spending currently accounts for two-thirds of our economy. Yet consumer confidence in September fell to its lowest level since January of 1996. We can take a step—a giant step—in shoring up consumer confidence if we let the workers in the most impacted sector know, by passing this legislation, that they will not fall through the cracks.

The fact is, unless we do something to instill greater consumer confidence in the aviation system, it will be difficult to sustain our larger economic growth. That is why it is so important that we act now.

Our economy works best when people are working. When they lose their jobs, they need help to manage their unemployment, train for new jobs, and make an easy transition to new careers. This amendment will provide the financial assistance, job training, and health care coverage for thousands of workers in the airline and aircraft manufacturing industries—workers who are losing their jobs as a result of terrorism.

The time to provide the workers relief is now, and in this bill. We have already provided, as many of my colleagues have said, the airline industry with billions of dollars to keep them flying. That was the right thing to do to bolster the economy and to maintain as many jobs as possible, but the workers who are the heart of the industry deserve equal treatment, and that includes the workers in the airline manufacturing industry.

We cannot take care of the corporate needs and shareholder needs and not the needs of American workers who are the backbone of our economy. Our economy was built by their muscle and their minds, and it is a product of their hard work and creativity that continues to drive us.

We cannot allow terrorism to transform our economy from a rising tide that can lift all boats into a rising storm that threatens to capsize American workers. We need to provide them with a lifeline to health care coverage, unemployment benefits, and job training.

Again, I call on my colleagues to support the Carnahan amendment and the overall airline security legislation. America is watching us and asking us to act now on both of these measures.

I yield the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The senior assistant bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to set aside the pending Carnahan amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1860

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senator SNOWE of Maine and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The senior assistant bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN], for Ms. SNOWE, proposes an amendment numbered 1860.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To authorize national emergency powers of the Deputy Secretary for Transportation Security)

On page 5, line 13, strike the closing quotation marks and the second period.

On page 5, between lines 13 and 14, insert the following:

“(3) NATIONAL EMERGENCY RESPONSIBILITIES.—Subject to the direction and control of the Secretary, the Deputy Secretary shall have the following responsibilities:

“(A) To coordinate domestic transportation during a national emergency, including aviation, rail, and other surface transportation, and maritime transportation (including port security).

“(B) To coordinate and oversee during a national emergency the transportation-related responsibilities of other departments and agencies of the Federal Government other than the Department of Defense and the military departments.

“(C) To establish uniform national standards and practices for transportation during a national emergency.

“(D) To coordinate and provide notice to other departments and agencies of the Federal Government, and appropriate agencies of State and local governments, including departments and agencies for transportation, law enforcement, and border control, about threats to transportation during a national emergency.

“(E) To carry out such other duties, and exercise such other powers, relating to transportation during a national emergency as the Secretary of Transportation shall prescribe.

“(4) RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER TRANSPORTATION AUTHORITY.—The authority of the Deputy Secretary under paragraph (3) to coordinate and oversee transportation and transportation-related responsibilities during a national emergency shall not supersede the authority of any other department or agency of the Federal Government under law with respect to transportation or transportation-related matters, whether or not during a national emergency.

"(5) ANNUAL REPORT.—The Deputy Secretary shall submit to the Congress on an annual basis a report on the activities of the Deputy Secretary under paragraph (3) during the preceding year.

"(6) NATIONAL EMERGENCY.—The Secretary of Transportation shall prescribe the circumstances constituting a national emergency for purposes of paragraph (3)."

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, this is a national emergency responsibilities amendment, where the Deputy Secretary will have responsibilities for coordination amongst various agencies. I think it is a good amendment, and I urge its adoption.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I urge the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 1860) was agreed to.

Mr. MCCAIN. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I do not see any more pending business, so pending the appearance of the majority leader or the whip, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold suggesting the absence of a quorum?

Mr. MCCAIN. I withhold.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask colleagues to find out the disposition of the leadership and how they want to wrap up because we are ready to go. But pending that, I will say a word about another concern I have.

(The remarks of Mr. HOLLINGS are printed in today's RECORD under "Morning Business.")

Mr. HOLLINGS. I see the distinguished Senator from New York is here. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mrs. CLINTON. I thank the chairman of the committee who has done such a tremendous job of leadership in the wake of the terrible attacks of September 11. I commend him and the ranking member, the distinguished Senator from Arizona, and thank them for their tireless work and their constant reminders of the challenges we face and the sacrifices that are needed.

I rise in support of the chairman's hard work on behalf of this bill, and I particularly appreciate the inclusion of the clear understanding that we have to face a direct threat to our national security and we have to do it by joining together and establishing a commonsense set of solutions to the problems now before us.

The Aviation Security Act the chairman has worked so hard on is the result of many years of his labors and understanding of the difficulties we confront. I certainly commend him and thank him for his hard work.

I also rise as a cosponsor of the Carnahan amendment to provide critical assistance to airline workers and those in aviation-related industries who were laid off as a direct result of the terrorist attacks.

At the time we considered the so-called airline bailout bill, many of us made very clear in our statements on the floor that we were disappointed that some concerns for the workers who were going to lose their jobs were not included in the bailout bill. We come today to reinforce our deep concern and to ask our colleagues to support the Carnahan amendment.

The numbers are overwhelming. We know that 100,000 workers have been laid off in the airline industry. At least 30,000 more have been laid off in airline manufacturing. We are concerned that if the American traveling public and visitors from overseas don't resume flying, as I urge everyone to do—I have flown numerous times already, and I encourage everyone to begin again to travel for business and pleasure—if for whatever reason that return to the air is delayed, then the numbers will undoubtedly grow.

Many of these airline workers are based in New York. They have been supporting our air transportation system out of JFK and LaGuardia. They have been literally handling some of the busiest air traffic corridors in the world. We know that reductions in flight schedules at both of these airports have put thousands of New Yorkers out of work: pilots and flight attendants, baggage and passenger service representatives. This has had a ripple effect throughout New York.

For example, in Syracuse, in upstate New York, a call center for US Airways that had been there for many years was shut down, throwing more than 400 employees out of work.

These airline and aviation-related industry layoffs are not just numbers. They represent the lives and livelihoods of hard-working Americans. I have heard many stories, as my colleagues have, of the hardships that are being imposed because out of the skies on September 11 came these dreadful, horrible acts of terrorism, where people who were willing to commit suicide brought about the deaths of thousands and thousands of our fellow citizens and people from all over the world and also wreaked havoc on our airline industry and the economy in general.

I hope as we consider this Aviation Security Act, for which I support and again thank the chairman and the ranking member, we will also support Senator CARNAHAN's amendment. Her aid package for dislocated workers is modeled after the successful trade adjustment assistance. It will allow airline workers to extend their unemployment insurance while they receive needed job training and support services or while, hopefully, they wait to be called back to work because we will all start flying again.

This amendment will also enable families to receive health care benefits as they go through this difficult period.

No story more sums up the anguish and pain of the losses we are discussing and the need to improve security than one that comes out of JFK. A TWA flight attendant at that airport received her furlough notice while awaiting news of her husband, a New York City firefighter missing at the World Trade Center. New Yorkers and Americans have paid a very heavy price. We are summoning our resolve. We are preparing our responses individually and throughout our Nation. We are following the leadership of our President. We are supporting our men and women in uniform.

I urge my colleagues to support the act that Chairman HOLLINGS and Senator MCCAIN have crafted and support the Carnahan amendment on which she has worked so hard to pay some attention and provide assistance to those Americans who woke up on September 11 thinking that it was any other workday and went to bed on that terrible day knowing that they might lose their jobs as a result of this horrific attack.

I thank my colleagues and yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, nearly one month has passed since the ferocious attacks of September 11th. Words remain inadequate to describe or define the event. Analysts are beginning to assess the immediate costs in economic terms. Someday, perhaps, historians will succeed in cataloguing, analyzing and calculating the losses. But some losses—families torn apart, communities devastated—will remain forever beyond calculation.

However, the tragic events of September 11th leave no question that our airport security system is in need of reformation. The ability of hijackers to ease through our Nation's airport screeners has created fear among the American public about flying and has led to a significant downturn in the travel and tourism industry. Around the country, air travelers now patiently wait in long lines after emergency security procedures have been instituted to prevent further tragedies. Thousands of employees, not only from the airline industry, but also well beyond it, have lost their jobs. During these difficult times, it is imperative that Congress act to protect Americans from future terrorism and to provide economic assistance to those left unemployed because of the horrendous acts of September 11th. I strongly support S. 1447 because it takes vital steps to strengthen our Nation's airport security system, to ensure safety for crews and passengers, and to bolster our economy.

Among the most important provisions in this bill is the federalization of airport security personnel. I support this plan because it is a clear solution to one of the most troublesome aspects of our current airport security operations: the failure of screeners to detect dangerous objects. The atrocities of the recent terrorist attacks highlight the inadequacies of the current screening system. Under the system, airlines, subject to Federal Aviation Administration requirements, are responsible for administering screening of passengers and their carry-on luggage. Airlines generally contract out their screening responsibility to private security companies, often awarding contracts based upon the lowest bid rather than superior security systems. Allowing airlines such authority has resulted in a system that too often promotes lower costs over the safety of passengers.

Recent separate studies by the GAO and the DOJ's Inspector General revealed the serious inadequacies of the current screening system and causes for its failures. Among the problems noted by the IG report was the frequent failure of the airlines to conduct background checks of employees with access to secure areas and the ability of IG personnel to access secure areas without being challenged by security 68 percent of the time. The GAO report which concluded that screener performance in major U.S. airports was unsatisfactory, attributed the poor performance of security screeners to a high employee turnover rate, more than 100 percent per year at many airports—low wages, insufficient training, and inadequate monitoring of screeners.

Federalizing security operations throughout U.S. airports is the best answer for improving screener performance. It would raise wages, lower employee turnover, promote career loyalty among screeners, create uniform training among security personnel, and, as a result, strengthen the performance of screeners to discover dangerous objects. Once the Federal government ensures that screeners are performing their duties in strict adherence to the highest safety standards, the public will gain greater confidence in airport security. In light of the current campaign against terrorism, now is the time to incorporate this change. As a recent New York Times editorial stated, "airports are a front line in the struggle against terrorism, and it no longer makes sense to delegate their policing to the private sector, which emphasizes low cost as opposed to security." I agree with this assessment.

I also want to underscore my support for Senator CARNAHAN's amendment to provide much-needed relief for the thousands of hard-working employees in the airline industry who have lost their jobs as a result of the horrific attack on our Nation on September 11th. This amendment will provide unemployment benefits, health care and training to airline industry employees who have been laid off due to the marked decrease in air travel in this country.

The airline industry has been most directly affected in the aftermath of the attack, but the ripple effect of the attacks is being felt throughout other industries as well. Hotel, travel, and tourism employees, who number in the hundreds of thousands, are at risk of losing their jobs due to the nationwide decrease in travel. In Maryland, tourism is a $7.7 billion industry. It means jobs for our people and revenues for our State and local programs. While we are moving vigorously to encourage travelers to come to Maryland this fall, a decrease in tourism is expected in the State, as it is nationwide. While it is crucial that we provide support to airline workers at this time, we should also remember the plight of the hundreds of thousands of other workers across the State of Maryland and the country whose livelihood may be affected.

The terrorist attacks of September 11th were intended to create fear in Americans and our way of life, including air travel. This legislation will help to ease fears about air travel and the state of our economy by strengthening our airport security system. In this regard, I urge the Senate to pass this legislation expeditiously.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The senior assistant bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLER). Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to a period of morning business with Senators permitted to speak therein for a period not to exceed 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PAYING THE BILL

Mr. HOLLINGS. Somehow, Mr. President, we have to get a grip on ourselves. We ended, at just the end of September, September 30—October 1 was the beginning of the fiscal year—with a deficit of $132 billion. No double-talk about on budget, off budget, or public debt and private debt, and all of that. We spent $132 billion more than we took in. We have been in a deficit position most of the year, when everyone was talking surpluses.

In August we had a briefing from the Congressional Budget Office to the effect that we were going to have a deficit of $104 billion for fiscal year 2002. And he updated that, some 10 days ago, and said: Rather than $104 billion, I am going to have to add about $120 billion to $140 billion. So we are looking at a deficit of at least $224 billion or $244 billion, for starters. That is without the $40 billion we passed in one stimulus measure; $15 billion for the airline measure; so $55 billion there.

There is on course—and everybody is agreed to—an amount, in general terms, on defense, in education, and emergency supplementals, and so forth, agriculture, of around $25 billion. And now they are talking about $75 billion; and that has been restudied, and rather than the President's $75 billion, it comes out to around $114 billion. So while we are talking about stimulus, we are going into an election next November with a deficit in excess of $300 billion, at least.

I am for paying the bill. I cannot get any support for a value-added tax. But when we started other wars we put in a special tax. I was reminded, of course, that when President Nixon came into office, he put in a 10-percent surcharge on imports. And the distinguished majority leader, Mike Mansfield, took my dear wife Peatsy and myself on a honeymoon to about nine countries in Europe to consult and console the heads of state on why this was necessary. So we went to Finland, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, France, England, Germany, Austria, Italy, Spain, Portugal, Morocco and we explained that.

We put on, in World War II, a tax. But we are going in two different dangerous directions. The right direction, of course, is to pursue the war; along with that pursuit, a coalition at the homefront of discipline, restraint, and sacrifice. When you go to war, you can't ask people to lay their lives on the line and then everybody else go to Disney World. We better sober up on our talk and particularly with respect to tax cuts. Further tax cuts is not going to stimulate but enhance the rich. So they are all getting together in a fine cabal about we are going to spend so much more and we are going to stimulate so much more with tax cuts. But they will have a motion to forgo and cancel out those tax increases in the outyears that they want to move fast forward. I want to put them on notice.

HONORING U.S. CAPITOL POLICE

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I want to read this resolution to make sure it is now a formal part of the RECORD. It was adopted last night. I submitted this resolution on behalf of all Senators, but let's make sure it is a formal part of the RECORD:

Whereas the Capitol is an important symbol of freedom and democracy across the United States and throughout the world, and those who safeguard the Capitol safeguard that freedom and democracy;

Whereas millions of people visit the Capitol each year to observe and learn the workings of the democratic process;

Whereas the United States Capitol Police force was created by Congress in 1828 to provide security for the United States Capitol building;

Whereas, today the United States Capitol Police provide protection and support services throughout an array of congressional buildings, parks, and thoroughfares;

Whereas the United States Capitol police provide security for Members of Congress, their staffs, other government employees, and many others who live near, work on, and visit Capitol Hill;

Whereas the United States Capitol Police have successfully managed and coordinated major demonstrations, joint sessions of Congress, State of the Union Addresses, State funerals, and inaugurations;

Whereas the United States Capitol Police have bravely faced numerous emergencies, including three bombings and two shootings (the most recent of which in 1998 tragically took the lives of Private First Class Jacob 'J.J.' Chestnut and Detective John Michael Gibson);

Whereas the horrific events of September 11, 2001 have created a uniquely difficult environment, requiring heightened security, and prompting extra alertness and some strain among staff and visitors;

Whereas the U.S. Capitol Police force has responded to this challenge quickly and courageously, including by facilitating the evacuation of all of the buildings under their purview, as well as the perimeter thereof;

Whereas the United States Capitol Police Department has since instituted 12-hour, 6-day shifts, requiring that officers work 30 hours of overtime each week to ensure our continued protection;

Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate, That—

(1) the Senate hereby honors and thanks the United States Capitol Police for their outstanding work and dedication, during a period of heightened security needs on the day of September 11, 2001 and thereafter;

(2) when the Senate adjourns on this date they shall do so knowing that they are protected and secure, thanks to the commitment of the United States Capitol Police.

I wanted that to be printed in the RECORD so we can get that to the officers who have provided us with this help. We owe a great debt to them.

EXECUTIVE BRANCH FUNCTIONING

Mr. BYRD. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter addressed to the Senate from the Vice President, together with two appendices, on the subject of the interaction of the Vice President's staff with the General Accounting Office.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE VICE PRESIDENT,
Washington, August 2, 2001.

To the Senate:

I am writing to inform you of certain actions undertaken by an agent of the Congress, Comptroller General David M. Walker, which exceed his lawful authority and which, if given effect, would unconstitutionally interfere with the functioning of the Executive Branch.

By memorandum of January 29, 2001, the President established the National Energy Policy Development Group ("Group"). The Group consists of six executive department heads (Treasury, Interior, Agriculture, Commerce, Transportation and Energy), two agency heads (Federal Emergency Management Agency and Environmental Protection Agency), three officers of the White House staff (Policy, Economic Policy, Intergovernmental), and the Vice President. The memorandum specified that the Group's "functions shall be to gather information, deliberate, and as specified in this memorandum, make recommendations to the President." It called for the Group to submit to the President a near-term assessment and then a report setting forth "a recommended national energy policy to help the private sector, and as necessary and appropriate State and local governments, promote dependable, affordable, and environmentally sound production and distribution of energy for the future." The Group issued its report on May 16, 2001. The President approved the report's recommendations, now commonly called the National Energy Policy.

The Comptroller General proposed to investigate the workings of the Group and sought certain information from the Vice President's staff. The first appendix to this Message is a chronology of the interaction between the Comptroller General and my staff on this matter. As a matter of comity, my staff furnished substantial information regarding the Group, providing written answers dated May 4, 2001 to questions concerning the Group, a copy of the Presidential Memorandum establishing the Group, and documents responsive to the Comptroller General's inquiry concerning costs associated with the Group's work. In response to separate requests from the General Accounting Office, executive agencies also have provided substantial responses concerning the roles of their agency heads on the Group.

On July 18, 2001, the Comptroller General sent to me a letter which stated that he was reviewing "the process by which the National Energy Policy was developed" and that the purpose of the letter was to "demand" certain documents. With regard to documents not already provided that the Comptroller General has demanded, statutory and constitutional reasons for not providing them are set forth in the second appendix to this Message. I am furnishing a copy of this Message, including its appendices, to the Comptroller General so that the copy will serve as the response to his letter of July 18, 2001 that he would receive under Section 716(b)(1) of Title 31 of the U.S. Code if that provision were applicable in this matter.

RICHARD B. CHENEY.

APPENDIX 1: CHRONOLOGY OF INTERACTION OF THE VICE PRESIDENT'S STAFF WITH THE GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE

On April 19, 2001, Representatives John Dingell (D-MI) and Henry Waxman (D-CA) sent a letter to the Executive Director of the National Energy Policy Development Group ("Group"), asking a lengthy series of questions and asking for all records of the Group relating to its meetings. That same day, they asked the General Accounting Office (GAO) to initiate an investigation.

On May 4, 2001, the Vice President's counsel forwarded to Messrs. Dingell and Waxman answers from the Executive Director of the Group to their questions.

On May 8, 2001, a GAO Assistant Director faxed to the Office of the Vice President a request to interview Group officials and staff and for production of records and information.

On May 15, 2001, Representatives Dingell and Waxman sent another letter to the Executive Director of the Group, expressing dissatisfaction with the answers to their questions previously received and requesting more information and records, including all of the following relating to the Group:

"... correspondence, memoranda, records, summaries of personal conversations or interviews, minutes or records of meetings or conferences, opinions or reports of consultants, projections, statistical statements, drafts, contracts, agreements, purchase orders, invoices, confirmations, telegraphs, telexes, agendas, books, notes, pamphlets, periodicals, reports, studies, evaluations, opinions, logs, diaries, desk calendars, appointment books, tape recordings, video recordings, e-mails, voice mails, computer tapes, or other computer stored mater, magnetic tapes, microfilm, microfiche, punch cards, all other records kept by electronic, photographic, or mechanical means, charts, photographs, notebooks, drawings, plans, inter-office communications, intra-office and intra-departmental communications, transcripts, checks and canceled checks, bank statements, ledgers, books, records of statements of accounts, and papers and things similar to any of the foregoing, however denominated."

On May 16, 2001, the Vice President's counsel wrote to the GAO General Counsel, asking the Comptroller General to determine whether the proposed GAO inquiry was appropriate, in compliance with the law, and, especially in light of information already provided, a productive use of resources, and asking the GAO General Counsel for a statement of GAO's legal authority to conduct its proposed inquiry.

On May 22, 2001, Representatives Dingell and Waxman wrote to the Vice President's counsel stating that they were "astounded" that the GAO's authority had been questioned.

On May 25, 2001, the Vice President's counsel wrote to counsel for Messrs. Dingell and Waxman, reporting on the status of correspondence with GAO in the matter.

On June 1, 2001, the GAO General Counsel wrote to the Vice President's counsel, advising that the Comptroller General wished to go forward with the inquiry and citing as authority for the inquiry Section 712, 716, and 717 of Title 31 of the U.S. Code. The letter said that GAO would "initially" like to focus on:]

"1. Previously, you identified 9 meetings conducted by the NEPDG and indicated that each meeting was held in the White House Complex. For each meeting, we want to learn the name of each attendee, title, and office represented, as well as the duration of the meeting.

"2. Previously, you stated that 6 professional staff, referred to as the Group support staff, were assigned to the Office of the Vice President for the purpose of supporting the NEPDG. We want to learn their name, title, office or employer represented; the date on which that person began working for that office; and their responsibilities.

"3. Previously, you indicated that various members of the Group support staff met with many individuals to gather information relevant to the NEPDG work. For each interview or meeting, want to establish (a) its date and location, (b) the persons met with, including their name, title, and office or clients represented, (c) its purpose and agenda, (d) the information presented, (e) whether minutes or notes were kept, and (f) how members of the NEPDG or Group support staff determined who would be invited to the interviews of meetings.

"4. We are interested in learning whether the Vice President met with individuals to gather information relevant to the NEPDG and, if so, we want to obtain the same information listed in question 3 above.

"5. We are interested in obtaining the direct and indirect costs incurred by both the Vice President and the Group support staff.

"After discussing these questions with you, we would also like to arrange meetings with members of the Group support staff to discuss meetings they conducted and the process they used to develop information in support of the task force."

On June 7, 2001, the Vice President's counsel wrote to the GAO General Counsel, advising that Sections 717 (which allows GAO to investigate agency implementation of statutes, but no performance of constitutional duties) and 716 of Title 31 of the U.S. Code

(which provides information collection procedures for otherwise-authorized investigations) provide no basis for the GAO inquiry, and that the limited authority of Section 712 (authorizing investigation of use of public money) would provide support for only one of the questions asked, relating to costs. The letter therefore stated that the Office of the Vice President would search for documents responsive to the GAO question regarding the direct and indirect costs of the Group.

On June 21, 2001, the Vice President's counsel sent a letter to GAO forwarding 77 pages of documents responsive to the GAO question regarding the direct and indirect costs of the Group.

On June 22, 2001, GAO sent to the Vice President's counsel a letter claiming to have broad authority to investigate under Sections 712 and 717 of Title 31 and indicating that GAO may issue a "demand letter" under Section 716 of Title 31 that could lead to litigation.

On July 9, 2001, in response to the request of Executive Branch lawyers for an opportunity to meet with the GAO General Counsel to see if a proper accommodation were possible, the meeting occurred, but no proper accommodation was reached.

On July 18, 2001, the Comptroller General issued a letter to the Vice President of the United States demanding documents as follows:

"1. Your counsel identified nine meetings conducted by the National Energy Policy Development Group (NEPDG) in his May 4, 2001, letter to the Chairmen and Ranking Minority Members of the House Committee on Energy and Commerce and the House Committee on Government Reform (hereinafter May 4 letter). We request records providing the names of the attendees for each meeting, their titles, and the office represented.

"2. In the May 4 letter, your counsel indicated that six professional staff, referred to as the group support staff, were assigned to the Office of the Vice President to provide support to the NEPDG. We request records providing their names, titles, the office each individual represented, the date on which each individual began working for such office, and the responsibilities of the group support staff.

"3. In the May 4 letter, your counsel indicated that various members of the group support staff met with many individuals to gather information relevant to the NEPDG work. We request records providing the following information with regard to each of these meetings: (a) the date and location, (b) any person present, including his or her name, title, and office or clients represented, (c) the purpose and agenda, (d) any information presented, (e) minutes or notes, and (f) how members of the NEPDG, group support staff, or others determined who would be invited to the meetings.

"4. We request records providing the following information with regard to any meetings the Vice President as chair of the NEPDG had with individuals to gather information relevant to the NEPDG. (a) the date and location, (b) any person present, including his or her name, title, and office or clients represented, (c) the purpose and agenda, (d) any information presented, (e) minutes or notes, and (f) how the Vice President or others determined who would be invited to the meetings.

"5. We request any records containing information about the direct and indirect costs incurred in the development of the National Energy Policy. To date, we have been given 77 pages of miscellaneous records purporting to relate to these direct and indirect costs. Because the relevance of many of these records is unclear, we continue to request all records responsive to our request, including any records that clarify the nature and purpose of these costs."

The GAO has also made separate requests for information relating to the Group to various executive departments and agencies and has received responses.

On July 31, 2001, the Comptroller General and the Counsel to the Vice President spoke by telephone regarding the Comptroller General's letter of July 187, 2001 to the Vice President.

On August 1, 2001, the General Counsel of the General Accounting Office and the Counsel to the Vice President spoke by telephone regarding the Comptroller General's letter of July 18, 2001 to the Vice President.

APPENDIX TWO: REASONS

With regard to documents not already provided that the Comptroller General has demanded from the Vice President, the reasons for not providing them are set forth in this appendix. The statutes under which the Comptroller General purports to act, Sections 717, 712, and 716 of Title 31 of the U.S. Code, do not grant the authority he purports to exercise. Moreover, if his misconstruction of the statutes were to prevail, his conduct would unconstitutionally interfere with the functioning of the Executive Branch of our Government.

Section 717 permits the Comptroller General at the request of a House of Congress, a congressional committee of jurisdiction, or on his own initiative to "evaluate the results of a program or activity the Government carries out under existing law." The Comptroller General lacks authority under Section 717 to investigate the President's exercise of his constitutional powers. The National Energy Policy Development Group and its work constitute such an exercise. The Vice President and the other officers of the United States who serve on the Group act not pursuant to statute but instead only in relation to exercise of the President's constitutional authorities, including his authority to "require the Opinion, in writing, of the principal Officer in each of the executive Departments, upon any Subject relating to the Duties of their respective Offices," to "take care that the Laws be faithfully executed," and, with respect to Congress, to "recommend to their Consideration such Measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient." Further, the Comptroller General is not evaluating the "results" of the Group's work; he is attempting to inquire into the process by which the results of the Group's work were reached. Finally, the Comptroller General has not claimed that he is conducting the proposed investigation on his own initiative, and has instead stated that he is conducting it at the request of two Congressional committees, yet no Committee (as distinguished from two individual Members of Congress who serve as the ranking minority members of two committees) has made such a request to the Comptroller General.

Section 712, which permits the Comptroller General to investigate matters related to the "receipt, disbursement, and use of public money," applies if at all only to his question concerning the costs of the Group's work. Documents that pertain to the costs of the Group already have been produced to the Comptroller General as a matter of comity. The narrow authority conferred by Section 712 does not provide a basis for his other questions.

Section 716 allows the Comptroller General to seek to compel production of documents only when he has the requisite need for the documents for a lawful inquiry conducted in accordance with Section 712 or 717. Because Sections 712 and 717 do not provide a basis for the Comptroller General's inquiries, and because Section 716 is not an independent source of authority to investigate, Section 716 provides no authority to demand or compel production of the Vice Presidential documents demanded. Moreover, the term "agency" as used in Section 716 does not include the Vice President of the United States, who is a constitutional officer of the Government.

If the Comptroller General's misconstruction of the statutes cited above were to prevail, his conduct would unconstitutionally interfere with the functioning of the Executive Branch. For example, due regard for the constitutional separation of powers requires respecting the independence of the President, the Vice President and the President's other senior advisers as they execute the function of developing recommendations for policy and legislation—a core constitutional function of the Executive Branch. Also, preservation of the ability of the Executive Branch to function effectively requires respecting the confidentiality of communications among a President, a Vice President, the President's other senior advisers and others. A President and his senior advisers must be able to work in an atmosphere that respects confidentiality of communications if the President is to get the good, candid advice and other information upon which wise decisionmaking depends. Note that while the Vice President is the President of the Senate, he also has executive duties and responsibilities in support of the President, as the Congress has by law recognized.

IN CELEBRATION OF HISPANIC HERITAGE MONTH

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, as we celebrate Hispanic Heritage Month in America, I believe it is utmost in our minds and hearts to remember the horrendous attack on our nation's financial center in New York City, and on the Pentagon, on September 11, 2001. Hispanic Americans I speak with are anxious to support our nation's every effort to rid this world of the incredible evil that carried out such an attack.

Hispanic Americans have answered our country's call to arms in every previous war, and they have distinguished themselves as some of our nation's most heroic fighters. As President George W. Bush recently reminded us, "Hispanic Americans served with heroism in every major American military conflict."

Many of my colleagues might not be aware of the fact that Hispanics in World War II were over-represented among Medal of Honor winners. I would like to remember two of these distinguished medal winners from New Mexico.

Joseph P. Martinez, born in Taos, New Mexico, gave his life for our country during World War II. In the Aleutians, finding himself in snow covered trenches, he chose to advance against the enemy in the face of severe hostile machine gun, rifle, and mortar fire. His example inspired others to advance in this difficult and dangerous climb.

After successfully and personally silencing several enemy trenches, he reached the rim where he was fatally wounded. The U.S. Army recognized Joe Martinez's valor beyond the call of duty by awarding him the United States Medal of Honor.

In Vietnam, 22-year old U.S. Army Specialist Fourth Class Daniel Fernandez of Albuquerque, New Mexico, sacrificed himself to save four of his comrades. Fernandez vaulted over his wounded sergeant and threw himself on a grenade that was not noticed in time for the men around him to save themselves. This action cost him his life. Fernandez also received the United States Medal of Honor.

There are many more stories about Hispanic Medal of Honor winners. Our nation is proud to have men and women like these in our ranks.

This month, I want Americans to remember Hispanic veterans from World War I, World War II, the Korean War, Vietnam and Desert Storm. I can predict with great confidence that Hispanics in every service will earn more Medals of Honor, Distinguished Service Crosses, and Silver and Bronze Stars for valor in combat.

If these wartime contributions by Hispanics have been and will continue to be remarkable, those made on the homefront through lives invested in communities are equally deserving of our recognition and gratitude. On August 15, President George W. Bush visited Albuquerque for the grand opening of the Hispano Chamber of Commerce's Barelvas Job Opportunity Center, a facility meant to help tear down barriers faced by Hispanics and others in finding employment or starting a new business.

Helping open this business development center, the President drew attention to the spirit of the facility, that of citizens asking what they could do to improve their community, and what they could do to help a neighbor in need. The President accurately and eloquently concluded that this was "the spirit of America, captured right here in Albuquerque, New Mexico."

I believe our President has it right. I am proud that the lives of Hispanic New Mexicans are vital evidence of the spirit of America as they invest themselves in families, schools, businesses, and churches. And New Mexicans recognize that these modern achievements build on a centuries-long legacy of Hispanic history in our state, earning us a peerless role in our nation's diversity.

In New Mexico, we know that Hispanics were on the scene even before the Mayflower set sail. The Hispanic influence in New Mexico shaping our architecture and culture has been significant since the arrival of Spanish explorer Don Juan de Onate near San Juan Pueblo in 1598, 22 years before the landing at Plymouth Rock.

When the national media today talks and writes a lot about the recent "arrival" of Hispanics on our national scene, they're recognizing a talented, spirited people New Mexico has known for a long time.

I have mentioned the opening of the Albuquerque Hispano Chamber of Commerce's Barelvas Job Opportunity Center, marking the start of its important work to rebuild the economic viability of a deteriorated neighborhood and increase job opportunity.

I would like to mention other examples of commitment to community around our state, such as the Roswell Hispano Chamber of Commerce of Roswell, New Mexico. This group has been a unifying force in their community's economic development issues, and have long supported the Character Counts program to see that the six pillars of character, Respect, Responsibility, Trustworthiness, Citizenship, Fairness, and Caring, are taught early in the classroom.

On September 24, Mr. I. Martin Mercado, President of Mercado Construction in Albuquerque, received the national Small Business Administration's Minority Small Business Person of the Year Award. The son of Mexican immigrants, Martin is a wonderful illustration of the American dream, and of the important contributions that Hispanic-owned small businesses make to our economy.

Achievements of this kind throughout New Mexico have helped increase the number of minority-owned businesses in our state by more than 50 percent in the last five years. There are now more than 22,000 Hispanic-owned businesses in New Mexico.

As Hispanics gain long-overdue national recognition as a force that cannot, and should not, be ignored, we are reminded of countless stories like those I have mentioned. I believe that there is no better time to work for federal policies that ensure that small businesses, community organizations, and schools have the support they need to make decisions in favor of economic success and strong families. This is the spirit of America.

Finally, I appreciate the opening for a new era in U.S.-Mexico relations as Presidents Bush and Fox work to develop a partnership for prosperity across our shared border. Both nations have much to gain through the implementation of win-win policies on trade, immigration and the war on drugs. As we celebrate New Mexico's and America's Hispanic heritage, I hope we will continue to capitalize on our common ground with Mexico, making the most of new opportunities for trade and cooperation with our neighbor.

New Mexicans regularly enjoy and celebrate the centuries-long influence of Hispanic culture and traditions on our society. This month in which our nation recognizes the special contributions of Hispanic Americans finds our country united as never before to rebuild and defend this great land after a devastating attack. This in mind, there could be no better time to honor Hispanic Americans for valiantly serving the needs of nation and community, defending our freedom, bettering our economy, and building strong families, for this is the spirit of America.

New Mexico's largest newspaper recently rendered a broad tribute to Hispanic Americans. I ask unanimous consent that this September 23 Albuquerque Journal article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Albuquerque Journal, Sept. 23, 2001]

LIST A SOURCE OF PRIDE FOR HISPANICS AND AMERICANS

(By Dan Herrera)

The national celebration of Hispanic Heritage Month, which for some odd reason runs from Sept. 15 through Oct. 15, has been obscured by the overwhelming shock and sorrow created by the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11.

But Hispanic Heritage Month has never been that big a public spectacle, at least in these parts; instead, as elsewhere, the week-end-long beer-company-promoted Cinco de Mayo celebration has taken center stage among Hispanic-oriented celebrations.

In fact, it's hard to find many special Hispanic Heritage Month events in Albuquerque. Most notable is the free Chautauqua series now under way at the National Hispanic Cultural Center. Its opening performance, Jean Jordan as Queen Isabella, had to be delayed because of the attacks on the East Coast. History buffs can still catch several other shows. Call the center at 246-2261 for more information. I had a long conversation the other day with Ruben Salaz, author of "New Mexico: A Brief Multi-history," about Hispanic Heritage Month. He believes New Mexico could reduce its shamefully high Hispanic student dropout rate by putting a greater emphasis in history classes on our state's long, proud past.

He's got a point. Learning about important figures with names like Juan de Onate, Diego de Vargas and Juan Bautista de Anza, all early governors of the Spanish colony of New Mexico who played especially important roles, alongside names like George Washington, Thomas Jefferson and Abraham Lincoln couldn't hurt. Students also might like learning more about historically important Indians like Pope and Cuerno Verde while they're at it.

New Mexico has always been much more than a stop along the trail ultimately leading to California and Manifest Destiny. But Hispanics also have played important roles in American history outside of New Mexico.

So, in recognition of this special month, here is an assortment of Americans you may not have known about or may not have known were Hispanic. There was a time not too long ago that nobody was counting, after all.

Most of the information was compiled using Salaz's information-packed book and another wonderful book called "Hispanic Firsts: 500 Years of Extraordinary Achievement" by Nicolas Kanellos, which contains a 372-page listing of accomplishments. Both belong in every library in New Mexico.

Joseph Hernandez: In 1822, the Whig party member from Florida became the first Hispanic representative in the U.S. Congress.

Octaviano Larrazolo: A New Mexico Republican, Larrazolo became the first Hispanic U.S. Senator in 1928.

Dennis Chavez: In 1944, the New Mexico senator, a Democrat, introduced the first Fair Employment Practices bill, which prohibited discrimination because of race, creed or national origin. The bill was defeated, but it was an important step toward the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

Bernardo de Galvez: A governor of Louisiana and brigadier general during the Revolutionary War, he fought British forces for three years along the Gulf of Mexico and captured Mobile and Pensacola in 1781, forcing the British to fight the war on two fronts. Galveston Bay in Texas is named after him.

Jorge Farragut: A Revolutionary War hero who fought at the battle of Savannah and at the second defense of Charleston, he would be outdone by his son, David.

David G. Farragut: He became the first admiral of the U.S. Navy in 1866. As a Union commander during the Civil War, Farragut gained immortality during the victory at Mobile where, after being warned that the bay was filled with mines, said, "Damn the torpedoes! Full speed ahead!" Today, a guided missile destroyer bears his name.

Philip Bazaar: In 1865, he became the first Hispanic American to win the Congressional Medal of Honor.

Marcelino Serna: He was a soldier from Albuquerque who became the first Hispanic to win the Distinguished Service Cross in 1918 after single-handedly capturing 24 German soldiers. He reportedly was not recommended for a Medal of Honor because he was just a buck private and also could not read or write English well enough to sign reports.

Guy Gabaldon: The 1960 movie "Hell to Eternity" is based on this California's heroism in World War II, which led to the surrender of 2,000 Japanese soldiers on Saipan Island.

Luis Walter Alvarez: Alvarez was one of the most distinguished physicists in U.S. history. A member of the Manhattan Project, he is credited with the development of the triggering device for the first plutonium bomb. He flew in a B-29 following the Enola Gay to observe the atomic bomb explosion over Hiroshima. Among his many awards are the Nobel Prize and the National Medal of Science.

George Santayana: The poet-philosopher in 1889 became the first Hispanic writer to receive a Ph.D. from Harvard. In 1927 he became the first U.S. Hispanic to be awarded the Gold Medal from the Royal Society of Literature in London.

Lucrezia Bori: She made her debut at the Metropolitan Opera in New York in 1912 and became an operatic diva. She led the effort credited with saving the Met during the Depression.

Esteban Bellan: In 1871, Bellan became the first Hispanic professional baseball player in the United States. He was a black Cuban. Around the turn of the 20th century, when blacks were no longer allowed to play in the majors, teams often had to prove the "racial purity" of Hispanic players. Hispanics from Vernon "Lefty" Gomez, to Juan Marichal, to Rod Carew, to Sammy Sosa have long played star roles in professional baseball.

Jim Plunkett: Of German, Irish and Mexican descent, Plunkett was the first Hispanic Heisman Trophy winner and the first to start as quarterback in the National Football League.

Desi Arnaz: The first Hispanic television star and a network broadcast pioneer, along with his wife Lucille Ball, created one of the most popular series of all times: "I Love Lucy."

The entertainment industry is packed with stars who either had names that were not Spanish or changed their names to mask their heritage during times of prejudice. Some are Raquel Welch, Rita Hayworth, Anthony Quinn, Joan Baez, Linda Ronstadt, Vicki Carr, Richie Valens, Mariah Carey and Freddy Fender. I had one friend, a Deadhead, who never realized that Jerry Garcia of the Grateful Dead was Hispanic until I told him.

The list could go on and on, but you get the picture.

One thing to remember, though: While it may be Hispanic Heritage Month, that heritage is being celebrated by Americans.

RECOGNITION OF THE GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF CHINA ON TAIWAN

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, the evil acts perpetrated on September 11, which took thousands of innocent lives in New York, Washington, D.C. and Pennsylvania, have brought out the best and worst in man. In the days following the terrorist attacks on the United States, Americans gained a clearer picture of who our friends were by their sincere words and by their actions. In particular, I applaud the Government of the Republic of China on Taiwan which quickly offered its assistance, support, and strong condemnation of terrorism.

Recently, I learned that the Republic of China on Taiwan has canceled here in the United States what should have been a great day of celebration for the Taiwanese people living in this country. The Republic of China's National Day was to have been held today, October 10, in order to honor and remember those who perished in the September 11 attacks. I am touched by the Republic China's actions and their sympathy for the victims.

Despite continual attempts by the People's Republic of China politically and militarily to threaten the Republic of China on Taiwan, that island nation has remained committed to democracy and has matured into a prosperous nation. On Taiwan's National Day, I believe Taiwan needs a greater international presence, and I support that island nation's desire to share its resources and ideas. This can only be done through Taiwan's inclusion into international organizations. As we struggle to recover from the catastrophic events of September 11, 2001, let us always be mindful of who America's true allies and friends are.

HONORING DEFENSE INTELLIGENCE AGENCY EMPLOYEES WHO LOST THEIR LIVES

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I rise today to honor the memory of seven employees of the Defense Intelligence Agency who lost their lives in the horrific terrorist attacks that befell our Nation on the morning of September 11, 2001, and to pay tribute to the duty and sacrifice these citizens have rendered in service to their country. Today, Vice Admiral Thomas R. Wilson, Director, Defense Intelligence Agency, will preside over a memorial service at Bolling Air Force Base for these innocent victims of terrorism. As part of the ceremony, the names of these brave citizens will be added to DIA's Patriots Memorial at the Defense Intelligence Analysis Center at Bolling, joining other members of DIA who were killed in service to their Nation.

As I read the biographies of these fellow countrymen, I was struck by the picture they paint of our great Nation, young and old, ethnically diverse, two veterans, family men and women. They represent the very fabric of America and embody the American values of opportunity and freedom. They also represent the finest traditions of selfless service to family, community, and Nation to which we all aspire. We mourn with their families.

I now call the roll of those seven citizens, members of the Defense Intelligence Agency, who died, in service to their Nation at the Pentagon on September 11, 2001: Rosa Marie Chapa of Springfield, VA; Sondra N. Foster of Clinton, MD; Robert J. Hymel of Woodbridge, VA; Shelley A. Marshall of Marbury, MD; Patricia E. Michley of Springfield, VA; Charles E. Sabin of Burke, VA; and Karl W. Teepe of Centreville, VA.

Rosa M. Chapa served as a Senior Management Officer in the Office of the Comptroller, Deputy Comptroller for Force Structure and Management. Ms. Chapa began her civilian career with DIA on November 23, 1997 and served with the Federal Government for over 30 years. Ms. Chapa was responsible for ensuring that critical manpower information flowed smoothly to automated management systems. Ms. Chapa is survived by her husband, Jose Chapa, and five children, Roger, John, Elza, Gracie, and Julie.

Sandra N. Foster served as a Senior Management Officer in the Office of the Comptroller, Deputy Comptroller for Force Structure and Management. Ms. Foster began her civilian career with DIA on August 27, 1978. Ms. Foster was responsible for conducting analysis and evaluations of the manpower and functional implications of plans and programs, and developing and executing complex resource management activities. Ms. Foster is survived by her husband, Kenneth Foster.

Robert J. Hymel served as a Senior Management Officer in the Office of the Comptroller, Deputy Comptroller for Force Structure and Management. Mr. Hymel began his civilian career with DIA on March 7, 1994 after retiring from the Air Force with over 23 years of active duty service. Mr. Hymel was responsible for DIA joint manpower issues that focused on military human intelligence management and organization. Mr. Hymel is survived by his wife, Pat Hymel and daughter, Natalie Connors.

Shelley A. Marshall served as a Senior Management Officer in the Office of the Comptroller, Deputy Comptroller for Force Structure and Management. Ms. Marshall began her civilian career with DIA on June 6, 1987. Ms. Marshall was responsible for budget formulation, budget execution, and preparing agency budget plans. Ms. Marshall is survived by her husband, Donn E. Marshall, and two children, Drake and Chandler.

Patricia A. Mickley served as a Senior Financial Resources Manager in the Office of the Comptroller, Deputy Comptroller for Program and Budget. Ms. Mickley began her civilian career with DIA on August 2, 1998 after working as a Budget Analyst for the Department of the Air Force since 1980. Ms. Mickley was responsible for the development, presentation, and execution of detailed budget estimates with a primary focus on infrastructure financial management and the program/budget interaction process. Ms. Mickley is survived by her husband, Joseph R. Mickley, and daughter, Marie.

Charles "Chuck" E. Sabin was a Senior Financial Resources Expert in DIA's Comptroller's office. Mr. Sabin started his career with DIA in August 1981 as an Accountant in the Financial Policy and Accounting Division, Comptroller. He was selected as a Defense Intelligence Senior Level in August 1999. Prior to arriving at DIA, he served several years with the Department of Army. He served for 31 years in Federal service. Mr. Sabin is survived by two sons, Charles E. Sabin Jr. and Paul Sabin.

Karl W. Teepe served as a Senior Financial Resources Manager in the Office of the Comptroller, Deputy Comptroller for Program and Budget. Mr. Teepe began his civilian career with DIA on September 3, 1991 after retiring from the Army with over 20 years of active duty service. Mr. Teepe was responsible for the development of the General Defense Intelligence Program budget. Mr. Teepe is survived by his wife, Donna, and his children, Adam and Wendy.

One cannot help but be moved by the tragedy that befell these victims and their families, as well as the thousands of others who suffered as a result of these despicable acts of terror at the Pentagon and the World Trade Center in New York. They all went about their daily lives that day, striving to have an honorable, decent life and toiling to provide for their families, their communities, and their country, each in their own way. None expected or deserved to experience the senseless terror that intruded upon our Nation on September 11.

There is an imperative that emerges from this tragedy. These brave men and women of the Defense Intelligence Agency, and their compatriots that also perished that day, must not be forgotten and must not have died in vain. Today, their names are engraved on a DIA memorial to courage and service. Today also, our Nation is united in purpose as seldom before in its history to rid the world of terrorism. It is a noble cause, destined for success, largely because these tragic losses have awakened a sense of justice and decency in our Nation and amongst civilized peoples around the world.

On behalf of a mournful, but grateful Nation, I extend heartfelt condolences to the families and loved ones of those lost, so tragically, on September 11. Together, we celebrate lives lived well and honorably. Together we mourn lives ended prematurely and families devastated by loss and grief. Together we unite to remember and muster the resolve to ensure, never again.

THE REPUBLIC OF CHINA'S NATIONAL DAY

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I rise today to thank President Chen Shui-bian of the Republic of China for his country's support of the United States in the aftermath of the September 11 attack on America. President Chen Shui-bian expressed his condolences to the American people and condemned the terrorist acts as shameful and cowardly. In a show of unity and shared mourning over this tragic event, President Chen Shui-bian ordered all government flags be flown at half mast for two days and asked all government offices in the United States to cancel their National Day celebrations.

Taiwan was one of the first countries to declare its unequivocal support and cooperation with the United States. Taiwan has also offered its resources to help in the worldwide fight against terrorism.

During this time of rebuilding and remembrance, it is important to recognize that Taiwan will be marking its National Day on October 10. The Republic of China on Taiwan is a true democracy which guarantees all the political freedom and civil liberty to its people. In addition, Taiwan is one of the most important economic players in the world. Despite its small population of 23 million people, Taiwan has financial resources surpassing those of many Western countries.

There are many challenges facing Taiwan and America. The United States must continue to encourage productive dialogue between Taiwan and the Chinese mainland to promote peace and security in the region. At the same time, Taiwan must be allowed to participate in international organizations that allow Taiwan's success to be emulated around the world. On Taiwan's National Day, I hope Taiwan and the Chinese mainland will one day be reunited under principles of freedom and democracy, thus leading to lasting stability and prosperity in the Asian Pacific Region.

CONDEMNING BIGOTRY AND VIOLENCE AGAINST SIKH-AMERICANS

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today in strong support of Senate Concurrent Resolution 74, legislation that explicitly condemns the bigotry and violence against Sikh-Americans that has originated as a result of the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks on Washington, D.C. and New York City.

Let me begin by saying that I am deeply disturbed that such a resolution has to be introduced in our country. For more than 200 years America has treasured the freedoms held in the Constitution and the Bill of Rights, including the right of Americans to pursue the religion of their choice. Throughout those years, America has attracted individuals from around the world who found refuge from persecution for their religious beliefs. Sikh-Americans have made America their home for over one hundred years, and in that time they have significantly contributed to the vitality, prosperity, and harmony of the communities in which they live.

In the time that has passed since September 11, Sikh-Americans have been vocal in their support for Americans, both for those that lost their lives in the attack and those that now risk their lives in their attempt to bring to justice those that are responsible. But sadly, Sikh-Americans have been among the initial and repeated victims of hate crimes in the United States since the attacks, and they continue to suffer daily from actual violence and threats of violence. This comes in spite of unambiguous remarks by President Bush and Attorney General Ashcroft that any inappropriate activity emanating from either religious or ethnic intolerance would be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law. It is distasteful to me that in our search for terrorist schemes, necessary though it is, some Americans have looked toward the most convenient and conspicuous available target to blame, that being individuals of Middle Eastern or South Asian descent whose appearance is considered different than the norm. As we learn more and more of the origins of these radical religious movements, it is important that we refrain from painting all religions and ethnicities with a very broad and indiscriminate brush. Although radical religious movements may share the name of a major religion, they clearly obfuscate the basic tenets and purposes of these religions, especially those related to tolerance, understanding, and peace.

In my own State of New Mexico, I am proud to say we have a large, energetic, and engaged Sikh-American population. They live throughout my State and contribute significantly to the professional, economic, and spiritual vitality of the communities in which they live. The jobs that they hold, whether they are doctors, lawyers, engineers, businessmen, educators, or social service providers, are essential to the social and economic welfare of the people in New Mexico. They always have been, and always will be, an integral part of their communities, and, accordingly, they have been treated in a manner that reflects their position in my State as friends, neighbors, and colleagues. That treatment should continue today, tomorrow, and in the future.

Over the years, Sikh-Americans have done much to make New Mexico a better place to live. They have created the 3HO Foundation, a non-profit organization dedicated to the service and teaching of the science of Yoga and meditation. The organization has served in a consultative manner to the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations since 1994. Sikh-Americans sponsor the International Peace Prayer Day, part of their effort to recognize all human beings as equals and to establish egalitarian and democratic societies across the world. They contribute to charitable organizations and establish businesses that have as their foremost motivation the distribution of products and assistance to those in need. Sikh-Americans are an asset to New Mexico in every way.

The resolution introduced by Senator DURBIN and co-sponsored by myself and many other colleagues states in unequivocal terms that: 1. bigotry and any acts of violence or discrimination against any American, including Sikh-Americans should be condemned; 2. the civil rights and civil liberties of all Americans, including Sikh-Americans, should be protected; 3. local and Federal law enforcement authorities should work to prevent hate crimes against all Americans, including Sikh-Americans, and; 4. local and Federal law enforcement authorities should prosecute to the fullest extent of the law all those who commit hate crimes, including those against Sikh-Americans.

I support this legislation in the strongest possible manner and I state in the strongest possible terms that the kind of violence Sikh-Americans have suffered from since the September 11 attack must stop. Furthermore, I ask local, State, and Federal law enforcement to re-double their efforts to prevent these abhorrent actions and prosecute perpetrators of such actions to the full extent of the law. We need to make it clear that acts of violence against other religions and ethnicities as a means of exacting revenge for the recent terrorist attacks are unacceptable and will not be tolerated in this country.

America has long been a beacon of freedom and tolerance in the international system, but it goes without saying that it suffers in stature when the civil rights of Sikh-Americans, as well as Americans of Muslim, Hindu, or other religious persuasion, come under open attack. In my view, these individual abuses are not indicative of the people we as Americans are, nor are they reflective of the society that we aspire to be. But they have a cost and we cannot ignore them. It is time that we acknowledge the contemptuous behavior that is occurring, unite as a country in our universal condemnation of hate crimes of any type, and censure it to the fullest extent of the law.

There is no doubt that we are in a difficult moment in our country's history and we must take extraordinary steps to prevent further injuries and loss of life. But even now we need to take care to not abandon the principles and the spirit of our Constitution and the Bill of Rights. Indeed, it is my hope that we use these unfortunate circumstances as an opportunity to move forward with an even more sincere and collective commitment to the ideals that have made this Nation so great.

FISCAL YEAR 2002 NATIONAL DEFENSE AUTHORIZATION ACT

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I would like to take some time to comment on the passage of the fiscal year 2002 National Defense Authorization Act that passed the Senate last week by a vote of 99 to 0. The annual process of authorizing funding for our nation's armed forces and defense activities is always a grave and important matter with profound implications for our national defense and global security. In light of the recent and vicious terrorist attacks on the symbols of our financial and military power and the murder of thousands of innocent Americans, this process has become even more significant.

To that end, it is entirely appropriate and necessary that a major focus of this legislation is combating international terrorism and other asymmetric threats such as terrorism involving weapons of mass destruction, including the use of nuclear, biological, or chemical weapons. In my view, we ought to redouble our efforts and remain vigilant in our counterterrorism activities to prevent these tragedies from occurring and to deter those who contemplate such acts of barbarism. The fiscal year 2002 National Defense Authorization Act takes a number of important steps in thwarting terrorism. It authorizes $5.6 billion to deter and defend against the threat of terrorism—an increase of $1.0 billion over fiscal year 2001 levels. Specifically, it increases funding by $217.2 million to the Department of Defense's Combating Terrorism Initiative—which is aimed at defending and responding to the use of weapons of mass destruction. Another important initiative includes a $10 million increase to the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff's Combating Terrorism Readiness Initiative Fund which targets and identifies emerging threats from terrorist organizations and funds vital counterterrorism activities and training by our nation's armed forces.

This legislation also continues our efforts to cease the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction. In particular, this legislation authorizes $403.0 million for the Nunn-Lugar Cooperative Threat Reduction program which has successfully helped destroy and dismantle more than 5,000 nuclear warheads and more than 1,000 nuclear missiles in the former Soviet Union. One of the most critically important and innovative provisions of the Nunn-Lugar program—the Initiatives for Proliferation Prevention program—has helped prevent Russian scientists from exporting their knowledge of nuclear weapons or other weapons of mass destruction to rogue states.

Chairman LEVIN and Ranking Member WARNER deserve to be commended for their efforts to find agreement on the missile defense issue. Provisions that would have sought to prevent the Administration from engaging in activities that would have violated the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty were dropped from the bill as part of the compromise reached by Chairman LEVIN and Senator WARNER. Chairman LEVIN has indicated that these provisions—which have important implications for our national security—will be considered as a stand-alone bill at a later time. In addition, $1.3 billion in funding that was cut from the President's missile defense budget request and targeted toward counterterrorism activities will be used to fund—at the discretion of the President—missile defense activities or counterterrorism activities.

Certainly, we ought to do all we can—especially in light of the terrorist attack—to protect our nation from all threats, including ballistic missiles. I support the testing and development of a limited national missile defense system, so long as it is consistent with international arms control treaties and enhances global security. However, the unilateral abrogation of the 1972 ABM Treaty by the United States would be highly destabilizing, in my view, and could expedite China's nuclear modernization plans. It could also fuel an international arms race between India and Pakistan, which is not in any nation's interest. I hope that we can continue to debate these important issues that have profound implications for our nation's defense and foreign policy.

The fiscal year 2002 National Defense Authorization provides $343.5 billion in funding for vital national security activities of the Department of Defense and certain nuclear non-proliferation programs of the Department of Energy. All in all, this legislation represents an increase of $32.9 billion—a 10 percent increase over last year's levels and represents the largest increase in defense spending since the mid-1980s. Much of the funding increases are targeted, rightfully so, to the men and women who serve in the armed forces, including: increases in compensation to improve the quality of life of U.S. forces and their families; increasing military pay; and increasing housing allowances and educational benefits.

This legislation also includes a provision authorizing the Administration to consider and possibly recommend an additional round of base closures and realignments, BRAC, in 2003. It authorizes the Secretary of Defense—in consultation with Congress—to appoint members to a bipartisan commission tasked with making recommendations on the closure and realignment of military facilities. Their recommendations would come before the President—en masse—who would either approve or disapprove of the commission's report. If the President agrees with the commission's recommendations, Congress would have an up-or-down vote on the entire list of recommendations.

Since 1995, I have voted against additional rounds of base closures because I felt it was premature to authorize them without knowing the full effect, costs, and savings associated with previous rounds. It has now been six years since the last round of base closures were authorized, and Secretary Rumsfeld has strongly supported an additional round of closures to free up funding for the modernization and transformation of our nation's armed forces to meet the security challenges of the 21st century. The Department of Defense has estimated savings of $14 billion dollars from previous rounds of base closures and has maintained that the U.S. armed forces has 20 to 25 percent excess capacity resulting from too many military bases. While we ought to do all we can to streamline and improve the efficiency of our nation's armed forces, I believe we should be very careful and judicious about the closing of military bases. After all, once a military base is closed, it will most likely be gone forever. My home state of Connecticut has been particularly affected by previous rounds, and I believe that decisions to close military facilities must be done with the utmost care that is consistent with our national security needs. While I support the provision in this legislation to authorize an additional round of closures, it does not necessarily mean that I will agree with the recommendations. I will reserve judgment on the merits of their recommendations if and when the commission's report is completed.

Overall, this legislation includes vital increases in military readiness and preparedness, and represents an important first step toward modernizing and transforming the military to meet the security challenges of the 21st century. To that end, I am very pleased that this legislation recognizes and rewards the ingenuity and technological acumen of Connecticut's highly skilled workforce, defense and aerospace firms, and contractors.

Increases in funding for the procurement of Sikorsky Black Hawk UH-60 helicopters reflect the critical importance that this aircraft holds for the Army, Navy, Army National Guard, and Army Reserve. This legislation authorizes funding for 10 additional UH-60 Black Hawk helicopters for the Army National Guard—addressing a critical funding shortfall by meeting the Guard's number one unfunded priority. These high-quality, technologically advanced, utility helicopters provide critical functions for the nation's armed forces, and this legislation recognizes their importance to our national defense.

This legislation also provides $2.2 billion for the production of a new Virginia-class submarine by Electric Boat in Groton, Connecticut and authorizes $684 million in advanced procurement for two new attack submarines in fiscal year 2003 and 2004. This will allow Electric Boat to produce these state-of-the-art attack submarines in the most efficient and economical manner possible. The advanced funding also increases the likelihood of increasing submarine production in the near future—perhaps by 2006—which is a critical component of meeting long-range defense needs.

Finally, this legislation authorizes $440 million for the SSGN Trident conversion program, which will allow the U.S. Navy to convert four Ohio-class submarines to fire conventional Tomahawk missiles and perform special and covert operations. These submarines have 22 years of hull life left, and converting these submarines will provide the U.S. Navy with invaluable stealth capability and fire power. I am pleased that much of the work for converting these submarines will be performed by talented, diligent workers in Southeastern Connecticut.

This legislation funds many weapons programs that will play a critical role in our national defense in the near future, including the F-22, the Joint Strike Fighter, and the Comanche helicopter. For the near term, this legislation also provides funding to upgrade the engines of the aging fleet of F-15s and F-16s.

Joint STARS—the highly sophisticated and technologically advanced radar surveillance aircraft system—is fully funded at $283.2 million with $46 million in advanced procurement of an additional Joint STARS platform in the future. This advanced radar system is manufactured at Northrop Grumman's Norden facility in Norwalk, Connecticut. Theater Commanders-in-Chief have consistently articulated the need for additional Joint STARS aircraft, and these platforms have historically provided vital surveillance and reconnaissance functions in the Persian Gulf, Bosnia, and Kosovo.

I would also like to mention some other important programs authorized under this legislation. Funding for fifteen C-17 transport airplanes—powered by Pratt & Whitney F117 jet engines—is provided under this bill for a total of $3.5 billion. In addition, funding for aircraft training systems for the U.S. Navy—also powered by Pratt & Whitney engines—is authorized for an additional $44.6 million dollars above the President's request. And, $4.5 million is provided for important military research projects conducted at the University of Connecticut in the area of medical vaccines and fuel cells.

Finally, Mr. President, I would like to address two amendments that I planned on offering to the FY 2002 National Defense Authorization bill. The first amendment—which was adopted unanimously by voice vote—authorizes funding for the FIRE Act through fiscal year 2004. This critically important program provides federal grant funding for professional and volunteer fire departments to hire firefighters, purchase equipment, and invest in training. The tragic events of September 11, 2001, only serves to underscore the critical role that the brave men and women of fire and emergency response departments play in protecting and saving lives.

This amendment addresses a major funding shortfall for training and equipment for our local fire departments. Last year, while Congress appropriated $100 million in grant funding under the FIRE Act, local fire departments submitted nearly $3 billion in grant requests. This represents nearly $2.8 billion worth of unfunded requests under the FIRE Act program. My amendment addresses this funding shortfall by authorizing up to $600 million in fiscal year 2002, up to $800 million in fiscal year 2003, and up to $1 billion in fiscal year 2004 to meet the burgeoning demands of local fire departments as they seek to protect communities and save lives.

I also filed an amendment on the critically important issue of election reform. The National Defense Authorization bill included requirements for state and local election officials to meet with regard to voting by military and overseas voters. While I strongly support the voting rights provisions included in the National Defense Authorization bill, I would like to see these issues addressed in a more comprehensive and meaningful way. I have authored legislation, S. 565, the Equal Protection of Voting Rights Act—which passed the Senate Rules Committee by a vote of 10 to 0—that would accomplish this by ensuring that basic, federal standards to secure the right to vote in federal elections are provided to all eligible American voters. In order to accomplish this in an expedited fashion, I planned to offer my election reform bill as an amendment to the National Defense Authorization bill in the hope that this would spur action to enact meaningful, comprehensive election reform into law before Congress adjourns for the year.

However, in lieu of offering that amendment and in order to facilitate swift enactment of the defense bill, I included language in a bipartisan amendment—offered by Senator ALLARD—which recognizes the need to ensure that all eligible voters have their vote counted. Specifically, this sense-of-the-Senate language states that each election administrator of a Federal, State, or local election should ensure that all eligible American voters, regardless of race, ethnicity, disability, the language they speak, or the resources of the community in which they live should have an equal opportunity to cast a vote and have that vote counted. While this represents an important step forward, I will continue to diligently work toward passing meaningful and comprehensive election reform legislation during this session of Congress.

As our nation embarks on what promises to be a long and difficult war against terrorism, our nation's armed services will need the full support and resources of the government and the American people. The fiscal year 2002 National Defense Authorization bill represents the first step toward providing the men and women of the armed forces with the resources they need to succeed in this endeavor, and I strongly support its passage.

LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2001

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about hate crimes legislation I introduced with Senator KENNEDY in March of this year. The Local Law Enforcement Act of 2001 would add new categories to current hate crimes legislation sending a signal that violence of any kind is unacceptable in our society.

I would like to describe a terrible crime that occurred April 27, 2001 at Kent State University, OH. Mikell Nagy, an openly gay university student, was eating breakfast with friends when he heard someone make an anti-gay comment toward another friend across the room. He went over to see if the friend was okay. The next thing he knew, a man walked up behind him, called him a "faggot" and punched him in the face. According to witnesses, blood was pouring from cuts above his left eye. His two front teeth were chipped in the incident and his right cheek stayed swollen for over a week. The incident resulted in an on-campus rally against hate crimes.

I believe that government's first duty is to defend its citizens, to defend them against the harms that come out of hate. The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act of 2001 is now a symbol that can become substance. I believe that by passing this legislation, we can change hearts and minds as well.

WORLD POPULATION AWARENESS

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. President, in July of this year, Governor Mike Easley of my State of North Carolina, issued a proclamation designating the week of October 21-27, 2001 as "World Population Awareness Week." The proclamation draws attention to the serious issues associated with rapid population growth and urbanization, including infrastructure, pollution, transportation, health, sanitation, and public safety problems. I join Governor Easley in his recognition of World Population Awareness Week. I ask unanimous consent to have his proclamation printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A PROCLAMATION DESIGNATING WORLD POPULATION AWARENESS WEEK BY THE GOVERNOR OF THE STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA

Whereas, the world population stands today at more than 6.1 billion and increases by some one billion every 13 years; and

Whereas, the most significant feature of the 20th century phenomenon of unprecedented world population growth was rapid urbanization; and

Whereas, cities and urban areas today occupy only 2 percent of the earth's land, but contain 50 percent of its population and consume 75 percent of its resources; and

Whereas, the most rapid urban growth over the next two decades is expected in cities with populations ranging from 250,000 to one million; and

Whereas, along with advantages and amenities, the rapid growth of cities leads to substantial pressure on their infrastructure, manifested in sanitary, health and crime problems, as well as deterring the provision of basic social services; and

Whereas, in the interest of national and environmental security, nations must redouble voluntary and humanitarian efforts to stabilize their population growth at sustainable levels, while at all times respecting the cultural and religious beliefs and values of their citizens; and

Whereas, the theme of World Population Awareness Week in 2001 is "Population and the Urban Future";

Now, therefore, I Michael F. Easley, Governor of the State of North Carolina, do hereby proclaim October 21-27, 2001, as "World Population Awareness Week" in North Carolina, and commend this observance to all our citizens.

GREECE'S SUPPORT OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I rise today to thank Prime Minister of Greece Costas Simitis and President of Greece Kostas Stephanopoulos for their country's support of the United States in the aftermath of the September 11 attack on America. Prime Minister Simitis declared Greece's solidarity to the American people, and President Stephanopoulos expressed absolute condemnation of the attacks.

Greece once again came to the side of its NATO ally, the United States, by fully committing its resources to combat and eradicate terrorism. Greece's solidarity reflects longstanding historical, political, and cultural ties based on a common heritage and shared democratic values. This solidarity is further evidenced by the fact that Greece is one of only seven allies to join the United States in every major conflict in the 20th century.

The start of the 21st century poses new challenges for the United States and Greece. International terrorism attempts to undermine democracy and triumph over peace. I am pleased that Greeks and Americans stand shoulder to shoulder with freedom-loving people around the world in a united effort against the forces of terror.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

TRIBUTE TO MARGARET GODFREY

• Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. President, on behalf of countless thousands who have better lives because of her, I rise to pay tribute to an outstanding Oregonian: Margaret Godfrey. On November 2, 2001, Margaret Godfrey will be formally recognized for her life's work in the field of immigration.

Margaret Pellischek was born in Austria in 1928 and soon exhibited a talent for art and learning the English language. Margaret was 17 when World War II ended and was hired by the British to act as a liaison between the community and the British zone of occupied Austria. Given her excellent command of English, Margaret also worked with refugees to obtain military intelligence information.

Margaret continued her work with refugees and began assisting the United Nations and International Refugee Organization with the resettlement of almost 22 million "displaced persons." This event began a five decade career in helping the world's refugees.

Margaret Pellischek met John Godfrey in 1952 and they were married on July 18, 1953. She arrived in the United States on November 1, 1953 and immediately continued her refugee work. Mrs. Godfrey, as she became known in Oregon, worked with Catholic Charities to resettle refugees from Indonesia, Uganda, Czechoslovakia, and Southeast Asia. In 1978, she left Catholic Charities and joined Reverend Father Francis Kennard in founding the Immigration Counseling Service.

Since 1953, Margaret Godfrey has devoted her life to helping those who have fled poverty, persecution, war, and political unrest. She has affected countless thousands of lives and I am humbled by her dedication to public service. Margaret Godfrey cannot sit in a restaurant, walk into a hotel, or ride a bus without someone pausing to thank her.

Oregon is truly grateful for her work and her contribution to our community. The author Alice Tyler once wrote, "Some people come into our lives and leave footprints on our heart." Margaret Godfrey has left her footprints on all our hearts, and we are deeply indebted.●

TRIBUTE TO BEA GADDY

• Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I rise to pay tribute to the life and legacy of Mrs. Bea Gaddy—a great lady whose mission was to improve the lives of our poorest citizens.

Bea Gaddy was a legend in Baltimore. Her life was one of service to the poor. She worked tirelessly to provide food, housing, opportunity—and hope—to Baltimore's neediest citizens. She transformed her home in East Baltimore into the Patterson Park Emergency Food Center. She worked tirelessly to provide housing to the homeless. She worked to improve education and housing. She even made sure children had presents at Christmas. Thousands of people reached out to her for help. She helped them all—and she did it with compassion and respect.

Mrs. Gaddy's Thanksgiving dinners are legendary—providing dinner to as many as 20,000 people. She showed us all that the best way to show thankfulness for the blessings of life was to share these blessings with others.

She knew what it was like to be hungry, and to not have enough money to pay for heat. Because she knew what it felt like to be poor—she knew how to help people to help themselves.

I can't imagine Baltimore without her. Yet my hope is that she has taught so many people what it means to care—that her work will continue.

Mrs. Gaddy received a lot of honors—including the "Marylander of the Year," and one of former President Bush's "Thousand Points of Light." Mrs. Gaddy certainly deserved these honors—but what mattered more to her was that these honors helped her to help even more people.

Mrs. Gaddy's passing is a great loss—but her life was a triumph. My thoughts and prayers are with her many friends and family—and with the many people whose lives she touched.●

A TRIBUTE TO "WOMEN OF INFLUENCE"

● Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I come to the floor today to recognize ten outstanding women in business who have been honored by the Des Moines Business Record as "Women of Influence."

Each in their own way, these women have left a positive mark in the Iowa business world and Iowa as a whole. More than 100 women were nominated for this honor and the selections were made based on lifetime achievements in the workplace and in the community.

I wanted to take a few minutes to recognize a group of women who have recently been honored for their years of leadership in the Greater Des Moines area. They are: Mary Bontrager, executive vice president of the Greater Des Moines Partnership; Joyce Chapman, senior vice president of West Des Moines Bank; Angela Connolly, Polk County Supervisor; Christine Hensley, Des Moines City Councilwoman; Elizabeth Jacobs, state legislator and, assistant director of corporate relations to the Principle Financial Group; Jerilee M. Mace, executive director of the Des Moines Opera; Dr. Sheila McGuire Riggs, executive director of the Wellmark Foundation; Dr. Rizwan Z. Shah, medical director of the Child Abuse Program at Blank Children's Hospital; Margaret Swanson, 50-year volunteer and philanthropist; Margaret Toomey, activist for youths living in poverty, community college teacher and former executive director of the Oakridge Neighborhood, a private nonprofit subsidized housing community.

I congratulate each of them on this notable achievement. In addition to their specific accomplishments, each of these women serve as an inspiration to young women in Iowa who hope to achieve great heights in business and in the community. I applaud Connie Wimer and the Des Moines Business Record for recognizing their outstanding contributions. These women are an integral part of the strength of Iowa's community.●

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. CONRAD (for himself, Mr. LIEBERMAN, and Mr. DOMENICI):

S. 1522. A bill to support community-based group homes for young mothers and their children; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I am pleased to be joined by Senators LIEBERMAN AND DOMENICI in introducing the Second Chance Homes Promotion Act. This legislation would provide needed resources to expand and improve the availability of community-based, adult-supervised group homes for unmarried teenage mothers and their babies.

Although rates of teenage pregnancy in the United States have dropped in recent years, they remain higher than most industrialized nations. Today, four in 10 young women become pregnant at least once before entering adulthood. Teenage parents are less likely to graduate from school and more likely to end up on public assistance than other adolescents. Also, children born to teenage mothers tend to fare more poorly in school, are less likely to receive needed health care services, and are at greater risk for abuse and neglect. "Second Chance Homes" help improve this situation by providing teen parents with a safe, nurturing environment where they can receive guidance in parenting, child development, budgeting, health and nutrition.

The welfare reform legislation enacted in 1996 requires that minor teens live with an adult in order to receive welfare benefits. During debate on this legislation, I worked with Senator LIEBERMAN and others to allow second chance homes to qualify as an alternative residence for teenage parents who may be at risk for abuse, neglect or other serious problems in their home. Since this time, we have learned that teenagers who were provided the opportunity to live in second chance homes are more likely to continue their education or receive job training, less likely to have a second teenage pregnancy, and more likely to find gainful employment that allows them to leave the welfare rolls. I strongly believe these are promising results.

Unfortunately, not all teenage parents who might benefit from second chance homes have access to these residences. Today, there are approximately 100 second chance homes nationwide, located in only six States. This legislation would provide resources for improving the homes that already exist and creating additional homes where none exist, particularly in tribal and rural communities where there may be fewer options for teenage parents and their babies to receive the assistance they need. Finally, this legislation would provide resources that can be used to conduct further evaluations on the quality and effectiveness of second chance homes. It is my hope others will join us in supporting this important effort.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to join Senators CONRAD and DOMENICI to introduce the Second Chance Homes Promotion Act of 2001. This legislation will promote the expansion of Second Chance Homes for parenting teenagers and provide needed resources for this innovative and accomplished program.

The United States has the highest rate of teen pregnancy and births in the Western industrialized world. This costs the country at least $7 billion annually. Four in 10 young women become pregnant at least once before they reach the age of 20, nearly one million a year. Teen mothers are less likely to complete high school, and more likely to end up on welfare. The children of teenage mothers have lower birth weights, are more likely to perform poorly in school, and are at greater risk of abuse and neglect. But we know we can do something about this. Second Chance Homes are an essential tool to improve the life chances of these teenagers.

In the 1996 welfare reform legislation, I worked to develop the concept of Second Chance Homes as an alternative for minor teen parents required by that law to live at home or under adult supervision. Welfare reform required states to provide or assist teen mothers in locating a second chance home, maternity home, or other supportive living arrangement if they cannot live at home because of abuse, neglect or other reasons.

Since 1996, these homes have produced notable and promising results: fewer second pregnancies, slightly higher adoption rates, less child abuse, better maternal and child health, dramatically increased school completion rates, higher employment rates, reduced welfare dependency. Clearly these are successes we want to replicate.

Currently only six States have networks of Second Chance Homes. This bill will provide resources to expand the number of Second Chance Homes across the country to continue these encouraging trends and assist these young mothers to the brightest future they can have.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I am pleased to cosponsor legislation with Senators LIEBERMAN and CONRAD that will help to address a very serious problem facing our Nation. The rise of teenage pregnancy has many implications for American society in terms of educational and employment opportunities, economic self-sufficiency, children's health, and child abuse and crime prevention. For example, many teenage mothers find that their educational and vocational opportunities are severely limited. In fact, only one-third of teenage mothers complete high school and receive their diploma. Furthermore, teenage pregnancy has been linked with increases in child abuse and criminal activity. But, perhaps most disturbing is the fact that daughters of teenage mothers are 22 percent more likely to become teenage mothers themselves, thus creating a self-perpetuating cycle from generation to generation.

It is clear that these problems will only continue unless we address the issue of teenage pregnancy. This is an especially critical issue, because the United States has the highest rates of teenage pregnancy in the western industrialized world. I believe that this legislation will help to address these concerns. One of the ideas endorsed by Congress in the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996 was the concept of second chance homes. Second chance homes are an option for many teenage mothers who are required by the 1996 act to live at home or under adult supervision. These homes provide both living arrangements and educational opportunities for young mothers.

Second chance homes have been remarkably successful in decreasing both second pregnancies and child abuse and in improving the educational and vocational opportunities of teenage mothers. For example, New Mexico's second chance homes have produced many success stories with several residents earning a registered nurse degree. It is truly inspiring to think that many teenagers who had the odds stacked against them have been given a second chance and have become vital members of the health care profession.

Despite the successes of second chance homes, many teenage mothers do not have access to such a home. Although New Mexico has over a hundred second chance homes, many States are not so fortunate. Furthermore, according to a 1999 study, eighteen States do not have a policy for helping mothers find such a shelter. This is the genesis behind our legislation. We hope to increase the availability of second chance homes and allow a greater number of teenage mothers to take advantage of the many opportunities that they provide. This bill will create a competitive grant program within the Department of Health and Human Services that will award five-year grants to State, local, and tribal governments and to non-profit organizations to create or expand a second-chance home. I am hopeful that this significant federal investment will allow a greater number of teenage mothers to graduate from high school, and even college or vocational training, and will increase the health and safety of their children.

Second chance homes have a remarkable record in alleviating many of the problems associated with teenage pregnancy. From education to maternal and infant health, they have played a crucial role in the success of welfare reform. I thank Senators LIEBERMAN and CONRAD for their work on this important legislation, and I look forward to all teenage mothers having a true second chance.

By Mrs. FEINSTEIN:

S. 1523. A bill to amend title II of the Social Security Act to repeal the Government pension offset and windfall elimination provisions; to the Committee on Finance.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation to repeal the Government pension offset and windfall elimination provisions of the Social Security Act, provisions of current law that reduce earned Social Security benefits for teachers and other government pensioners.

Under current law, public employees, whose salaries are often lower than those in the private sector to begin with, find that they are penalized and held to a different standard when it comes to retirement benefits. The unfair reduction in their benefits makes it more difficult to recruit teachers, police officers, and fire fighters.

The legislation that I introduce today addresses two provisions in the current Social Security Act that create this problem: The Windfall Elimination Provision and the Government Pension Offset provision.

The Social Security Windfall Elimination Provision reduces Social Security benefits for retirees who paid into Social Security and also receive a government pension, such as from a teacher retirement fund. Private sector retirees receive monthly Social Security checks equal to 90 percent of their first $561 in average monthly career earnings, plus 32 percent of monthly earnings up to $3,381 and 15 percent of earnings above $3,381. Government pensioners, however, are only allowed to receive 40 percent of the first $561 in career monthly earnings, a penalty of $280.50 per month.

To my mind it is simply unfair, especially at a time when we need to be doing all we can to attract qualified people government service, and this bill will allow government pensioners the chance to earn the same 90 percent to which non-government pension recipients are entitled.

The current Government Pension Offset provision reduces Social Security spousal benefits by an amount equal to two-thirds of the spouse's public employment civil service pension. This can have the effect of taking away, entirely, a spouse's benefits from Social Security.

It is beyond my understanding why we would want to discourage people from pursuing careers in public service, such as teaching, by essentially saying that if you do become a teacher your family will suffer by not being able to receive the full retirement benefits they would otherwise be entitled to.

There is a teaching crisis in California right now, as there is in many States. Yet current Social Security benefit rules penalize private sector employees who leave their jobs to become public school teachers, or public school teachers who work second jobs during the summer months to help make ends meet. They lose legitimately earned Social Security benefits. And in certain cases, their wives and husbands will lose spousal benefits, too.

That is simply not fair and not right. California faces a teaching crisis, and we need to do everything we can to attract and keep good, qualified people as public school teachers, not make an already difficult job more difficult.

The same can be said for other public employees, like police and fire fighters.

This legislation addresses this inequity in the Social Security Act, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

By Mr. ALLEN (for himself, Mrs. BOXER, Mr. BURNS, Mr. GREGG, and Mr. WARNER):

S. 1525. A bill to extend the moratorium on the imposition of taxes on the Internet for an additional 5 years; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Defense of Internet Tax Freedom Act, with my friends and colleagues from California, Montana, New Hampshire, and Virginia, to extend the moratorium on Internet access taxes and multiple and discriminatory taxes for five-years. As you know, the original provisions of the Internet Tax Freedom Act are set to expire this October 21, less than two weeks from now.

As many in this chamber know, I have made extending the moratorium on taxes that discriminate against the Internet one of my top priorities since coming to the Senate. I cannot ever envision a time when it will be okay for any government to tax freedom on the Internet by taxing access to the Internet. I cannot ever conceive of any instance or event that will precipitate justification for multiple or discriminatory taxes on the Internet by any government, large or small, national or local.

For this reason, I have maintained constant and steady support for the permanent extension of the Internet moratorium on Internet access, multiple and discriminatory taxes. I never thought I would be willing to vote for, much less sponsor, legislation that endorsed a limited extension, but the events of September 11, 2001 have forced all of us in this Congress, and indeed throughout the country, to think and act according to the most immediate interests of our Nation.

Now, more than ever, the people of this country need security, not only with regard to safety, but also with regard to their financial future. Any additional tax burdens on the Internet now, will mean additional costs that many Americans cannot afford, forcing the poorest in our society to reduce or even forgo their use of the Internet as a tool for education and exploration.

Consider the fact that by taxing Internet access, States and localities are actually contributing to an already growing economic "digital divide." For every dollar added to the cost of Internet access, we can expect to see lost utilization of the Internet by thousands of poor and impoverished families nationwide.

Furthermore, the more expensive you make Internet access, the less likely people are to buy advanced services, including broadband delivered high-speed Internet access, multimedia expansion cards, and Internet protocol enabling software. Given the current state of the technology market as a whole, a decrease in consumption resulting from Internet access taxes could destroy what glimmer of hope remains for many telecommunications and technology manufacturers.

The effects of these closures have already been felt throughout our country. Congress should be working to keep businesses open and Americans employed, and that is why we must pass a reasonable extension of the moratorium on Internet access, multiple, and discriminatory taxes.

If you consider for a moment that the Internet has only been around in its contemporary form since 1995 or 1996, then you realize that this technology and the impact it has made and will continue to make on our economy is both very promising and very unsure. To date we have very little reliable data as to the real impact the Internet is making on the daily lives of Americans.

We have little to no information as to how and why consumers on the web decide to spend their hard earned money. We have no real evidence that consumers would decide to spend money or purchase products they buy on the web today if these products were only available in traditional brick-and-mortar settings.

The studies we have seen thus far all contradict one another. In one study dealing with the effects of Internet purchasing on State revenues, I found a quote from the President of the National Conference of State Legislatures comparing State budgets in recent years to the engine of a luxury car. Yet, I have heard from this and other organizations that the Internet is destroying State tax revenue streams.

I don't know who or what to believe. All I know is that many in this Senate need time to understand this issue. There are many members in this body who do not fully recognize that the moratorium is completely unrelated to sales taxes or the collection thereof. Given that fact, I cannot see why extending the moratorium for a mere few months or years would be beneficial in terms of educating the general public and the Members of this body.

In a matter of months or a few years, the technology sector will only just be at the point of full recovery from the current downturn in our economy. We will need several years beyond that point of full recovery to complete the comprehensive, neutral studies of the Internet and e-commerce that Members of Congress will need in order to make these important decisions, decisions that may directly challenge the conventional wisdom of our Founding Fathers and our own historical experience.

Given these requirements, five years seems to be the minimum amount of time Congress, the private sector, and other interested organizations will need in order to make well-informed, proactive decisions regarding other issues not related to the Internet moratorium.

In the meantime, we can guarantee a level of stability for the Internet over the next five years that will allow our Nation to continue to close the digital divide and encourage new and enhanced uses of the web for consumers.

I call on my colleagues to join me and my fellow cosponsors in cosponsoring the Defense of Internet Tax Freedom Act, in supporting a five year extension of the Internet moratorium on access multiple and discriminatory taxes.

Let's give the Internet the future it deserves and show America that the answer is not more taxes but rather better, more efficient government for the people and by the people.

Mrs. BOXER. Today, I am joining Senators ALLEN, BURNS, and GREGG in supporting an extension of the Internet tax moratorium for another 5 years.

I supported the moratorium when it was initially instituted in order to encourage the growth of the then newly emerging Internet industry. In the 1990s, the industry enjoyed a growth spurt that helped move the whole economy forward. But recently, Internet companies have fallen on hard times.

Because Internet commerce and technology firms are not now fairing well, I support a five year extension of the tax moratorium. I believe that renewed investment in the Internet is crucial to the welfare of the entire economy and we need to support its growth as much now as we did in 1998. Through a clean extension of the tax moratorium, Congress can promote an environment for Internet growth that avoids the uncertainty, inefficiencies, and barriers to entry that new taxes would create.

The technology sector was in a recession before the September 11, 2001 attacks. In the first half of 2001, more than 300,000 technology sector jobs were eliminated and companies declared bankruptcy because of reduced consumer and business spending on technology products. One example, Webvan, an Internet grocery delivery company, closed shop in July. In the process, 2,000 employees lost their jobs in the company's seven markets—San Francisco, Los Angeles, Orange County, San Diego, Seattle, Chicago, and Portland.

With the additional decline in consumer confidence resulting from the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks, the industry has fallen even deeper into recession. The results have been devastating for many firms. For example, since the attacks, Cisco laid off 8,500 workers, Excite@home has laid off 500 workers, and MicroStrategy has laid off 200 workers. By extending the Internet tax moratorium for five years, we send the message to the industry and its workers that we will not turn a deaf ear to this crisis.

The economy rose during the last eight years on the new jobs, efficiencies, and demand for products that the Internet and Internet-related companies created. Restoring economic growth will depend largely on our ability to spark renewed investment and growth in this vital industry. Firms that sell products over the Internet are key consumers of computers, software, and hardware. Their growth would encourage additional interest in connecting to the Internet and help produce new consumer demand for more technology products.

We should assist, not burden our technology firms at this time. Another five years could give the Internet time to work out its current growing pains. As technology innovations encourage additional growth and renewed interest in the Internet, our economy as a whole will benefit. A stronger Internet will mean more jobs, more companies, and a broader tax base. That is a net gain for everyone.

By Mr. ENZI (for himself and Mr. JOHNSON):

S. 1527. A bill to amend the Food Security Act of 1985 to extend and improve the environmental quality incentive program; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I rise to announce the introduction of a bill that would amend and extend the Environmental Quality Improvement Program, EQIP, to make it more user friendly, and to make it more effective in its on-the-ground implementation.

EQIP is a voluntary, Federal cost share program administered by the United States Department of Agriculture's, USDA, Natural Resources Conservation Service, NRCS, and Farm Service Agency, FSA. The program was created to assist farmers and ranchers in implementing conservation management programs on private lands, lands that not only serve as the backbone of our Nation's food supplies but which also provide important habitat for America's wildlife, including many endangered species. It does this by providing technical, financial, and educational assistance to farmers and ranchers as they make capital improvements in irrigation and other water systems, address a wide variety of conservation problems, provide flood plain protection, support grazing lands conservation, and facilitate wildlife habitat protection programs.

When everything works right, EQIP provides a tremendous benefit to producers and the environment. One example of this can be found in an EQIP-funded project underway in central Wyoming. This project, known locally as the Sand Mesa project, is allowing a group of Wyoming farmers to increase irrigation efficiency while also reducing pumping costs. They are doing this by replacing an aging canal system with a gravity-flow pipeline.

Under the old system, the open air canals lost a lot of water to seepage and evaporation. The water savings from the new pipeline has turned out to be critically important in years, like this one, where drought is so prevalent in the West. The 14 miles of pipeline replaced 11 miles of open canal and committed 5,000 acre feet of water for existing wetlands. In the first year alone the new system saved at least 22,000 acre feet of water. This translates into that much more water being available in Bull Lake and Wind River for other uses. The gravity-flow pressure is also adequate to eventually run all 36 irrigation pivots on the new system, which will result in an even greater water savings.

Why did this project work out so well? It wasn't because Washington, DC bureaucrats stepped in and told the community the best things to do with their money.

Sand Mesa is a combined effort that unites the knowledge of local farmers with local technical experts who together are able to turn Wyoming's desert into fertile farmland. Together, the farmers and the technicians are designing a conservation and financial plan that will allow them to make the most out of their limited environmental and financial resources.

The inclusion of local expertise in establishing program priorities is one of EQIP's strongest assets. Local working groups are made up of individuals who represent a wide range of interests. The groups are made up of farmers, ranchers, representatives from conservation districts, agricultural organizations, environmental groups, Native Americans, and other local, state and federal agencies.

Along with the State Advisory Committees, local work groups have made a conscientious effort to make sure limited EQIP dollars are put to their best use. They have not always been successful. The only existing authority these groups have is in identifying priority areas that may, if Washington, DC bureaucrats decide, receive funding. The result of this allocation structure is that funds are not always equitably distributed.

In 1999 a group of my constituents in Powell, WY approached me with serious concerns about the way EQIP regulations took authority away from local experts. EQIP was created as a part of the 1996 Farm Bill. In establishing EQIP, the Farm Bill terminated four previously existing cost share, conservation programs and replaced them with the new program. The terminated programs had relied heavily on local input to manage all aspects of implementation. Because of this history producers had come to expect local expertise to play a bigger role in the new program. EQIP regulations, however, consolidated the decision making process at the Federal level and left out local input.

My constituents were concerned that an unusually large percentage of new EQIP dollars were being directed to applicants who did not necessarily require federal assistance to complete conservation improvements, while smaller, family-owned producers, who could sincerely benefit from the program, were being overlooked. Their fears were that funding decisions were determined more by politics and grant writing ability than by the greatest need or ability to maximize environmental benefit per dollar expended.

In response to their concerns, I wrote a letter to former Secretary of Agriculture Dan Glickman and asked for his help in correcting these inequities. He forwarded my request to the Wyoming NRCS offices where NRCS Wyoming State Director Ed Burton organized a team that reviewed the EQIP allocation process. This team identified a number of legislative and administrative actions which, if they are followed, would ensure the program's most effective implementation.

This bill is the result of their efforts. The bill addresses four areas that the Wyoming review team noted would require specific legislative fixes. First, the bill increases allocation flexibility by defining the phrase "maximize environmental benefits per dollar expended" in a way that gives the Secretary of Agriculture the ability to consult with local working groups in deciding what are the best ways to guarantee that limited EQIP funds can be directed to those ranchers and farmers who can provide the most effective use of the program's cost share program. The bill would simplify and streamline the current process to make the program less time consuming to field office staff, and less frustrating to producers.

The bill also would allow farmers and ranchers the flexibility to use EQIP funds when they are needed most. Too often weather conditions or other unrelated reasons make it impossible for eligible applicants to conform to Federal fiscal calendars. By allowing funds to be available until expended, this bill would keep program dollars available on a real-world schedule and would allow producers to receive cost share dollars at current costs and not at the rate in effect when the contract was written.

The third change this bill would make is to adjust the program to allow contracts from three to ten years. Current EQIP requirements allow five to ten year contracts only. EQIP payments are limited generally to $10,000 per person annually, and $50,000 over the 5 to 10 year life of the contract. This is often much more than is required by farmers and could place an undue hardship on producers who do not have the ability or the desire to enter into long-term contracts. Three to ten year contracts, based on the producer's conservation plan, would allow greater flexibility to implement resource management systems.

Finally, the bill would allow producers who are ready to begin work in the first year of the contract to immediately receive contract payments. Many producers who apply for EQIP are ready to install practices as soon as the contract is approved. Under current law, if practices are installed in the same year the contract is written, the producer must wait until the next fiscal year for their first payment. This delay can cause undue financial hardship, especially in an industry where cash flow is severely limited.

I am proud of the efforts of the people in my State to make this program better and more efficient. I encourage my colleagues to support this bill and to support our farmers in their work to feed the world.

By Mr. MCCAIN (for himself and Mr. SMITH of Oregon):

S. 1528. a bill to improve the safety and security of rail transportation; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Rail Safety and Security Act. I am pleased to be joined in this effort by Senator GORDON SMITH, the ranking Republican of the Commerce Committee's Surface Transportation and Merchant Marine Subcommittee.

This legislation would authorize funding to improve rail passenger safety and security, while assuring accountability and oversight of all associated expenditures. It would also amend current law and allow for rail police officers to enforce laws on the properties of other railroads and would establish criminal sanctions for attacks against our Nation's rail system. And, it would also require a comprehensive assessment of the security risks surrounding rail transportation in order for the Congress to then take appropriate action based on the conclusions of the assessment. I believe this legislation is a much needed step in protecting our rail transportation system against security threats and vulnerabilities.

During the past four weeks, we have been working in a bipartisan manner to address the nation's most pressing needs in the wake of the September 11 terrorist attacks. We have worked with the administration to provide necessary emergency funding to aid in the aftermath of the attacks in New York and at the Pentagon.

Part of that effort has focused on the survival of the aviation industry, and rightly so. Our Nation, our citizens, and our economy cannot afford further deterioration of this critical segment of the transportation industry. It is equally important that we approve aviation security legislation and send it to the President.

Transportation systems are the target of 40 percent of terrorist attacks worldwide. That is why it is necessary for the government to play a key role in assessing potential security threats in our Nation's transportation system. We must ensure that we have taken every precaution to safeguard critical infrastructure and that procedures are in place to protect people and property in the event of actual terrorist attacks. In that effort, the Senate Commerce Committee has been conducting a series of hearings to gain the information we need to help us evaluate potential security risks and determine how best to respond to those potential risks.

In addition to aviation security legislation, the Commerce Committee has approved legislation to address security at our Nation's ports. I am hopeful the full Senate will have the opportunity to consider that bill in the near future.

Given the hundreds of thousands of miles of rail track, highways, and pipelines, hundreds of ports and terminals throughout the U.S., and the ease of access to public transportation, it is impossible to fully secure our transportation system against all deliberate acts of destruction. Efforts to reduce vulnerability, however, are essential and each industry has a responsibility to assess and respond to identified problems. Federal, State, and local governments also play an important role in this effort.

The legislation I am introducing today is designed to address the safety and security of our Nation's rail transportation network, both passenger and freight. Unlike other passenger rail funding proposals that have been suggested, this legislation would only fund legitimate safety and security initiatives. It would also assure the highest degree of accountability of all expenditures. I note my proposal would not provide a handout directly to Amtrak to fund long-planned capacity projects that it has been unable to accomplish. Therefore, some will likely object to my approach from the outset. But, I hope members interested in addressing legitimate rail safety and security concerns will join me in supporting this alternative approach.

Last week, the Senate Commerce Committee held a hearing on Rail and Maritime security. We learned from that hearing that certain actions that can be taken immediately to address security vulnerabilities. Therefore, this legislation is designed to address the needs we currently know exist and, at the same time, provide for an assessment of rail security that would enable us to act on matters identified through a more comprehensive review than has yet occurred.

First, the bill would authorize funding for security upgrades for rail transportation provided by Amtrak. However, the funding would be made available to Amtrak only after the Secretary establishes appropriate funding procedure safeguards and after approving a system wide security plan submitted by Amtrak.

Second, the bill would authorize funding for the Tunnel Life Safety projects in New York, Baltimore, Maryland, and Washington, D.C. The DOT Inspector General has confirmed the need to bring existing systems up to par with modern safety standards, including the replacement of narrow, winding spiral staircases, the installation of modern ventilation fans, and the rehabilitation of benchwalls. The IG further has expressed concerns that an extended schedule of repairs as would occur without federal assistance places the public at prolonged and unnecessary risk.

Based on the findings of the DOT-IG, this legislation includes provisions to fully fund these projects in order to reduce the risk to public safety. It would fund these projects, however, only after the Secretary approves engineering and financial plans submitted by Amtrak and conditions the release of funding by entering into proper funding procedures. In other words, the funding will not just be handed to Amtrak with no questions asked. It ensures proper federal oversight of the federal assistance.

Furthermore, the legislation would direct the DOT Inspector General to review the obligation and expenditure of funds provided under this legislation to ensure that the funds are used solely for the purposes intended by Congress.

Third, the bill would permit rail police officers to enforce laws on the properties of other railroads. Current law only permits officers to enforce laws on the properties of the rail carrier that employs the police officer. This provision would allow for flexibility and the sharing of enforcement resources among all rail carriers as may be necessary to address safety and security threats directed at a particular carrier.

Fourth, this legislation includes provisions to address potential security threats to our nation's rail transportation system. While the vulnerabilities of air travel may be most prevalent in our memory, our rail system has been and continues to be vulnerable to security threats. Five years ago, Arizonans and citizens throughout the country were saddened to learn of an Amtrak derailment near Hyder, AZ, which claimed the life of one individual and injured seventy-eight others. Shortly after the accident, the sadness turned to shock as we learned that the derailment may have been caused by someone who intentionally sabotaged the track. The Arizona accident is not unique. There have been other examples of acts against railroads.

Following that occurrence, the Senate passed legislation requested by the previous Administration addressing some of these vulnerabilities. Unfortunately, we failed to reach an agreement with the House during conference deliberations on the multi-year highway funding legislation. Therefore, I am including those provisions as part of this bill today. Now, more than ever, these provisions are essential.

The legislation would establish criminal sanctions for violent attacks against railroads, railroad employees and railroad passengers similar to sanctions currently afforded for attacks against airlines, vessels on the high seas, motor carriers, and pipelines. I strongly believe the rail industry and its employees and customers deserve the same protections afforded the other methods.

Finally, the legislation would direct the Secretary to assess the security risks associated with rail transportation and to develop recommendations for target hardening those areas identified as posing significant risk to public safety. As I previously mentioned, there has not yet been a comprehensive analysis of the security risks of the rail industry. This provision would direct that such an assessment be carried out and at the conclusion of the assessment, it would provide us with the information Congress needs in order to make future decisions on how to further address rail security matters.

I believe this legislation is a credible proposal that could do a great deal to improve the safety and security of our rail network. I stand ready to work with my colleagues, the Administration, industry, and public safety advocates in an effort to address the safety and security of our nation's rail system.

I urge my colleagues to support this measure.

By Ms. LANDRIEU:

S. 1529. A bill to direct the Assistant to the President for Homeland Security to establish the National Energy Infrastructure Security Program; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, as we consider the issue of national security in the weeks after the terrorist attacks of September 11, one sector in particular that deserves our undivided attention is the security of our national energy infrastructure. The vulnerability of our country's energy infrastructure became more clear last week when an individual was able to cause about 150,000 gallons of oil to spill from the 800 mile Trans-Alaska Pipeline with a bullet from a high powered rifle.

I believe the events of September 11 have proven that Congress has a responsibility to make sure our Nation's energy infrastructure is adequately protected from both hostile and natural attacks.

We are now engaged in an operation to combat terrorism which will take considerable time and resources. Some of the emergency measures put in place at energy facilities throughout the country in response to the September 11 attacks can only be maintained for so long. For example, off the coast of my State of Louisiana the Nation's largest port for offloading crude oil was being patrolled by a military vessel. While a kind of safety zone around such areas makes sense, should we expend our military's resources in order to do so? Merely using our present available resources to operate at such high levels of alert for the duration of what all indications are will be a long term effort does not seem realistic. There is a need for a substantial commitment to the protection of our country's energy infrastructure both in scope and duration.

Although 90 percent of the infrastructure in this country is privately owned and operated and industry does have an obligation to provide security, there is sufficient evidence to suggest the Federal Government should make a more significant contribution. First, our country is now experiencing an economic downturn. It is imperative for our government to continue to focus its attention on measures to increase and shore up production while keeping our domestic supply of energy steady.

Second, energy infrastructure is by nature not contained within the borders of one State or region. For example, three of the country's top ten gasoline consuming States are in the Midwest. The Midwest imports 25 percent of its total demand from the Gulf Coast. While the Gulf Coast refining centers handle half of the total barrels processed in the U.S. today, there are only two pipeline systems in place to move the product from the South to the Midwest. This is a tremendous amount of pressure on Gulf Coast refineries to meet demand in the Midwest. What happens if one or both of these systems are disrupted? In addition, the only offshore oil terminal in the United States, the Louisiana Offshore Oil Port, LOOP, is estimated to take in 13 percent of the United States' imported oil and refining capacity and is connected by five pipelines to over 30 percent of the United States refining capacity. Imagine the impact its disruption from natural or hostile threats would have on the Nation's refining capacity.

So, whether we are talking about pipelines, transmission lines, electric generators, refineries, nuclear power plants, ports, rigs or platforms, the Federal Government has a clear and compelling interest in providing the necessary resources to ensure that our energy infrastructure is sufficiently protected. Since the disruption of a particular facility or transmission line has economic consequences and could pose a significant threat to the safety of the surrounding population, as well as the effect on our economy, environment, state and local authorities must also play a role. This would require a partnership among the federal, state and local governments and industry.

Today, I am introducing legislation, the National Energy Infrastructure Security Program Establishment Act, which would: Establish a multi-year national energy infrastructure program overseen by the newly appointed Assistant to the President for Homeland Security, to provide funding annually to all 50 States in order to make sure that all appropriate measures from the monitoring and detection of potential threats to mitigation, response and recovery are in place against hostile and natural threats; create two funds, one for the protection of energy infrastructure located in the coastal zones of oil and gas producing States, the other for the energy infrastructure of all fifty States excluding those areas in the oil and gas producing States that would be provided for in the first fund; provide funding based on a formula related to the amount of energy infrastructure a State has as well as to the contribution of the State's infrastructure to the rest of the country; the Governor of each State would consult with Federal, State and local law enforcement, public safety, officials, industry and other relevant persons or agencies to put together a security plan to submit to the Assistant to the President for Homeland Security as well as the Secretaries of Commerce, Energy and Interior detailing what measures were necessary provide adequate protection of that particular State's infrastructure; and in order to pay for this program we would use a percentage of offshore revenues from oil and gas development on the Outer Continental Shelf.

If we are truly serious about protecting our country's energy infrastructure from present and future threats, it is necessary for us to provide a commitment of significant Federal resources as soon as possible.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 78—EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING THE ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL CHARACTER COUNTS WEEK

Mr. DODD (for himself, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. CLELAND, Mr. BENNETT, Mrs. MURRAY, Mr. BOND, Mr. DORGAN, Mr. BROWNBACK, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. BUNNING, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. BURNS, Ms. LANDRIEU, Mr. CAMPBELL, Mr. KOHL, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. CONRAD, Ms. COLLINS, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. DEWINE, Mrs. CARNAHAN, Mr. ENSIGN, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. ENZI, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. FITZGERALD, Mr. EDWARDS, Mr. FRIST, Mr. REID, Mr. HAGEL, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. HELMS, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. HUTCHINSON, Mr. BREAUX, Mr. INHOFE, Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. SHELBY, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire, Mr. FEINGOLD, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. THURMOND, and Mr. VOINOVICH) submitted the following concurrent resolution, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. CON. RES. 78

Whereas the well-being of the Nation requires that the young people of the United States become an involved, caring citizenry with good character;

Whereas the character education of children has become more urgent as violence by and against youth increasingly threatens the physical and psychological well-being of the people of the United States;

Whereas more than ever, children need strong and constructive guidance from their families and their communities, including schools, youth organizations, religious institutions, and civic groups;

Whereas the character of a nation is only as strong as the character of its individual citizens;

Whereas the public good is advanced when young people are taught the importance of good character and the positive effects that good character can have in personal relationships, in school, and in the workplace;

Whereas scholars and educators agree that people do not automatically develop good character and that, therefore, conscientious efforts must be made by institutions and individuals that influence youth to help young people develop the essential traits and characteristics that comprise good character;

Whereas, although character development is, first and foremost, an obligation of families, the efforts of faith communities, schools, and youth, civic, and human service organizations also play an important role in fostering and promoting good character;

Whereas Congress encourages students, teachers, parents, youth, and community leaders to recognize the importance of character education in preparing young people to play their role in determining the future of the Nation;

Whereas effective character education is based on core ethical values which form the foundation of democratic society;

Whereas examples of character are trustworthiness, respect, responsibility, fairness, caring, citizenship, and honesty;

Whereas elements of character transcend cultural, religious, and socioeconomic differences;

Whereas the character and conduct of our youth reflect the character and conduct of society; therefore, every adult has the responsibility to teach and model ethical values and every social institution has the responsibility to promote the development of good character;

Whereas Congress encourages individuals and organizations, especially those who have an interest in the education and training of the young people of the United States, to adopt the elements of character as intrinsic to the well-being of individuals, communities, and society;

Whereas many schools in the United States recognize the need, and have taken steps, to integrate the values of their communities into their teaching activities;

Whereas the establishment of National Character Counts Week, during which individuals, families, schools, youth organizations, religious institutions, civic groups, and other organizations would focus on character education, would be of great benefit to the Nation; and

Whereas the week beginning October 15, 2001, and the week beginning October 14, 2002, are appropriate weeks to establish as National Character Counts Week: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of Congress that—

(1) a National Character Counts Week should be established to promote character education; and

(2) the President should issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to—

(A) embrace the elements of character identified by their local schools and communities, such as trustworthiness, respect, responsibility, fairness, caring, citizenship, and honesty; and

(B) observe such a week with appropriate ceremonies, programs, and activities.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds the following:

(1) The safety and security of the civil air transportation system is critical to the United States’ security and its national defense.

(2) A safe and secure United States civil air transportation system is essential to the basic freedom of Americans to move in intrastate, interstate, and international transportation.

(3) The terrorist hijackings and crashes of passenger aircraft into guided bombs for strikes against civilian and military targets requires the United States to change fundamentally the way it approaches the task of ensuring the safety and security of the civil air transportation system.

(4) The existing fragmentation of responsibility for that safety and security among government agencies and between government and nongovernment entities is inefficient and unacceptable in light of the hijackings and crashes on September 11, 2001.

(5) The General Accounting Office has recommended that security functions and security personnel at United States airports should become Federal government responsibility.

(6) Although the number of Federal air marshals is classified, their presence on both international and domestic flights would have a deterrent effect on hijacking and would further bolster public confidence in the safety of air travel.

(7) The effectiveness of existing security measures, including employee background checks and passenger pre-screening, is impaired because of the inaccessibility of, or the failure to share information among, data bases maintained by different Federal and international agencies for criminal behavior or pertinent intelligence information.

SEC. . 01. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the “Arctic Coastal Plain Domestic Energy Security Act of 2001”.

SEC. . 02. DEFINITIONS.

In this title:

(1) COASTAL PLAIN.—The term “Coastal Plain” means that area identified as such in the map entitled “Arctic National Wildlife Refuge”, dated August 1980, as referenced in section 1002(b)(1) of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act of 1980 (16 U.S.C. 3142(b)(1)), comprising approximately 1,549,000 acres.

(2) SECRETARY.—The term “Secretary”, except as otherwise provided, means the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary’s designee.

SEC. . 03. LEASING PROGRAM FOR LANDS WITHIN THE COASTAL PLAIN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall take such actions as are necessary—

(1) to establish and implement in accordance with this title a competitive oil and gas leasing program under the Mineral Leasing Act (30 U.S.C. 181 et seq.) that will result in an environmentally sound program for the exploration, development, and production of the oil and gas resources of the Coastal Plain; and

(2) to administer the provisions of this title through regulations, lease terms, conditions, restrictions, prohibitions, stipulations, and other provisions that ensure the oil and gas exploration, development, and production activities on the Coastal Plain will result in no significant adverse effect on fish and wildlife, their habitat, subsistence resources, and the environment, and including, in furtherance of this goal, by requiring the application of the best commercially available technology for oil and gas exploration, development, and production to all exploration, development, and production operations under this title in a manner that ensures the receipt of fair market value by the public for the mineral resources to be leased.

(b) REPEAL.—Section 1003 of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act of 1980 (16 U.S.C. 3143) is repealed.

(c) COMPLIANCE WITH REQUIREMENTS UNDER CERTAIN OTHER LAWS.—

(1) COMPATIBILITY.—For purposes of the National Wildlife Refuge System Administration Act of 1966, the oil and gas leasing program and activities authorized by this section in the Coastal Plain are deemed to be compatible with the purposes for which the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge was established, and that no further findings or decisions are required to implement this determination.

(2) ADEQUACY OF THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR’S LEGISLATIVE ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT STATEMENT.—The “Final Legislative Environmental Impact Statement” (April 1987) on the Coastal Plain prepared pursuant to section 1002 of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act of 1980 (16 U.S.C. 3142) and section 102(2)(C) of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4332(2)(C)) is deemed to satisfy the requirements under the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 that apply with respect to actions authorized to be taken by the Secretary to develop and promulgate the regulations for the establishment of a leasing program authorized by this title before the conduct of the first lease sale.

(3) COMPLIANCE WITH NEPA FOR OTHER ACTIONS.—Before conducting the first lease sale under this title, the Secretary shall prepare an environmental impact statement under the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 with respect to the actions authorized by this title that are not referred to in paragraph (2). Notwithstanding any other law, the Secretary is not required to identify non-leasing alternative courses of action or to analyze the environmental effects of such courses of action. The Secretary shall only identify a preferred action for such leasing and a single leasing alternative, and analyze the environmental effects and potential mitigation measures for those two alternatives. The identification of the preferred action and related analysis for the first lease sale under this title shall be completed within 18 months after the date of the enactment of this Act. The Secretary shall only consider public comments that specifically address the Secretary’s preferred action and that are filed within 20 days after publication of an environmental analysis. Notwithstanding any other law, compliance with this paragraph is deemed to satisfy all requirements for the analysis and consideration of the environmental effects of proposed leasing under this title.

(d) RELATIONSHIP TO STATE AND LOCAL AUTHORITY.—Nothing in this title shall be considered to expand or limit State and local regulatory authority.

(e) SPECIAL AREAS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, after consultation with the State of Alaska, the city of Kaktovik, and the North Slope Borough, may designate up to a total of 45,000 acres of the Coastal Plain as a Special Area if the Secretary determines that the Special Area is of such unique character and interest so as to require special management and regulatory protection. The Secretary shall designate as such a Special Area the Sadlerochit Spring area, comprising approximately 4,000 acres as depicted on the map referred to in section 1002(1).

(2) MANAGEMENT.—Each such Special Area shall be managed so as to protect and preserve the area’s unique and diverse character including its fish, wildlife, and subsistence resource values.

(3) EXCLUSION FROM LEASING OR SURFACE OCCUPANCY.—The Secretary may exclude any Special Area from leasing. If the Secretary leases a Special Area, or any part thereof, for purposes of oil and gas exploration, development, production, and related activities, there shall be no surface occupancy of the lands comprising the Special Area.

(4) DIRECTIONAL DRILLING.—Notwithstanding the other provisions of this subsection, the Secretary may lease all or a portion of a Special Area under terms that permit the use of horizontal drilling technology from sites on leases located outside the area.

(f) LIMITATION ON CLOSED AREAS.—The Secretary's sole authority to close lands within the Coastal Plain to oil and gas leasing and to exploration, development, and production is that set forth in this title.

(g) REGULATIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out this title, including rules and regulations relating to protection of the fish and wildlife, their habitat, subsistence resources, and environment of the Coastal Plain, by no later than 15 months after the date of the enactment of this Act.

THE AIRLINE BAILOUT PACKAGE

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. President, I want to take a few moments to lend my support to Senator CARNAHAN's measure, which would finally give some relief to the many airline workers in this country who have lost their jobs in recent weeks.

I voted against the prior package to bail out the airlines of this country. Many of the Members in the Congress were under the impression that that $15 billion package was designed to compensate the airlines for their losses during the 3- or 4-day Government shutdown. But most Members don't recognize that during that 3- or even 4-day shutdown the airlines' lost revenues—not necessarily bottom line losses, but missing revenues—were $340 million a day. If you multiply $340 million a day by 4 days, as opposed to 3 days, being very generous to the airlines, you come up with losses of $1.36 billion. But Congress didn't give the airlines $1.36 billion; we gave them $5 billion in immediate upfront cash, plus $10 billion worth of loan guarantees. So the Nation's airlines got many times their losses from the 3-day shutdown from Congress.

I thought that bailout package was excessive. I also thought that Congress perpetrated an injustice in shoveling out such large amounts of taxpayer money toward the airlines. We completely ignored the over 1 million employees in the airline industry.

It is a misnomer to call the airline bailout package an industry bailout package. It wasn't an industry bailout package; it was a shareholder bailout package. There was no bailout for the skycaps, or for the flight attendants, or the mechanics, or the baggage handlers, and the pilots didn't get bailed out. Instead, it was a bailout for the sophisticated investors who held airline stocks in their portfolios and the many large institutions holding airline stocks in their portfolios.

I emphasize that it is a misnomer to call the airline bailout an industry bailout. It was simply a bailout for shareholders or investors. There was no relief for the over 1 million employees of the airline industry. It is fitting and proper to now provide relief for the airline industry employees.

We should have done this in the original airline industry bailout. Out of that $15 billion which we gave to the airlines, we could have had some requirements that they give minimal severance or health care benefits to their employees, at least some requirements, some strings attached to assure the laid-off flight attendants, baggage handlers, pilots, and skycaps would be treated decently. But we did not do that in that bailout package.

We have to correct the injustice in that first bailout package, and we have to help the industry's employees. The relief Senator CARNAHAN has put together in her package—and I am happy to say I am a cosponsor—is appropriate. It should have been in the original bill.

As I said, we paid the airlines many times their losses for the period they were shut down. That created a terrible precedent, in my judgment, one that is haunting Congress every day this fall because we now are beset with industries from all over the country coming to Capitol Hill knocking on our door and saying: You gave all that money to the airlines. You bailed them out. You covered all their losses through December 31, 2001. You paid them not just for the days the Government shut them down by Government edict; you covered all their losses through the end of the year.

Other industries are now saying to leaders in Washington: Why are we different? Why shouldn't we get a bailout? We have hotels that are empty. We have car rental firms that are hovering near insolvency because they do not have any customers. We have many of the suppliers for airlines—I was approached by a company in Illinois that supplies food for the airlines, and they believed they were entitled to a bailout.

We have industries of all sorts that have come asking us for help, and because of the precedent we set in the airline industry bill, we do not know how to tell these other industries that they are not entitled to help.

We should have carved aside a generous portion in that initial bill for workers in the airline industry. Senator CARNAHAN's amendment will get this done. I support it, and I urge colleagues to vote in favor of it. It would be a miscarriage of justice; it would compound the injustice we have already perpetrated if we were to let stand a bailout for sophisticated investors while we left all the airline industry employees twisting in the wind. We cannot allow that to stand. We have to correct that injustice.

Many of these employees who have been furloughed maybe never had a nickel to invest in the market in the first place. They are worried about how they are going to pay their mortgage, or how they are going to pay their rent, or how they are going to feed their families while they are laid off. Meanwhile, many investors who should have appreciated the risk of investing in the airline industry were bailed out, but the skycap got the boot. We have to correct that.

I am pleased to stand with the Senator from Missouri in support of this legislation. I urge all my colleagues to vote in favor of it.

Mr. President, I thank you for your indulgence at this late hour and appreciate your attention. I yield the floor.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 10 A.M. TOMORROW

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate stands adjourned until 10 a.m. tomorrow.

Thereupon, the Senate, at 7:13 p.m., adjourned until Thursday, October 11, 2001, at 10 a.m.
