PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 104th CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

Vol. 141

WASHINGTON, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1995

No. 30

Senate

(Legislative day of Monday, January 30, 1995)

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Today's prayer will be offered by our guest chaplain, the Reverend Barbara D. Henry, of the Episcopal Diocese of Washington.

PRAYER

The guest Chaplain, the Reverend Barbara D. Henry, of the Episcopal Diocese of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

Almighty God, to whom we must account for all our powers and privileges, we thank You for the rich resources of this Nation, and for the freedom to choose the men and women who make the laws of this land.

Guide and bless our Senators here assembled. Give them strength and courage for their tasks, wisdom in their deliberations, and the foresight to provide for the well-being of our society. Fill them with the love of truth and righteousness, and make them ever mindful of their calling to serve the people whom they represent.

Kindle in the hearts of all the people of this country, we pray, the true love of peace. Grant us grace fearlessly to contend against evil and to make no peace with oppression; and that we may reverently use the freedom with which we have been blessed, help us to employ it in the maintenance of justice in our communities and among the nations of the world.

For Yours is the Kingdom, O Lord, and You are exalted as Head over all. Amen.—Adapted from prayers in "The Book of Common Prayer," 1979.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The distinguished acting majority leader is recognized.

Mr. LOTT. Thank you, Mr. President.

SCHEDULE

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, this morning the time for the two leaders has been reserved and the Senate will resume consideration of House Joint Resolution 1, the constitutional balanced budget amendment. Under the order, Senator BINGAMAN will offer an amendment regarding the supermajority, which will be considered under a 60-minute time limitation. Senators should be aware that a rollcall vote is anticipated on or in relation to the amendment at approximately 10:30 this morning. Following that rollcall vote, Senator WELLSTONE will make a motion to refer, under a 60-minute time limitation. Therefore, further rollcall votes will occur throughout the day.

I yield the floor.

Mr. HATFIELD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURNS). The Senator from Oregon is recognized.

THE REVEREND BARBARA D. HENRY

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I would like to take this moment to thank our chaplain for the day, the Reverend Barbara Henry, who has opened the Senate with prayer.

We are very honored to have Reverend Henry in this role. She is a person of great distinction and background in her educational experience—Boston University and the University of Pittsburgh in music, and also a graduate of the General Theological Seminary of the Episcopal Church of America in New York.

Reverend Henry has not only served as a pastor in a parish, two of them here in Washington, DC—St. John's Episcopal Church in Georgetown and as assistant rector at St. Stephen and the Incarnation Episcopal Church in Washington—she has divided her ministry between the parish and in music education and in music library work, especially.

She is now serving at Catholic University of America here in Washington, where she is the head music librarian and is carrying out her other ministry within the region of Washington.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a more detailed résumé of her outstanding ministry be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the résumé was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RÉSUMÉ OF BARBARA D. HENRY

EDUCATION

Mus.B. (Music Education) Boston University, 1956.

M.M. (Music History and Literature) Boston University, 1962.

M.L.S. (Library Science) University of Pittsburgh, 1965. (Member, Beta Phi Mu; Recipient of Phi Delta Gamma Award to Outstanding Woman Graduate Student)

M.Div. The General Theological Seminary, New York, 1983. (Teaching Assistant, Church History)

LIBRARY EXPERIENCE

I have been a music librarian in a variety of academic and public libraries, from 1958 to 1980 and from 1988 to the present. These positions have included experience in all aspects of librarianship, including reference, collection development, cataloging, and administration. From 1970 on, these were positions of increasing administrative responsibility, including budget management, annual reporting and supervision of up to fifteen people.

East Carolina University, Greenville, N.C., Music Librarian, September 1970–June 1972:

Responsible for administration of all activities of the Music Library, a branch library located in the School of Music. Duties included selection of books, music, periodicals and phonorecords; cataloging and processing of phonorecords. Managed budget for acquisitions; supervised 8-10 student assistants. Reported annually to Dean of School of Music and to University Librarian.

Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., Assistant Music Librarian for Technical Services, July 1972-December 1973:

Administered all technical processes in the Music Library, including the acquisition of music and sound recordings directly, and books and serials through the University Library, Manual cataloging of music and sound recordings; computer cataloging of books through main library. Acted as liaison with University Library Technical Processing Division. Shared in policy-making and reference service in Music Library. Supervised staff of three full-time assistants and 5-6 students. Planned and assisted with move of Music Library to new building.

The Curtis Institute of Music, Philadelphia, Pa., Head Librarian, January 1974-June 1975:

Supervised and administered all operations of the Library, including circulation, reference, cataloging, acquisitions, and budget management. Selected books, music and sound recordings with assistance of faculty. Supervised three full-time staff, as well as students. Acted as curator of large collection of rare books and manuscripts. Reorganized library, planned new facility and supervised moving of collections to new quarters.

The Library of Congress, Music Division, Washington, D.C., Assistant Head, Reference Section, July 1975-July 1977; Head, August 1977-July 1980:

As Assistant Head, supervised day-to-day activities of the Reference Section; reviewed and edited all reference correspondence; provided and/or directed reference service to readers and telephone inquirers; acted as statistical coordinator for the Division; conducted tours of the Division. As Head, responsible for collection development and management, including selection of material not acquired by copyright. Shared in policy-making and budgetary management with Chief and Assistant chief of Division. Supervised 6-8 reference librarians and 5-7 technicians.

The Catholic University of America, Washington, DC, Head, Music Library, March 1988-present

Manage all aspects of the Music Library, a separate branch library which contains music materials in all formats: books, periodicals, music and sound recordings. Supervise two full-time support staff, and 10-15 students. Prepare and monitor budget; prepare annual report, which includes both statistical and narrative sections. Working with other staff, select all new material to be purchased as well as gift material to be added to collections. Oversee management of collections, weeding, shifting, taking inventory, etc. Assist patrons in using catalogs, both print and on-line. Give reference assistance to patrons, answer phone and mail inquiries. Assist graduate students in locating scholarly material in other libraries. Give bibliographic instruction to graduate classes and to individuals. Act as liaison with faculty of School of Music and with the main University Library. Serve on Library committees.

CHURCH AND MUSICAL EXPERIENCE

Attended The General Theological Seminary, September 1980-June 1983. From August 1983 to March 1988, worked full-time as Assistant Rector in two Episcopal churches in Washington, D.C. Since that time I have assisted in several parishes on a part-time basis.

Have been a performer of early music, teacher of recorder, and director of early music ensembles since 1965.

Episcopal priest, Diocese of Washington. Ordained December 15, 1983. Received M.Div.,

The General Theological Seminary, N.Y., 1983.

Served as: Assistant Rector/Urban Resident, St. Stephen & The Incarnation Episcopal Church, 1983-85. Assistant Rector, St. John's Episcopal Church, Georgetown, 1985-88. Curate (part-time) St. James' Episcopal Church, Capitol Hill, 1991-94. Currently assist in several parishes of the Diocese.

Head, Music Library, The Catholic University of America, 1988-present. Previously music librarian in a number of libraries, including the Music Division of the Library of Congress, as Assistant Head and Head of the Reference Section, 1975-1980.

Mr. HATFIELD. Again, I thank her on behalf of all Members of the Senate for her presence here the remainder of this week, filling in until the elected Chaplain arrives to serve on March 8.

I yield the floor.

CRIME

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I want to commend the House of Representatives for completing action on one of the key elements in the Contract With America—the Taking Back Our Streets Act. As a result of yesterday's vote, we are now one step closer to enacting the kind of tough-on-crime legislation the American people deserve:

Mandatory restitution for the victims of Federal crimes.

The swift deportation of illegal aliens who have broken our criminal laws.

More funds for prison construction so that Governors like George Allen can abolish parole and make truth in sentencing a reality in the Commonwealth of Virginia.

Comprehensive reform of the habeas corpus rules to prevent convicted criminals from exploiting the system, with more frivolous appeals, more unnecessary delays, and yes, more grief for the victims of crime and their families.

Reform of the exclusionary rule to ensure that relevant evidence is not tossed out at trial simply because a police officer made an honest mistake.

And, finally, a rewrite of last year's police-hiring program to give States and localities more flexibility in determining what best suits their own unique law enforcement needs. Is it more cops? Or is it more squad cars? Better technology? Training? Perhaps even computers?

Unfortunately, this last provision has raised President Clinton's political hackles. He is now out on the stump, threatening a veto, and arguing that the law enforcement block grants will somehow jeopardize his pledge to put 100,000 more cops on the street.

Of course, last year's crime bill was one of the most politically oversold pieces of legislation in recent memory. As most experts will tell you, the 1994 crime bill barely contains enough funding to hire 25,000 more cops, never mind 100,000. So, President Clinton's complaints may make for good rhetoric, but when all is said and done, rhetoric has never put a single cop on the beat.

The President's veto-threat also raises a more fundamental question: Who knows best how to fight crime? Is it Congress? The bureaucrats in Washington?

Or is it the people on the frontlines: the sheriffs, the mayors, the county commissioners, the Governors? Does President Clinton not trust our State and local officials to make the right decisions, to do the right thing, or does he think they cannot be trusted and that, if given the flexibility, they will somehow squander the block-grant funds?

As the Washington Post editorialized yesterday, and I quote:

"One hundred thousand cops" sounds good, but congressional failure to include that mandate is not worth a Presidential veto * * *. The world won't end if local authorities are given more flexibility.

So, Mr. President, I commend the House of Representatives for toughening up last year's crime bill and giving the States and cities the flexibility they need. It is now up to the Senate to finish the job, and I hope we can do that in the next 60 days.

Mr. PELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed as if in morning business for 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AN ENLIGHTENED UNITED STATES POLICY TOWARD CUBA

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, last month I spoke in this Chamber about the need for a serious reexamination of United States policy toward Cuba. In the weeks since quite the opposite has occurred. Instead, we seem to be rushing toward an intensification of the current policy.

That policy, consisting of a rigidly enforced embargo and an aversion to any significant dialog with Cuba, has, as best I understand them, three goals: to promote a peaceful transition to democracy; to support economic liberalization; and to foster greater respect for human rights while controlling immigration from Cuba.

These three goals have guided our national policy toward Cuba for the more than 30 years I have been in this body, Mr. President, yet there has been scant progress toward achieving any of them. There is still a government in Cuba which is not freely elected, which is only just beginning tentative steps toward a market economy, and which continues to fall short of international standards in the area of respect for human rights.

Therefore, I can only conclude that this policy is not only outdated and ineffective, but, far worse, it is counterproductive. It seems to me that the time has come to admit the obvious. The policy is a failure and will never achieve its stated objectives.

I believe that, rather than tightening the embargo and further isolating Cuba, the United States should expand contact with the Cuban people and enter into negotiations on all issues of mutual concern to our two countries, including the lifting of the economic embargo.

I say this not because of any regard for the Government in Havana, a one-party state with a record of intolerance toward dissident voices within the society. Rather, I say this because, if our country and Cuba are to break the impasse that has existed in our relations for more than three decades, someone must take the first step in that direction. I believe it is in the U.S. national interest to take that first step—to agree to sit down at a negotiating table, where all issues can be discussed.

In the meantime, there should be greater contact between our own citizens and the Cuban people. Such contact will serve to plant the seeds of change and advance the cause of democracy on that island. Just as greater exchange with the West helped hasten the fall of communism in Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union, so, too, it can achieve the same results much closer to our shores.

Liberal Democrats are not alone in holding this view. Former President Richard Nixon wrote shortly before his death last year, "we should drop the economic embargo and open the way to trade, investment, and economic interaction." Learned people across the political spectrum have made similar comments and observations about the policy.

Why? Because they have all observed across the globe that policies which foster greater commerce and communication between countries work and those which engender isolation and enforced misery don't work. It has been impossible for those who would seek to defend the status quo to cite an instance in modern history where a policy of forced isolation has successfully transformed a totalitarian state into a democracy.

United States travel restrictions to and from Cuba are among the most prohibitive in the world—this to an island that is only 90 miles from our shores. At this point, only United States Government officials and journalists have unrestricted access to Cuba and only a small percentage of Cubans who apply are allowed to travel to the United States each year. Legislation recently introduced in the Senate would restrict binational contacts even further.

Mr. President, do we as a nation not have enough faith in the power of our democratic system to let contact between our citizens and other peoples flourish? In my view, the strongest advocate for democracy and a free-market economy would be a Cuban student or family member who had recently visited the United States and seen the sharp contrast between our way of life and that in Cuba.

Current policy not only denies the United States the opportunity to promote positive change in Cuba, but it increases the likelihood of widespread political violence and another mass exodus of refugees to Florida. The Cuban Government, which is vigorously pursuing expanding political and economic ties with the rest of the world, is unlikely to give into unilateral United States demands. Nor is there much indication that a viable opposition currently exists within Cuba to wrest power from existing authorities.

We have made it very easy for Cuban authorities to justify the lack of political freedom in Havana. They simply point to the external threat posed by a hostile U.S. policy. That justification would lose all credibility were we to adopt a more reasoned U.S. policy. Cuban authorities would then be hard pressed to justify the denial of political rights and economic opportunities that the Cuban people readily observe elsewhere.

Mr. President, it will be an incredible legacy of whatever administration succeeds in achieving what all the United States administrations of the past 30 years have failed to do—to bring about the peaceful transition to democracy in Cuba. At last all the peoples of the hemisphere would truly be one family, united by common principles and values.

It will require political courage to abandon this antiquated and ineffective policy. Old hatreds and vested interests have, heretofore, held us captive. However, I believe the rewards of a new policy of engagement will be so great that embarking on it will outweigh the political risks.

Mr. President, I urge the administration to take the first step toward a new and enlightened policy—a policy that can once again unite Americans and Cubans. I extend my support and effort in that endeavor. I urge my colleagues to join me as well.

BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of House Joint Resolution 1, a joint resolution proposing a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution of United States.

The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H.J. Res. 1) proposing a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The Senate resumed consideration of the joint resolution.

AMENDMENT NO. 248

(Purpose: To prohibit the House from requiring more than a majority of quorum to adopt revenues increases and spending cuts)

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 248 for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BINGAMAN] proposes an amendment numbered 248.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 3, strike lines 9 through 11, and insert the following:

"SECTION 8. This article shall take effect beginning with the later of the following:

"(1) fiscal year 2002;

"(2) the second fiscal year beginning after its ratification; or

"(3) the end of the first continuous seven-year period starting after the adoption of the joint resolution of Congress proposing this article during which period there is not in effect any statute, rule, or other provision that requires more than a majority of a quorum in either House of Congress to approve either revenue increases or spending cuts."

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, the balanced budget amendment contemplates a 7-year period during which we would go from where we now are—that is, about a $200 billion annual deficit—to a zero deficit. This chart makes the point very obviously that, from 1996 to the year 2002, we need to make substantial progress in getting from where we are to that zero deficit.

My amendment tries to assure that during those 7 years—not after the 7 years—but during those 7 years we can actually reach this goal of a balanced budget. My amendment says that during those 7 years you cannot have a requirement for a supermajority either to cut spending or to raise taxes in either House of the Congress.

Mr. President, I voted for the balanced budget amendment before, and I can honestly say that the intent of the amendment's proponents in those previous debates here on the Senate floor seems to me different from what is their apparent intent this time. In the previous Congresses the amendment was offered as a mechanism to help achieve responsible fiscal policy. It was to be a prod to keep us focused on deficit reduction; an assist to us in pursuing sound fiscal policy. Since I agreed that more discipline was needed, I was willing to support the amendment.

This time the amendment comes to us in a different context, supported by some different arguments. Now, the proponents do not just want deficit reduction and sound fiscal policy. They also want that deficit reduction achieved in their preferred way and in a way which most heavily benefits those they desire to benefit. That is a new and a disturbing aspect of this year's debate, Mr. President.

This year, the amendment comes from the House of Representatives after the House has already amended its own rules to require a three-fifths supermajority for any increase in income tax rates. Other taxes can still be raised with a simple majority. Of course, spending cuts can still be accomplished with a simple majority, but income tax rates cannot be raised without a three-fifths vote, according to the House rule.

Some argue that this is just a House rule and that we in the Senate do not need to concern ourselves with it. But under the Constitution, all revenue measures must originate in the House, so if the House has a rule that biases deficit reduction against changes in the income tax, that restricts the options available to the entire Congress, not just the House.

Mr. President, this change of rules undermines genuine efforts at deficit reduction, and it undermines our ability to achieve sound fiscal policy. The purpose of the House rule is to advance a conservative political agenda of less taxation for certain taxpayers without regard for and in spite of the consequences for the deficit.

The purposes of the rule are to protect individuals and corporations in the upper tax brackets and to accomplish any increase in revenue by raising regressive taxes that affect middle-income individuals and families, taxes such as the gas tax, Social Security taxes, sales and excise taxes.

Supermajority requirements like the House rule make deficit reduction over the next 7 years even more different than it already is. But more importantly, they drastically alter the fundamental fairness of the way we will allocate the pain of deficit reduction during those 7 years.

The supermajority requirement shifts the burden away from wealthy individuals and corporations and onto the backs of low- and middle-income working families. For under the House rule, it is the working families of America, not the wealthy and the corporations, who will feel the spending cuts. It is those working families who will pay the gas taxes and the social insurance taxes and the excise taxes which must get us to a zero deficit.

Never before have the proponents of this balanced budget amendment argued that it is right for middle-income families to pay to balance the budget but not right for the wealthy and the corporations to pay.

So my amendment restores the fundamental fairness of previous balanced budget amendment discussions. It restores the ground rules to what they were during previous balanced budget amendment debates here on the floor by establishing this 7-year period in which to get to a zero deficit without unfair supermajority requirements in either House with regard either to particular spending cuts or particular tax increases.

Now, looking at the second of these charts, it makes a very serious point which I am sure everyone knows here in the Senate and perhaps needs to be repeated. Deficit reduction is not rocket science. It is not difficult to know what to do. It is difficult to have the courage to do it.

Deficit reduction can be accomplished in two ways. You can cut spending or you can increase revenue. Either one of those works. Both of them help get you to a zero deficit and a balanced budget. As the bottom part of the chart shows, my amendment merely says that during the 7 years leading up to 2002 we cannot have supermajority votes required either for spending cuts or for revenue increases.

Our past experience and simple economic sense leads me to conclude that if we are going to seriously approach accomplishing a balanced budget, we will have to look at both spending cuts and revenue increases to get from here to where we need to go.

If we look at history and look at what we have actually done in the last 15 years by way of deficit reduction, we can see the point I am trying to make. There have been five serious efforts at deficit reduction during the 1980's and the first half of the 1990's—under Republican Presidents and under Democratic Presidents I point out.

In 1982, there was a significant deficit reduction effort. The total deficit reduction there was $116 billion. That was, of course, under President Reagan. He signed that bill and approved it. Most of the deficit reduction there was accomplished by revenue increases—not by spending cuts. People need to recognize that in each of the five cases here we have had both revenue increases and spending cuts.

The second serious reduction was when President Reagan was in the White House in 1987, and again we had substantial revenue increases: $75 billion in revenue increases and $118 billion in spending cuts. So there was clearly a combination of the two in that case.

In 1989, under President Bush, we had a deficit reduction effort which was about equally balanced between revenue increases and spending cuts.

In 1990, we had a very major deficit reduction package when President Bush was in the White House. There was more in spending cuts, nearly twice as much in spending cuts or a little over twice as much in spending cuts as there were in revenue increases. But still there was a combination of the two.

Then 2 years ago, in 1993, of course, we had President Clinton's deficit reduction package which involved both spending cuts and revenue increases, totaling, according to the CBO, $433 billion as originally proposed. I think the estimates are that that has increased since.

I think it is interesting to note when we look at this history of how we have actually tried to accomplish deficit reduction, in four of the five deficit reduction efforts that were made in the 1980's and so far in the 1990's we did not have the three-fifths vote necessary in the House which would be required by this House rule. So these packages, four of the five, could not have passed under the House rule as it now stands. Not only does history indicate that serious deficit reduction will require both spending cuts and tax increases, but common sense indicates that it will as well.

Now, looking at the next chart, that chart shows the Federal budget and shows what is available when we start to cut spending. Many previous speakers in the last couple of weeks have pointed to this chart or similar versions of this chart to make the very obvious point that the majority of the Federal budget is so-called mandatory spending, spending not readily available for cuts. Clearly we can change the eligibility requirements for Social Security or Medicare or Medicaid and get savings, but this is mandatory in the sense that it will take a change in the substantive law that we have had on the books for some time in order to bring that about.

Interest accounts for about 15 percent of the debt. There is no way to dodge that. We have to pay that each year. We cannot make up spending cuts there. Medicare and Medicaid is about 17 percent, and as far as I know somebody is talking about cuts in Medicare and Medicaid. All they are talking about is whether we will restrain the rate of increase in those areas.

Social Security, we have had votes in the last 2 or 3 days where everybody has gone on record, both Democrat and Republican, as not wanting to see Social Security counted as part of the way we get to deficit reduction to get to a balanced budget.

And other mandatory spending, other entitlement programs, makes up about 10 percent. The areas that are discretionary are defense, which is about 18 percent of the Federal budget. The proposal I have heard around the Capitol in recent months is not to cut defense. It is added to what the President himself has proposed as increases in defense during the next 5 years.

Of course, some people think we can balance the budget by cutting out international foreign aid. That is 1.4 percent of the Federal budget. I suggest that if we eliminate it entirely, we still would have a long way to go to get to a balanced budget.

Domestic discretionary, 16.5 percent. That is where the cuts will come. I think everybody knows that when we get around to cutting spending, the cuts are going to come in domestic discretionary spending. That is law enforcement funding, that is education funding, that is public health funding, that is funding of a whole variety of things which generally keep the Government running.

While virtually all experts agree that to get to a balanced budget, we will have to both cut spending and raise revenue, the House of Representatives by rule has made it very difficult for us to raise that additional revenue, at least to raise that additional revenue from the income tax.

We are spending a great deal of time in the Congress this year, Mr. President, talking about the Contract With America. I read that contract, and part of it did contain a promise to the American people not to raise taxes. The contract does not just contain a promise not to raise taxes, it has a promise to require a supermajority to raise taxes. The contract, in fact, proposed to include that supermajority requirement for tax increases in the balanced budget amendment itself.

When the Speaker and the majority in the House finally started looking at their votes, they decided they did not have the votes to pass the balanced budget amendment in that form, but that they did have the votes to put in place a rule which would have the same effect; that is, a rule which would say that you have to have not a majority but you have to have three-fifths of the House voting for any kind of change in income tax rates in order to increase those rates.

Not only has the Republican leadership in the House made good on their promise to require a supermajority to raise taxes and to put it in the rules, they have also committed to a major tax cut this year.

We had quite a debate yesterday about whether or not it was wise to proceed with a tax cut. I believe myself that the 1981 tax cut was not responsible in light of the Federal deficit we faced then. It seems equally clear to me that this proposed tax cut, which is called for in the Contract With America, is also not responsible.

Mr. President, I regret that President Clinton has chosen to advocate tax cuts at this particular time, although his proposal is much more reasonable in size and it is targeted toward families attempting to improve their own education or their children's education.

This is the context in which we are considering a commitment to reach a balanced budget amendment in the next 7 years. The results, in my view, are two:

First, the chances are overwhelming that if we keep this supermajority requirement in the House rules, we will not reach the goals set out in the amendment of a balanced budget by the year 2002.

And second, that if we keep this supermajority requirement in the House rules, whatever steps we take to reach the goal are going to fall hardest on working families.

My amendment tries to ensure a good faith effort by all to reach the goal of a balanced budget. It eliminates all the preconditions, it eliminates all the artificial barriers. No group, and certainly not the wealthy, could assume that it would be spared from sharing in the pain of deficit reduction.

There would be no prohibition against cuts and particular types of spending; there would be no prohibition against increases and particular types of taxes. The House rules requiring three-fifths to change income tax rates would have to either be dropped or judged invalid by the Supreme Court.

I point out to my colleagues that there is pending today in the court a suit brought by the League of Women Voters and 15 House Members challenging the constitutionality of the House rule.

Mr. President, this is essentially a back-to-reality amendment. It is also a basic fairness amendment. I believe it is an important amendment dealing with this issue of a supermajority requirement, particularly as it has been manifested in this House rule.

Let me look at one final chart to make that last point about the importance of the amendment. We have looked at where the spending occurs in Government. Let us look at where the revenue comes from to see what we are taking off the table by adopting that House rule.

The income tax, of course, is our most progressive tax. Here you can see the individual taxes account for 43 percent of the revenue that the Government receives each year, and corporate taxes account for an additional 11 percent. So you add those two together and you have 54 percent of the revenue that comes to the Federal Government by way of taxes.

We are saying if you want to change the amount of revenue you receive from those taxes, if you want to get anymore revenue from those taxes, you have to have three-fifths under the House rule.

That is a major amount. That is a major source of revenue to be building a supermajority requirement around. When you look at where else can we raise revenue, if we are not able to get the three-fifths necessary there, as we have not been able to get the three-fifths necessary in four of the last five major deficit reduction efforts in the Congress, where else can you get those?

Social Security taxes, 37 percent; 37 percent of the total revenue coming into the Federal Government comes from Social Security taxes. So you can raise Social Security taxes. Excise taxes, 4 percent, and other taxes, 5 percent. That is things like the gasoline tax and other matters. I point out that the Social Security tax, excise tax, and gasoline taxes are regressive. That means that they fall most heavily on low- and moderate-income individuals. The income tax is the progressive tax. It is the tax that has higher rates that you are required to pay as your income goes up. So when you say you will not change the income tax, you are clearly looking out for those people with the high incomes.

When we say a supermajority is required to raise rates in that tax but not in others, we are protecting those who are relatively disadvantaged by the progressive rate structure of the income tax, and those are clearly the wealthy in our society.

The people most affected by taxes, other than the income tax, are not protected. Those are the working families, poor families, the elderly. Those other taxes are still available as sources of income. The gasoline tax is there, available, excise taxes. Some of my colleagues have an interest in beer and wine and tobacco taxes and other excise taxes as well. The main other source of income for the Federal Government is the Social Security tax. That accounts for 37 percent of all the revenue we receive.

In addition to these sources of revenue to get from here to a balanced budget, we also, of course, have areas of spending that can be targeted for reduction. And the area of spending which we all know is most likely to be cut is domestic discretionary spending. That category includes programs that primarily go to benefit the average working people in the country—education grants, loans, health care, health clinics in our rural areas, nutrition, school lunch programs, law enforcement, funds needed to make good on the promises that were in last year's crime bill.

To summarize, Mr. President, this amendment that I am offering today lets us go into this 7-year period with ground rules that do not make it virtually impossible to get from here to a balanced budget.

They also let us go into this 7-year period with ground rules that do not require most of the pain—that is, a disproportionate amount of the pain—of deficit reduction to be borne by working families.

In my view, this is a good amendment. I urge all Senators who are seriously committed to deficit reduction and to fairness in the way that we achieve that deficit reduction to support the amendment.

Mr. President, I yield the floor and reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. HATCH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAIRCLOTH). The Chair recognizes the Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, we are now in our 17th day under our balanced budget amendment debt tracker of the increase in the debt as we debate. While we are debating this—this is our 17th day of debate, or 17th day since we started this debate—we can see in this far chart the red line at the bottom is the $4.8 trillion debt that we started with at the beginning of this year. The green lines show how it is going up every day $829 million of additional debt on the backs of our children and our grandchildren. Today, the 17th day, we are now up to, as you can easily see here, $14,100,480,000—in additional debt just while we debate this.

The reason we are doing this is so the American people can understand that this is serious business. For 17 days this has been delayed, a full 3 weeks of Senate floor time, 3 weeks on something that a vast majority of Senators are for, and we believe 67 of us will vote for it in the end because it is the only chance we have to get spending under control, the only chance we have. It is the first time in history that the House of Representatives has passed a balanced budget amendment.

Now they have sent it to us. It is the amendment we have been working on now for my whole 19 years in the Senate, and I have to say it is a bipartisan consensus.

Democrat-Republican amendment. It is not perfect, but it is the best we can do, and it is much better than anything I have seen in all the time we have debated it. It will put a mechanism in the Constitution that will help us in the Congress to do that which we should have been doing all these years anyway, and that is to live within our means.

The distinguished Senator from New Mexico is very sincere. He does not like the three-fifths vote over in the House that they have on a statutory basis. It can be changed anytime by a mere 51 percent vote. When they get a majority over there that can do it, they will change it. But that has nothing to do, in my opinion, with whether or not we should pass the balanced budget amendment in the Senate.

I oppose the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from New Mexico. The Bingaman amendment, while seemingly aimed at supermajority voting requirements to raise revenues or cut spending, would in fact kill the balanced budget amendment, not merely delay its implementation. As I will explain in a few moments, the Bingaman amendment, if adopted, would render the balanced budget amendment inherently contradictory and never, ever capable of going into effect.

The Bingaman amendment would ostensibly delay the effective date of the balanced budget amendment until the end of the 7-year period after Congress adopts it, "during which period there is not in effect any statute, rule or other provision that requires more than a majority of a quorum in either House of Congress to approve either revenue increases or spending cuts."

Now, it may seem that this amendment is aimed at the other body's recent rule that Federal income tax increases are effective only if they receive a three-fifths vote, but it hits the balanced budget amendment right in the heart. And this is not an errant, leftover arrow from Cupid's quiver. This is a poisoned dart.

Section 4 of House Joint Resolution 1 states that "no bill to increase revenue shall become law unless approved by a majority of the whole number of each House by a rollcall vote." That means at least 51 Senators and 218 Members of the House of Representatives must be recorded in favor of any revenue increase. In other words, it is a constitutional majority that our amendment requires.

If we adopt the Bingaman amendment into House Joint Resolution 1, however, then House Joint Resolution 1 can never, ever go into effect. The Bingaman proposal says that House Joint Resolution 1 cannot go into effect so long as a provision such as section 4 is law. After all, the Bingaman proposal says that a majority of a quorum can raise taxes. House Joint Resolution 1 says that only a majority of the whole number of both Houses can raise taxes. You cannot put the two provisions in the same constitutional amendment, at least not if you are really trying to enact that constitutional amendment into law.

So the Bingaman amendment is about much more than raising the supermajority requirement for revenue increases or spending cuts. It is about killing the balanced budget amendment by making it incapable of ever going into effect.

I might point out that had this section 4 provision been in effect in 1993, then President Clinton's huge tax increase in 1993 would not have become law. That tax increase only garnered 50 votes in the Senate and needed Vice President GORE's tie breaker in order to be sent to the President. But while the Vice President is President of the Senate, he is not a Member of the Senate. Accordingly, the 1993 tax increase would have been killed by the 50-50 vote of the Senators under the pending balanced budget amendment.

There are other serious problems with the Bingaman amendment. If Congress wants to adopt supermajority requirements for raising taxes and does so in a constitutional manner, I think that it will be perfectly appropriate protection for the taxpayers. I wish we could get the votes to pass the balanced budget amendment with such a requirement, but we cannot. I certainly do not believe that we should, in our fundamental charter, put in a provision that explicitly says as few as 26 Senators out of 100 can raise taxes. I think it is a terrible idea to write that explicitly into the Constitution. As I say, we should put into our Constitution stronger protections against tax raises.

While section 4 is not as strong as some would prefer it, certainly in the House, it is better than the status quo. The Bingaman amendment, in contrast, would make the status quo an explicit part of our Constitution.

Now, my colleagues should bear in mind that a vote for the Bingaman amendment is a vote in favor of stating right in the Constitution itself that as few as 26 Senators can pass tax raises. Statutory or internal congressional rules seeking to impose a higher hurdle for tax increases would be, on their face, invalid. Today at least we have a fighting chance to have such statutory or internal congressional rules imposing higher voting requirements for tax increases upheld.

Moreover, if Congress adopts House Joint Resolution 1 and sends it to the States with the Bingaman language, even aside from the fatal flaw that I mentioned earlier, take a look at the hurdles House Joint Resolution 1 would have to go through, even within the terms of the Bingaman amendment itself. If the other body does not repeal its three-fifths rule on tax increases, its statutory rule, for, say, 2 years, then House Joint Resolution 1 would have to wait 7 more years after such repeal before it can be effective under the Bingaman language. That puts us into the year 2004. We cannot wait that long for the discipline of the balanced budget amendment to go into effect.

President Clinton's proposed budgets would add another $400 billion to the national debt in those 2 years alone, even under optimistic assumptions, and $1.8 trillion over that period to the year 2004.

If my friend from New Mexico does not like the other body's rules on tax increases, I say with all respect that concern should not be addressed by tampering with the effective date of this badly needed constitutional mandate to balance the budget.

Frankly, America cannot wait any longer than the balanced budget amendment already provides for the Congress to be placed under such a mandate. I certainly believe the distinguished Senator from New Mexico is sincere, but I think these arguments against it are overwhelming, and I hope our fellow Senators will vote down the Bingaman amendment.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, let me just respond to some of the points my friend and colleague from Utah has made.

He suggests that the amendment I am offering would make the balanced budget amendment internally contradictory, because of section 4, as I understand his argument. I do not see it that way, and let me explain my view of it.

As I understand the procedure that the balanced budget amendment contemplates, there is a 7-year period during which we try to get to a balanced budget. Section 8 says, "This article shall take effect beginning with fiscal year 2002 or with the second fiscal year beginning after its ratification, whichever is later." So there is a 7-year period from where we are to the balanced budget. Then the balanced budget amendment, including section 4, takes effect.

He is correct, section 4 says, "No bill to increase revenue shall become law unless approved by a majority of the whole number of each House by a rollcall vote." My amendment does not affect that. What my amendment says is during the first 7 years, during the time we are trying to get to the balanced budget, we should not have supermajority requirements. Once we have a balanced budget, section 4 says you have to have a majority of the whole number of each House to raise revenue, and I am not challenging that. My amendment does not challenge that. I do not know that it is great policy but my amendment does not challenge that.

So I do not see anything inconsistent between my amendment, which deals with the first 7 years, from now until the time we get to a balanced budget, and section 4, which deals with the time from the effective date of the balanced budget amendment, 7 years down the road, from then on in our Nation's history.

So I do not see there is any inconsistency. If I am missing something in the argument I would be anxious to hear the response of the Senator from Utah on that. But I do not believe I am missing anything. I believe my amendment would improve the balanced budget amendment as it now stands before the Senate and would not build in any internal contradiction into it.

The second point he makes is that if we were to invalidate the House rule, we would in fact be allowing as few as 26 Senators—we could be putting in the Constitution a provision which says that as few as 26 Senators can raise taxes. I would just point out that is what the Constitution provides. That is what the Constitution has provided for 206 years, that as few as 26, a majority of a quorum, is all that is required by both Houses to either raise taxes or cut spending. That is not changed.

I do not see anything terrible about us putting a sentence in saying that is what the Constitution provides because that is what the Constitution provides. That is what it has always provided.

This is not just a casual result. There was a great debate at the time the Constitution was being written about whether a supermajority should be required. In fact, one of the most famous of the Federalist Papers, No. 58, written by James Madison, dealt with this specific subject. I understand the Speaker of the House of Representatives has assigned this as one of the books he is requiring all House Members to read. So I am sure they are all familiar with this, but maybe some of my colleagues here in the Senate are not. Let me just read a short passage from the Federalist No. 58. This is James Madison writing. He wrote:

It has been said that more than a majority ought to have been required for a quorum; and in particular cases, if not in all, more than a majority of a quorum for a decision. That some advantages might have resulted from such a precaution cannot be denied. It might have been an additional shield to some particular interests, and another obstacle generally to hasty, impartial measures. But these considerations are outweighed by the inconveniences in the opposite scale. In all cases where justice or the general good might require new laws to be passed, or active measures to be pursued, the fundamental principle of free government would be reversed. It would be no longer the majority that would rule: The power would be transferred to the minority.

That is James Madison's explanation for why the drafters of the Constitution did not put in there a requirement for a supermajority. They did not permit rules to exist such as the rule in the House. And we need to clarify that rules such as the rule in the House would not be permitted during this 7-year period while we get to a balanced budget. So I think it is clear that the argument for maintaining the right of the majority to rule is a strong argument. It is not a new argument in our democratic system. It is a strong argument we should stick with.

The Senator from Utah made one final point. He said if my amendment were adopted we could delay the time that we are required to have a balanced budget by 2 years, or whatever period until the House decided to change its rule.

I would point out the House could meet this afternoon and change its rule. There is nothing in my amendment which in any way prevents the House from changing its rule or any court—and we do have a court case pending on this—from determining that that rule is unconstitutional and invalid. As soon as that happens the 7 years begins to run.

So if the concern is we cannot get the 7 years running fast enough, I would say there is a ready remedy for that, once my amendment is adopted, and that is a repeal of the rule.

Mr. President, I yield the floor and reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I appreciate the arguments of the distinguished Senator from New Mexico and I appreciate his sincerity. I just do not think it refutes what we said earlier.

Could I ask the remaining time? On both sides?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah has 5 minutes and it looks like 52 seconds. The Senator from New Mexico has 17 minutes and 22 seconds.

Mr. HATCH. I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time if the Senator from New Mexico is.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I have been advised by the Cloakroom that there are certain Senators who expect to have this vote at 10:30. I do not need to keep all my time but perhaps we should check on that before I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. HATCH. If we both yield back our time I will move to table, get the yeas and nays, and then we will put it into a quorum call until then?

Mr. BINGAMAN. Let me also check to see if Senator BUMPERS is coming to the floor. Let me also ask unanimous consent to add Senator BUMPERS and Senator DORGAN as cosponsors of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask we charge it equally to both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, how much time remains for the proponents?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Twelve minutes.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I do not believe I shall use the entire time. I want to stand in support of the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BINGAMAN] this morning.

I find it interesting that those who most loudly profess to want a balanced budget find ways to try to provide handcuffs on those who ultimately want to achieve a balanced budget. I do not remember who it was who said it, but someone once said, "The louder they boast of their honor, the faster I count my spoons." I sort of sense that is the situation here.

We have a lot of people who say, "Gee, we want to get to a balanced budget." Then they put into law these notions about supermajorities in order to do one thing or another. The other body now has a supermajority on raising revenue. What if you have a circumstance where the revenue system is out of kilter and you have one group of people, let us say wealthiest group, that are substantially underpaying what they ought to pay and we feel the need to raise rates on that group, and maybe use the money to provide partial benefits to somebody else who is overpaying. You would not be able to do that because it would take a supermajority. That does not make any sense.

Why do we prejudge the answer on any taxing or spending issue to reach a balanced budget amendment? Some say we do not want anybody to increase taxes. I do not, either. In fact, sign me up for a zero tax rate for my constituents. That is what I want. No taxes. But the fact is, we have roads, we have schools, we have law enforcement, and we have defense to pay for, the defense of this country. So we have to pay for the things that we spend in the public sector.

The question is, Who pays? How do they pay? We can construct a tax system to do that. Nobody likes it, but it is necessary. It is part of our life in this country. We spend money. We raise taxes. Should we cut spending? Yes. We should, and we will. Should we raise taxes? Probably not. But is it necessary in some instances probably to do that? We found in 1993 that we had to raise some taxes. I voted for it. I did not like it. The medicine does not taste good, but I was willing to do it because I felt it contributed to reducing the Federal deficit.

But to allow either body of Congress to prejudge what is necessary to achieve a balanced budget is wrong. Senator BINGAMAN is saying during the 7-year period, you cannot do that. You cannot create supermajorities to try to prejudge those kinds of choices that we must take in both the House and the Senate to try to achieve a balanced budget.

I do not ever question motives with respect to Members of Congress. I think some feel very strongly that we ought to have this balanced budget amendment. Others feel equally strongly that we should not. All the Senator from New Mexico is saying is that if you feel strongly that we ought to have a balanced budget amendment or a balanced budget, either through an amendment or without an amendment, then you ought not put handcuffs on either the revenue or the spending side so that in the next 7 years, freethinking people of good will serving in the House and the Senate can decide on a range of items, on a menu of issues, on how to achieve that goal. It is much more important to achieve the goal of getting our fiscal house in order than it is to preach ideology about taxes.

The goal is important. Those who crow on the floor of the Senate and the House about the balanced budget amendment are the ones who now say to us, yes, we want a balanced budget but we also want to straitjacket people by creating goofy rules. And the Senator from New Mexico says let us all be honest about these things. Let us decide if we are going to do this. We will do it the right way.

I am happy to cosponsor this. I am pleased to speak for it. I hope that my colleagues who believe that we should balance the budget in this country, who agree with me that we ought to balance the budget to get our fiscal house in order, will understand that this is a necessary ingredient in doing so.

I compliment the Senator from New Mexico for offering it.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to my friend from Arkansas, Senator BUMPERS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS].

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I rise in support of what I believe is a very well-crafted and thoughtful amendment by the Senator from New Mexico. If this is going to be a permanent arrangement, then the House could legitimately say you have no business interfering with House rules. After all, we hate your 67-vote filibuster rule. But that is not what this amendment says. People should not confuse it with any Senate rules. This amendment is crafted to help the people who really believe in this amendment, and especially the people who have signed on to the Contract With America and promised the American people that they will balance the budget by the year 2002. In my opinion, a House rule that requires a 60-percent majority to raise only one kind of tax does not keep you from raising the gasoline tax, does not keep you from raising user fees, excise taxes, does not keep you from raising Social Security taxes. What the House has done is say that for now and ever you cannot raise taxes—income taxes only—without a 60-vote majority. The Senator from New Mexico is simply saying that this cannot go until the House backs off of that for this 7-year period.

Let me say to my colleagues on the other side of the aisle that if this passes or if this does not pass, I will continue to cooperate with every soul in this body who is genuinely concerned about deficit spending and trying to balance the budget. I will help you cut spending. I might even help raise taxes if they are properly targeted. I will do anything to keep from ending my career in the Senate without having addressed this most crucial problem facing this Nation. But you cannot—the Republicans voted yesterday, and a few Democrats, who said you cannot take Social Security off the table. It has to be a part of this whole plan to balance the budget. Yet, the House says income taxes are off the table.

What kind of logic is that, to say that the most regressive taxes, sales taxes—and we may go with a value added tax here, we may raise gasoline taxes, excise taxes, user fees and, yes, even the FICA tax that pays for Social Security. But if you say income taxes are off the table, you are saying the only progressive tax that the Congress might want to use to balance the budget is off the table. Only the regressive taxes that fall heaviest on the people who can least afford it, that is where you must find it.

Mr. President, I do not want to be preaching about this, but that is nonsense and it is not fair. It is not fair to the elderly. It is not fair to the working people of this country. The people who applaud this are the wealthiest people in America, because they pay an inordinately small part of their incomes for these regressive taxes like gasoline taxes and so on. There are people in my hometown of Charleston, AR, who commute 50 miles to Fort Smith to work. We are sort of a suburb to Fort Smith, and most people work in Fort Smith. They drive their cars as much as I do every year and pay the same tax on that gasoline that I pay. And I make $133,000 or $135,000 a year—I forget which—and they are working for $25,000 a year or less, and we are saying that is just Jakey, and we may raise taxes on you some more, but we will not raise the taxes on the wealthiest people in America.

Mr. President, I ask for 1 additional minute from the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BINGAMAN. I yield an additional minute to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BUMPERS. My administrative assistant and I were having a discussion on the way to work this morning, not just about this amendment but about the Senate. I said, "You know, I feel so strongly about the balanced budget amendment and I am so adamantly opposed to it because I think it guarantees utter chaos." It is going to, at some point, absolutely render the U.S. Congress a eunuch. We are not going to be able to deal with it under that amendment. I said, "I do not like to speak unless I feel strongly about something." I have a tendency to speak on maybe too many amendments. You can wear your welcome out around here by talking too much. So I try to choose carefully. It is very difficult for me because I detest this amendment so much. It is difficult to be as choosy about what I talk about. But I want you to know that the Senator from New Mexico is on to something very, very important.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. BINGAMAN. I yield an additional minute.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I just say to my colleagues that I have not seen the debate change a vote since the third battle of Manassas in 1888. People walk on the floor, and they may listen to it in their offices, but most do not even do that. So the debate does not change it. I daresay that when people walk in here on both sides, they are going to say, "What is our vote?" without realizing the deadly consequences of what the House has done.

Senator BINGAMAN and I and Senator DORGAN, want to help Republicans keep their commitment to balance the budget by the year 2002. I think it is utterly and wholly implausible and impossible. But I promise my cooperation in helping in any way I can. But to say the one thing you cannot do is to raise taxes that are progressive, but you can raise all the regressive taxes you want to to deal with this when we all know that working people in this country are having a terrible struggle just keeping their head above water.

So I applaud the Senator from New Mexico. I am pleased he asked me to speak on this because I do feel strongly about it.

I urge my colleagues to think very carefully before they vote on this amendment.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, Is there additional time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time has expired.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to table the amendment and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays are ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk called the roll.

Mr. LOTT. I announce that the Senator from Kansas [Mrs. KASSEBAUM] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 59, nays 40, as follows:

NOT VOTING—1

Kassebaum

So the motion to lay on the table the amendment (No. 248) was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

MOTION TO REFER

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator FEINGOLD, Senator BRADLEY and myself, I move to refer House Joint Resolution 1 to the Budget Committee with instructions to report back forthwith, House Joint Resolution 1 in status quo, and at the earliest date possible to issue a report. I send my motion to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the motion.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WELLSTONE], for himself, Mr. FEINGOLD, and Mr. BRADLEY, moves to refer.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading be dispensed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The motion is as follows:

I move to refer House Joint Resolution 1 to the Budget Committee with instructions to report back forthwith House Joint Resolution 1 in status quo and at the earliest date possible, to issue a report, the text of which shall be the following:

The Committee finds that—

(1) Congress is considering a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States which will require a balanced budget by the year 2002, or the second fiscal year after its ratification, whichever is later;

(2) the Congressional Budget Office has estimated, using current baselines, that between 1996 and 2002, Congress would have to enact some combination of spending cuts and revenue increases totalling more than $1 trillion to achieve a balanced budget;

(3) some taxpayers now receive preferential tax treatment and tax subsidies through such things as special industry-specific exemptions, exclusions, deductions, credits, allowances, deferrals or depreciations which are not available to other taxpayers;

(4) some special industry-specific tax preferences do not serve any compelling public purposes, but simply favor some industries over others and serve to distort investment and other economic decisionmaking;

(5) certain of these tax preferences, which serve no compelling public purpose, are special exceptions to the general rules of the tax law to which most Americans are required to adhere;

(6) the costs of such tax preferences are borne in part by middle-income taxpayers who pay at higher tax rates than they would otherwise;

(7) special tax treatment and tax subsidies constitute a form of tax expenditures which should be subjected to the same level of scrutiny in deficit reduction efforts as that applied to direct spending programs, and

(8) it is the sense of the Committee that in enacting the policy changes necessary to achieve the more than $1 trillion in deficit reduction necessary to achieve a balanced budget, that tax expenditures, particularly industry-specific preferential treatment, should be subjected to the same level of scrutiny in the budget as direct spending programs.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I want to yield myself such time as I may consume but before doing so, I would like to defer for a moment to the Senator from Washington who I know has another engagement. The Senator wanted to speak, I think, in opposition to this amendment, but I would like to give him the opportunity to do so since he will not have any time later on.

Mr. GORTON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington is recognized.

Mr. GORTON. First, Mr. President, I would like to thank my distinguished colleague from Minnesota for giving me the courtesy and referring me this time. It is, of course, appropriate for the maker of the motion to speak first. It is very nice of him to allow this.

It does, however, seem to me that this motion is very closely related to the debate that we have had earlier on the proposition that there should be a condition which takes place before or during the time that the constitutional amendment is submitted to the States relating to the methods by which we are to meet the requirement of a balanced budget.

In this case, I gather, most of the motion refers to tax expenditures. The bottom line, however, Mr. President, is that these motions and the amendments which have been proposed heretofore have almost, without exception, come from those who oppose amending the Constitution to require a balanced budget, and they are designed to inhibit or to slow down either its passage by this body or its ratification by the States.

Most of those Members, I am certain, including the distinguished Senator from Minnesota, do speak of their devotion to fiscal responsibility and to a balanced budget. It seems to me that under those circumstances, the thrust, the duty to explain what they will do to deal with the terrible $200 billion-a-year budget deficits from now to eternity rests on them, those who feel that the status quo is perfectly all right; that we should not change the rules relating to budget deficits; that the way we have dealt with them in the past is the way we should deal with them in the future. It is they, Mr. President, who ought to explain to us precisely how it is that they would change either our spending processes or our taxing programs to bring the deficit of the United States into balance.

Those of us who favor the passage of this constitutional amendment unadorned are those who feel that the system is broken, that the system is not working, that 25 consecutive years of mounting budget deficits and a $4 to $5 trillion debt require a drastic and a fundamental change in the way in which it would work and are doing so because we observe the history of those 25 years. We have observed all of the unsuccessful attempts to reach a degree of fiscal sanity and fiscal responsibility, and we have observed that those alternate methods have not worked and that it is unlikely that they will work in the future.

We propose a constitutional amendment because a constitutional amendment will bring everyone into the fold. Presidents, liberal Members, conservative Members, Democrats and Republicans will be forced by the constraints of the Constitution to deal with budget deficits in the future in a way in which they have refused to deal with them in the past.

The latest example of this failure, of course, is the President's budget itself, a budget which simply gives up on dealing with the deficit, which calls for no significant reductions in the deficit, not just for the 5 years that it covers but for 10-year projections out from today. It is a confession of failure. But more than a confession of failure, it is a confession of failure coupled with the proposition that there will be no attempt to cure that failure, to do better at any time in the future.

So, Mr. President, I believe that the best thing, the desirable thing, for us to do in the Senate is to recognize that the system is broken, that the system needs fixing, that the only fix that is likely to be successful is a constitutional amendment, that we should pass it and begin the process by which the States can consider its ratification as quickly as possible.

But in the alternative, it seems to me that it is up to those who oppose this constitutional amendment to tell us how they are going to cure the problem operating under exactly the system which has created the problem in the first place.

I thank my colleague from Minnesota very, very much for yielding to me. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KYL). The Senator from Minnesota.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Douglas Johnson and Mark Miller be given the privilege of the floor for the duration of this debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, just to be very, very clear because I believe that all of us, Democrats and Republicans, should be clear about what we are voting on, this amendment does not in any way, shape or form have any kind of conditions vis-a-vis the balanced budget amendment. There is not any language in this amendment that so states.

What this amendment says is:

It is the sense of the Senate that in enacting the policy changes necessary to achieve the more than $1 trillion in deficit reduction necessary to achieve a balanced budget, that tax expenditures, particularly industry-specific preferential treatment, should be subject to the same level of scrutiny in the budget as direct spending programs.

It just simply says that since we know we are going to be involved in a serious effort on deficit reduction and since we know we all share the common goal of balancing the budget, though we may not agree a constitutional amendment is the way to do so, that we ought to make sure that tax expenditures, which Senator FEINGOLD and I are going to explain at some length during the course of this debate, be on the table; that that be part of what we look at; that we look at certain breaks, loopholes, and certain deductions. That is all. There is no condition vis-a-vis the balanced budget amendment. The Senator from Washington is wrong on that point.

Second, I might add, that procedurally, this is really identical to the motion of the majority leader dealing with Social Security. It is identical, and I believe that motion was passed by over 80 Senators. So this has nothing to do with your position on the balanced budget amendment one way or the other.

Let me go on and explain.

Mr. President, this motion will put the Senate on record saying that in our effort to balance the budget, in our effort to go forward with deficit reduction—whether it be by a balanced budget constitutional amendment or otherwise; we are all aiming in the same direction—that we will scrutinize all Federal spending not just, Mr. President, cuts of least resistance.

What I am worried about, speaking for myself, and I look forward to hearing the remarks of the Senator from Wisconsin, is that when it comes to deficit reduction or when it comes to balancing the budget, what we will do is make cuts according to the path of least political resistance. That is to say, when it comes to ordinary citizens who do not have the clout, who do not have the lobbyists, who do not make the large contributions, they will be called upon to sacrifice.

I think most people in the country are willing to sacrifice. We just want to make sure that there is a standard of fairness and that large interests, large corporations, financial interests, wealthy people, and others who, as a matter of fact, benefit disproportionately by some of the tax breaks which cause other people to pay more in taxes, also are called upon to pay their fair share or to sacrifice.

Mr. President, in all of the debate on the balanced budget amendment, in all of the debate about how we are going to essentially have budget cuts of $1.4 trillion or thereabouts there is an enormous credibility gap. Because so far all I have heard on the Republican side is proposals for budget cuts of $277 billion. There is a big difference between $277 billion and $1.481 trillion.

In all of the debate so far, whether it be right to know vis-a-vis States saying that the people back in our States ought to have a right to know what the impact would be on them or, for that matter, whether it is our right to know, I still believe that the most important principle of all is that Senators ought to have the right to know what they are voting on, where the cuts will take place, and how they will affect the people.

There has not been a word uttered about one particular kind of spending that enjoys a special status within the Federal budget. I am talking about tax breaks for special classes or categories of taxpayers, many of whose benefits go largely to large corporations or the other wealthy interests in our society.

I remind you, Mr. President, that when we have these tax breaks and when we have these deductions and loopholes and when certain citizens or certain large interests are forgiven from having to pay their fair share, all of the rest of us end up paying more.

Let me make a simple point here that is often overlooked. We can spend money just as easily through the Tax Code through what are called tax expenditures as we can through the normal appropriations process. Spending is spending, whether it comes in the form of a government check or in the form of a tax break for some special purpose, like a subsidy, a credit, a deduction, or accelerated depreciation for a type of investment that is made. These tax expenditures—in some cases they are tax loopholes—allow some taxpayers to escape paying their fair share and thus they make everyone else pay at higher rates.

The Congressional Joint Tax Committee has estimated that these tax expenditures cost the U.S. Treasury $420 billion every single year. These loopholes, these deductions cause the U.S. Treasury to lose $420 billion every single year, and this amount will grow on present course by $60 billion to over $485 billion by 1999.

Mr. President, these tax expenditures, often they are tax dodges, should be on the table along with other spending as we look for places to cut the deficit. That is our point. That is, by any standard of fairness, what we should do. Just because certain people have a tremendous amount of political clout does not mean they should not be asked also to be a part of this sacrifice.

Mr. President, when we begin to weigh, for example, scaling back special treatment, depreciation allowance for the oil and gas industry—and the Congressional Budget Office estimates that eliminating this tax break would generate $3.4 billion over the next 5 years—when we start to compare and measure tax breaks for oil companies compared to cuts we are going to be making in food and nutrition programs for hungry children, we might have a very different answer.

We have to make tough choices. And what Senator FEINGOLD, myself, and Senator BRADLEY want to make sure of is that all of the options are on the table, and that when we make these choices, and we do the painful deficit reduction, we do it according to some basic standard of fairness.

What this motion does is simply state the sense of the Senate that we will carefully examine tax expenditures when the Budget Committee makes recommendations as to how we are going to continue on this path of deficit reduction and how we are going to balance the budget. At the moment, these tax expenditures are unexamined. They are hidden. They are untouchable. And, essentially, these are the real entitlements because we do not even examine any of these large subsidies.

What we are saying in this amendment is that we ought to at least examine these tax expenditures, we ought to at least examine these subsidies. This motion does not specify what specific subsidies might be eliminated. It just says tax expenditures ought to be a part of our process here in the Congress as we make these decisions about where we are going to make the cuts.

As I have listened to this debate—and again I am struck by this figure of $1.4 trillion worth of cuts that would have to be made by 2002 to balance the budget—I must say that I have heard little discussion, first of all, about where we are going to make the cuts, and second of all, I have heard little discussion about any sacrifice from large corporations and special interests who have disproportionately enjoyed all of these breaks, all of these benefits, all of these preferences, all of these deductions that many, many middle-class Americans do not enjoy.

And so that is why we offer this motion to refer this amendment to the Budget Committee with instructions to report back a sense of the Senate that these breaks and preferences should be put that on the table when we are talking about how we do our deficit reduction.

Now, Mr. President, not all of these tax expenditures are bad. Let me be clear. Not all of them should be eliminated. Some of them serve a real public purpose, providing incentives to investment, bolstering the nonprofit sector, enabling people to purchase a home. That is very important. However, some of them are simply tax dodges that can no longer be justified, but we do not even examine them. What we are saying in this amendment is, let us at least examine these tax expenditures and especially let us get strict and rigorous when we are looking at some of these tax dodges.

Mr. President, this motion simply states that if we are going to move toward balancing the budget, tax expenditures that provide this preferential treatment to certain taxpayers should be subject to the same scrutiny as all direct spending programs. That is all we are saying. This is really a matter of accountability.

I think it is also, Mr. President, a simple question of fairness. If we are going to make all of these cuts, then we should make sure that the wealthy interests in our society, those who have the political clout, those who hire the lobbyists, those who make the large contributions, those who we call the big players are also asked to sacrifice as much as regular middle-class folks in Minnesota and in Wisconsin; they should be asked to sacrifice as much as anybody else, especially when we know there are going to be deep and severe cuts in programs like Medicare and Medicaid, veterans programs, and education.

The General Accounting Office issued a report last year. It is titled "Tax Policy—Tax Expenditures Deserve More Scrutiny." I commend it to my colleagues' attention. I really think that my colleagues ought to read it.

I ask unanimous consent that an executive summary of the report be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WELLSTONE. The GAO report of 1993 makes a compelling case for subjecting these tax expenditures to greater congressional and administration scrutiny just as direct spending is scrutinized. The GAO notes that most of these tax expenditures currently in the Tax Code are not subject to any annual reauthorization or any kind of periodic review. And they observe that many of these special tax breaks were enacted in response to economic conditions that no longer exist. In fact, they found that of the 124 tax expenditures identified by the committee in 1993, half of these tax expenditures, half of these special breaks were enacted before 1950.

Now, that does not automatically call them into question, and our amendment does not talk about any specific tax expenditure that should be eliminated. But it does illustrate the problem of not annually reviewing these tax expenditures. These tax expenditures should not be treated as entitlements. They should not go on year after year and decade after decade without there being any careful examination. There has been no systematic review of these expenditures.

Indeed, the GAO reports that most of the revenue losses through tax expenditures come from provisions enacted during the years 1909 to 1919. Let me repeat that. Most of the revenue lost from these tax breaks—some of them necessary but many of them just blatant tax dodges—must be made up by either regular taxpayers through higher taxes or revenue not there for deficit reduction, comes about from provisions enacted during the years 1909 to 1919.

When I looked at the Republican Contract With America, I did not see one single sentence, not one single word in this Contract With America that called upon any large financial interest or any large corporation or, wealthy citizens, to be a part of this sacrifice. Let me just finish up by listing a few provisions, to give a sense of where we could have it. And, again, we call for no specific elimination of any specific tax expenditure.

Mr. President, I think actually what I will do for the moment is yield myself the rest of the time I might need but defer to the Senator from Wisconsin for a moment.

I yield the floor.

EXHIBIT 1

[From GAO Report 94-122]

TAX POLICY—TAX EXPENDITURES DESERVE MORE SCRUTINY—EXECUTIVE SUMMARY PURPOSE

At a time when the federal government faces hard choices to reduce the deficit and use available resources wisely, no federal expenditure or subsidy, whether it involves outlays (i.e., discretionary or direct spending) or tax revenues forgone, should escape careful examination. Congressional and executive branch processes do not subject existing tax expenditures to the same controls that apply to programs receiving appropriated funds.

Congressman William J. Coyne was concerned that a lack of attention to income tax expenditures has allowed them to increase and was interested in how they could be controlled. GAO examined a wide range of alternatives for the review and control of income tax expenditures. This report describes the size of increases in tax expenditures; examines whether tax expenditures need increased scrutiny; and identifies options that could be used to increase the scrutiny of and/or control the growth of tax expenditures, discussing the advantages and disadvantages of each.

BACKGROUND

Tax expenditures are reductions in tax liabilities that result from preferential provisions in the tax code, such as exemptions and exclusions from taxation, deductions, credits, deferrals, and preferential tax rates. Many tax expenditures are subsidies to encourage certain behaviors, such as charitable giving. A few tax expenditures exist, at least in part, to adjust for differences in individuals' ability to pay taxes, such as deductions for catastrophic medical expenses. Some tax expenditures may also compensate for other parts of the tax system. For example, some argue the special tax treatment of capital gains may in part offset the increased taxes on capital income that result from such gains not being indexed for inflation. Congress sometimes reviews tax expenditures and has limited some tax expenditures by various means, such as by limiting the benefits as taxpayers' incomes increase.

Although widely used to describe preferential provisions in the tax code, the term tax "expenditures" is not universally accepted. Some observers believe that labeling these provisions tax "expenditures" implies that all forms of income inherently belong to the government. However, the concept was developed to show that certain tax provisions are analogous to programs on the outlay side of the budget, and it was intended to promote better informed decisions about how to achieve federal objectives. In using this term, GAO is recognizing that, as a practical matter, tax expenditures are part of the federal budget, and Congress already uses the tax expenditure concept to a limited extent in budgetary processes.

Currently, the House Committee on Ways and Means and the Senate Committee on Finance have jurisdiction over both new and existing tax expenditures. These Committees propose the mix of tax rates and tax expenditures to be used to obtain a specified amount of revenue. In reviewing tax expenditures, these Committees have used several techniques to limit individual tax expenditures or groups of them. These reviews, however, are not conducted systematically and may not explicitly consider possible trade-offs between tax expenditures and federal outlay programs and mandates.

RESULTS IN BRIEF

Tax expenditures can be a valid means for achieving certain federal objectives. However, studies by GAO and others have raised concerns about the effectiveness, efficiency, or equity of some tax expenditures. Substantial revenues are forgone through tax expenditures but they do not overtly compete in the annual budget process, and most are not subject to reauthorization. As a result, policymakers have few opportunities to make explicit comparisons or trade-offs between tax expenditures and federal spending programs. The growing revenues forgone through tax expenditures reduce the resources available to fund other programs or reduce the deficit and force tax rates to be higher to obtain a given amount of revenue.

The three options discussed in this report may help increase attention paid to tax expenditures and reduce their revenue losses where appropriate. First, greater scrutiny could be achieved with little or no change in congressional processes and jurisdictions by strengthening or extending techniques currently used to control tax expenditures. Ceilings and floors on eligibility, better highlighting of information, or setting a schedule for periodic review of some tax expenditures are some possibilities under this option. If controlling tax expenditures through the current framework is considered insufficient, Congress could change its processes to exert more control over them.

The second option is for Congress to further integrate tax expenditures into the budget process. One feasible approach would be for Congress to decide whether savings in tax expenditures are desirable and, if so, to set in annual budget resolutions specific savings targets. Savings could be enforced through existing reconciliation processes.

A third option is to integrate reviews of tax expenditures with functionally related outlay programs, which could make the government's overall funding effort more efficient. Such integrated reviews could be done by the executive or legislative branches, or both.

Under the Government Performance and Results Act of 1993 (GPRA), the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) plans to report information on program goals and key indicators for both outlays and tax expenditures. In January 1994, OMB designated 53 performance measurement pilot projects to begin in 1994. Implementation of GPRA provides a promising opportunity to increase the usefulness and visibility of outcome-oriented performance data.

GAO'S ANALYSIS

Tax expenditures can be a useful part of federal policy. But in some cases tax expenditures may not be the most effective, efficient, or equitable approach for providing government subsidies. For example, it might be less expensive for the federal government to provide assistance to state and local governments through direct payments than through tax-exempt bonds. Because tax expenditures represent a significant part of the total federal effort to reallocate resources, choosing the best methods for achieving objectives, including the most effective tax expenditure designs, could have significant results. (See pp. 23-32.)

Tax expenditures have been growing but are difficult to measure

GAO primarily used Joint Committee on Taxation (JCT) estimates to analyze the size and growth of tax expenditures. According to these data, tax expenditures totaled about $400 billion in 1993. Their average annual percent increase in real terms for the period from 1974 to 1993 was about 4 percent, which compares to an average annual real increase for gross domestic product of about 2.5 percent. Tax expenditures are expected to continue growing; however, the rate of growth is uncertain.

As experts note, tax expenditure revenue loss estimates are not as informative as the revenue estimates made for proposed changes to the tax code. Whereas revenue estimates incorporate the changes in taxpayer behavior that are anticipated to occur as a result of the change, tax expenditure revenue loss estimates do not incorporate any behavioral effects. Furthermore, summing tax expenditure revenue losses ignores interaction effects among tax code provisions. Because of interactions with other parts of the tax code, the revenue loss from the elimination of several tax expenditures together may be greater or smaller than the sum of the revenue losses for each tax expenditure measured alone. Nevertheless, GAO believes tax expenditure revenue loss totals represent a useful gauge of the general magnitude of government subsidies carried out through the tax code.

When trends in these totals are looked at, however, care must be taken to consider the possible underlying causes. Aggregate tax expenditure magnitudes are affected by changes in tax rates, in economic activity, and in the number of tax preferences. An overall growth in aggregate tax expenditures may be due to rapid growth of a few tax expenditures—and some point to the rapid growth of health-related expenditures as a current example. However, no process currently prompts Congress to address these trends and decide whether they warrant policymaking actions.

JCT and the Department of the Treasury devote limited resources to estimating tax expenditure revenue losses because decisions are not based routinely on this information. GAO did not attempt to verify either JCT's or Treasury's tax expenditure estimates. (See pp. 33-38.)

Processes do not highlight tax expenditures for policymakers

Despite their significance, existing tax expenditures do not compete overtly in the annual budget process. Under budget processes, new tax expenditures must be funded as they are created. However, except for a few that are subject to reauthorization, existing tax expenditures, like most entitlement programs, can grow without congressional review. These tax expenditures are indirectly controlled primarily to the extent that revenue targets allocated to the tax committees under the budget process create pressure to decrease their growth. Although tax expenditures are listed separately in the president's budget each year, the lists are not used for making tax expenditure allocations or for comparisons with outlay programs. As a result, policymakers have few opportunities to make explicit comparisons or trade-offs between tax expenditures and federal spending programs. (See pp. 30-32.)

Options for greater scrutiny

Increased congressional review of or control over tax expenditures could be achieved under three general options, each consisting of several alternative approaches:

Option 1: This option involves methods currently within the purview of congressional tax-writing committees. It includes "program" reviews of individual tax expenditures that may lead to the redesign or elimination of some that are deemed inefficient or outmoded. Currently available control techniques include placing ceilings or floors on eligibility for tax expenditure benefits, structuring tax expenditures as credits rather than exclusion or deductions, limiting the value of itemized deductions to the lowest marginal tax rate, and limiting the value of deductions and exclusions for high-income taxpayers. To promote debate on tax expenditures, additional information on them could also be highlighted using current processes. For instance, they could be merged into budget presentations with related outlay programs. The methods currently used to review and control tax expenditures also could be used in conjunction with the following two options that would alter somewhat the existing congressional procedures for overseeing tax expenditures. (See pp. 39-56.)

Option 2: This option involves further integrating tax expenditures into budget rules. This could limit existing tax expenditures and encourage closer reviews of performance. One approach to further integration that GAO examined—placing an aggregate cap on forgone revenue—probably would not work because technical problems would be difficult to overcome. A second approach—in the form of a tax expenditure savings target—is feasible. Under this approach, in years that it wishes, Congress could specify a fixed amount of reduction in forgone revenue from tax expenditures in the budget resolution, which would be enforced through existing reconciliation processes. To promote greater public accountability, Congress could be prompted to explain in the annual budget resolution the reasons for its decision to either adopt or not adopt a savings target.

Definitional and measurement problems, which are exacerbated by an aggregate cap, could be lessened substantially under a savings target. Technical problems would be reduced because—as is now the case in reconciliation—revenue estimates are required only for the subset of tax expenditure provisions under consideration. However, requiring a specific amount of base broadening through the budget process would involve more actors in tax policymaking, especially with respect to expanding the authority of the budget committees. (See pp. 57-70.)

Option 3: Joint reviews of federal spending programs and related tax expenditures could be adopted to improve coordination and reduce overlap or duplication among outlay and tax expenditure programs. Joint reviews could be done in both the legislative and executive branches. Jointreview of spending programs and related tax expenditures could be accomplished by having program committees hold joint hearings with tax committees. More formally, Congress could adopt sequential jurisdiction for tax expenditure subsidy "programs" or establish joint committees in functional areas. Because fewer jurisdictional hurdles would arise, the executive branch annual budget preparation process may offer a more expeditious opportunity to implement such reviews. (See pp. 71-92.)

Recent legislation promises better tax expenditure information

According to the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs report on GPRA, OMB is expected to describe a framework for undertaking periodic analyses of the effects of tax expenditures in achieving performance goals in a May 1, 1997, report to the President and Congress. GPRA thus presents an opportunity to develop better information about tax expenditure performance and to use that information to stimulate discussion and oversight as well as to make determinations as to how the government can best achieve its objectives. OMB indicates that initial discussions have been held on developing output measures for key tax expenditures and that reviews or related tax expenditures and outlays will be done in the future. (See pp. 90-92.)

RECOMMENDATION TO CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEES

GAO recommends that the tax-writing committees explore, within the existing framework, opportunities to exercise more scrutiny over indirect "spending" through tax expenditures.

MATTERS FOR CONGRESSIONAL CONSIDERATION

Should Congress wish to view tax expenditure efforts in a broader context of the allocation of federal resources, it could consider the options of further integrating them into the budget process or instituting some form of integrated functional reviews.

AGENCY RECOMMENDATIONS

GAO makes several recommendations to the Director of the Office of Management and Budget intended to encourage a more informed debate about tax expenditures among executive and legislative policymakers and to stimulate joint review within the executive branch of tax expenditures and related spending programs. These recommendations should result in more informed decisions, by Congress and by the public, about the most appropriate means of achieving federal objectives. GAO envisions that in carrying out these recommendations, OMB would consult as appropriate with the Department of the Treasury and other federal agencies.

AGENCY COMMENTS

In written comments on a draft of this report, OMB and Treasury's Office of Tax Analysis (OTA) expressed support for expanded federal review of tax expenditures by the executive branch or Congress. More specifically, OMB agreed, with certain caveats, that GAO's recommendations to it were reasonable and indicated that the recommendations were consistent with efforts OMB has already begun. Regarding the three options for improved oversight of tax expenditures, OMB agreed that improved information on tax expenditures was desirable and that integrated comparisons of outlay programs and related tax expenditures may provide useful insights. In its recently announced reorganization, OMB promised to undertake joint reviews of related spending and tax expenditure programs during upcoming budget cycles.

OMB and Treasury were concerned that the integration of tax expenditures into the budget process might not produce better outcomes than current processes. Treasury also expressed reservations about whether joint reviews of related spending and tax expenditure programs would provide the benefits anticipated.

OMB and Treasury's comments are discussed at the end of chapter 6. (See pp. 99-108.) OMB also suggested a number of useful technical changes, which were included.

OMB also obtained reactions on its draft report from JCT, the Congressional Budget Office, and two individuals knowledgeable about the issues discussed in the report. These organizations and individuals made observations on the report message, which are discussed at the end of chapter 6, and offered technical suggestions, which were included as appropriate.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, my particular thanks to the senior Senator from Minnesota, who is doing a wonderful job of raising this issue of tax expenditures. I have enjoyed, both here in the U.S. Senate and especially back in the Wisconsin State Senate, just trying to point out when you spend money on a tax loophole and give people a special tax break, that is spending, too. It is taking the hard-earned tax dollar of the American people, putting it into a package and sending it out just to a few people. It is an awful lot like a spending program.

Our point here today is that often it does not get treated that way. It gets treated like somehow it is just a tax break for everybody, which, of course, it is not. If we are going to solve the Federal deficit and really have a balanced budget amendment, the Senator from Minnesota and I are saying this obviously has to be on the table. This has to be considered, too.

So I am very pleased to join with the Senator from Minnesota in offering this motion which is designed to put the Senate on record, insisting that when we get around to actually trying to balance the Federal budget we have to subject these tax expenditures—many of them inappropriate tax loopholes—to the same kind of scrutiny we will use to examine direct spending programs.

I feel I need to respond to the comments of the Senator from Washington, who spoke earlier today. He suggested all the Senator from Minnesota and I were doing was proposing an amendment designed to inhibit the balanced budget amendment itself. That is just not the case. I think those watching, everybody involved in this, should know that is really an unfortunate argument since the mechanism we are using, a motion to refer, is the very same mechanism that the majority leader used to get himself on record on Social Security. It does not delay the process at all. It just is a statement about the fact that certain things ought to be considered when we balance the budget.

It strikes me as a little bit unfair to attack the motives of those behind this amendment. There is no possibility that this will upend the balanced budget amendment. Whether it has the votes or not, even though I like this amendment a lot I do not think the Senator from Minnesota or I have any belief at all this will stop the balanced budget amendment. It is just another attempt to have some honesty and some candor with the American people about what is going on here. And, in particular, to identify where the money is, why we have such a huge Federal deficit. One of the big reasons is tax loopholes that have not been covered, that have not been fixed, and that cost us a fortune.

Mr. President, no one should mistake the difficult job that lies ahead in seeking to achieve a balanced budget, with or without a constitutional amendment.

The Congressional Budget Office has already told us, using current base-lines, that between 1996 and 2002, Congress will have to enact some combination of spending cuts and revenue increases totaling more than $1 trillion to achieve a balanced budget.

There is strong sentiment, which I share, that we need to cut Federal spending, and that much of the deficit reduction achieved over the next several years will be as a result of cut backs in direct spending programs.

That will happen. I am very enthusiastic about being part of that process, as I have been for the last 2 years—identifying specific programs that do not make sense anymore and that can and should be eliminated. That is very important to this process. But I also believe it is vitally important that in looking for ways to reduce the Federal deficit and bring the Federal budget into balance that we subject tax expenditures to the same kind of scrutiny applied to direct spending programs. That sounds simple, but in the land of the lobbyist inside the beltway of D.C., it is not so simple. Tax expenditures, tax loopholes get treated very differently. They are special. They are off the table. They are protected.

Tax expenditures generally refer to preferential Tax Code provisions which give special treatment to specific industries or provide tax subsidies to consumers of particular products.

Last year, the General Accounting Office issued a report, "Tax Policy: Tax Expenditures Deserve More Scrutiny," which focused upon the need to subject tax expenditures to the same type of scrutiny applied to direct spending programs.

The GAO report noted that most tax expenditures are not subject to reauthorization or any type of systematic review. Once they are in, they are in. They have a life of their own. They have immortality, in effect, in a way that spending programs do not. Once enacted these provisions are enshrined in the Tax Code and they are very, very difficult to dislodge.

GAO noted many were originally enacted to address economic conditions that at the time were important. But many of the economic conditions that these tax expenditures were meant to address just do not exist anymore. But they keep on going, like the Energizer tax expenditures—it does not matter. They can be completely irrelevant. Once they are in the Tax Code they are there and you are paying for it. We are all paying for these in higher taxes—or, at this point, in higher deficits and higher payment on interest to pay for those deficits.

For example, the GAO found of the 124 tax expenditures identified by the Joint Tax Committee in 1993, about half were enacted before 1950 something that the Senator from Minnesota has pointed out very persuasively. A lot of these are real old. They were not just enacted in the last 2 or 3 years. For example some of the tax allowances available to specific industries to recover certain costs of acquiring mineral deposits were enacted during World War I. Without an expiration date there is just very little impetus and no real trigger to review whether these provisions still make sense.

It reminds me a lot of some of the programs we have talked about and both parties seem willing to eliminate, such as the helium program. I have authored a bill to eliminate the old helium program that had to do with providing helium for blimps. It is an old program from the earlier part of the century. The President said we should get rid of it. Republicans in the other body say we should get rid of it. Those are held up to scrutiny, those are held up to ridicule sometimes, as the wool and mohair program, the Tea Testing Board, the search for extraterrestrial intelligence—these get held up in the light of the day. Everybody laughs at them. They are prime time because they are spending programs. But if it is the same kind of thing for special interests in the Tax Code nobody talks about them. It is a nice, quiet thing to sweep under the rug and make the American people pay a ton of money to keep these tax expenditures going. Let me give a couple of examples.

Since 1943, the Tax Code has allowed U.S. civilian employees who work abroad certain special allowances for things like housing and education, travel, and special cost-of-living allowances. As a result, employees who receive a large part of their incomes through these allowances rather than through direct salaries receive preferential treatment—a better deal than the rest of the American people.

I became aware of these special allowances when I was involved in trying to accomplish another cut last session which we did achieve, a substantial spending cut in direct spending in overseas broadcasts. We found out in the last Congress that to curb some of the excessive salaries and allowances paid to employees of Radio Free Europe and Radio Liberty, to the Board of International Broadcasting, would involve dealing with one of these tax expenditures. As the Senator from Minnesota has said, some of these exemptions may be justifiable. However, I do know they can be abused and manipulated to get around salary caps that Congress has put in place for all the other Federal agencies. For these folks there is a special deal. It gets no review.

Another example, Citizens for Tax Justice noted in a recent report that interest income earned by foreign nationals on loans to American companies or the U.S. Government was exempted from the U.S. tax since 1984. In other words each of us pays taxes on our interest income but a foreign national does not pay any U.S. tax on that income, according to the Citizen's for Tax Justice. And this is again an unfair deal, in my view. When this exemption was passed a decade ago maybe there was some justification for it. But we ought to have some kind of review of this type of tax preference to see if it is still appropriate. Has it had some beneficial impact in terms of inducing foreign nationals to make loans to U.S. entities? Maybe so. Or is it just a windfall that is stuck in the Tax Code and that we cannot get rid of? We need to ask whether in today's international climate our foreign investment decisions are made more on projections regarding political and economic stability or on these kind of breaks.

A third example, and the Senator from Minnesota alluded to this.

Since 1916, the gas and oil industry has had special expensing rules for exploration and development costs.

A compendium of background material on individual tax expenditure provisions that was compiled by the Senate Budget Committee last December described these provisions as having "very little, if any, economic justification."

This report goes on to say that many economists believe that these provisions are a "costly and inefficient way to increase oil and gas output and enhance energy security."

Again, Mr. President, we are not raising this example alone because we have reached a final conclusion as to the merits of this special tax preference that is provided to one industry; rather, a tax preference established in 1916 simply ought to be carefully reconsidered in 1995 and thereafter, and the burden, Mr. President, should be on the proponents of the special preference to justify it because, by having this special preference, we all have to pay more.

If tax expenditures were subjected to reauthorization and sunset rules like direct spending programs, they might not fare as well as they do today.

Mr. President, I see the Senator from Minnesota is interested in speaking again. Let me just add a few other quick comments.

There are other cases. I just mentioned some larger items. Although the revenue loss to the Treasury over time is actually significant, it does not look like so much in any particular year. The Joint Tax Committee only lists preferential Tax Code provisions that have a projected total revenue loss of over $50 million or more in a 5-year period.

So these are regarded as small tax court provisions and again, even though they amount to quite a bit over time, they escape scrutiny year after year in the budget process. In contrast, you can be sure, Mr. President, that a direct spending program that would cost $10 million per year for 5 years would certainly be subject to review by both an authorizing committee and the Appropriations Committee on a regular basis.

But to try to put it simply, what the Senator from Minnesota and I are talking about is this: He said, if you have the political clout and the influence to stick a special tax exemption in the House Ways and Means Committee or in the Finance Committee in the Senate, you are all set. That thing is in there forever. It is protected. It is not talked about. It is not considered spending. It is not considered part of the deficit. It is not considered part of the debt. It is not considered part of the burden on our children and grandchildren. But it is money. It is real money. But if you are an older person who wants a meal at an elderly nutrition site, or a child who is in Head Start, or somebody who wants to see an Amtrak train in your State so people can get to work without polluting the environment, you are scrutinized. You have to defend and stand and undergo the tremendous pressure that this deficit has created, and, in part, that deficit is because of these tax loopholes.

Mr. President, to conclude, there are a number of reasons why tax expenditures should be subjected to the same scrutiny as direct spending programs. First, it is an equity issue. When some taxpayers receive special preference, the burden shifts to those who do not have lobbyists to win special breaks to pick up the difference. Giving special tax breaks to some industry means other industries will have the higher tax rates to get the same revenue. It also means the taxpayers with similar income and expenses end up having to pay different rates of taxes depending on whether they engage in the tax subsidization activity. Many tax expenditures make sense, and they accomplish important policy goals. But it is important that all such expenditures receive regular review, and they ought to be measured against each other, perhaps a more important policy goal.

So to conclude, Mr. President, the Senator from Washington says it is a confession of failure to attack the balanced budget amendment. This is a continued attempt to try to level with the American people just as the right-to-know amendment was. They talk about middle-class tax cuts. This is a huge pot of money that we need to balance the budget. It should be on the table. And the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota would put the Senate on record that we are not going to hold this immune while everyone else has to suffer.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Wisconsin. I want to respond to some of his comments. But I would like to ask how much time remains.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 14½ minutes remaining.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I say to my friend from Utah that I would assume that he and others might want to respond to our amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from you Utah has 10 minutes.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I yield such time as he may need to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. GRAMS. Thank you very much. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to engage in a colloquy with the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Senator HATCH.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAMS. First, I would like to extend my thanks to the distinguished colleague from Utah for bringing the balanced budget amendment to the floor for a full debate and vote because I believe, more than any other legislation, passage of the balanced budget amendment means keeping the promises that we made to the American people last November.

I also want to congratulate the chairman of the Judiciary Committee for his efforts to bring this legislation to the floor.

I also want to thank the American voters for sending a clear message that they expect and that they also deserve fiscal responsibility from Congress, and that they expect it now.

It is my understanding, however, that, like me, the distinguished Senator from Utah also supports the three-fifths vote, or the supermajority, amending the Constitution to make it a little more responsible in rating taxes. Is that correct?

Mr. HATCH. There are a lot of us who would like to do that. On the other hand, a constitutional majority would provide for it here, a supermajority tax limiting device as well. But there are a lot of those who would like to have the three-fifths vote.

Mr. GRAMS. When we are talking about the balanced budget amendment, I think the goal that we have is to make sure that the Government lives within its own means, or not being able to spend more dollars than it can take in. So I would like to believe that the balanced budget amendment is an attempt to reduce really the growth or irresponsible spending of the Federal Government rather than as a device or an excuse sometime in the future to raise taxes to cover these debts.

Mr. HATCH. I think the Senator makes a very good point.

Mr. GRAMS. I also believe it should be more difficult for Congress to be able to raise taxes or take tax dollars from hard-working Americans and to make it harder for them to spend their hard-earned tax dollars. I also believe that the Federal Government has a budget deficit because spending is too high, not that taxes are too low. Does the Senator from Utah agree with me on that?

Mr. HATCH. Boy, do I ever. I certainly do. I think that is one of the reasons for this balanced budget amendment.

Mr. GRAMS. Is the Senator from Utah aware that in the country there are nine States that have a supermajority vote in order for their legislators to raise taxes? In those States, a portion of personal income has decreased on average by about 2-percent. So it does have the effect of not being able to raise—or reduce—the amount of taxes. Across the country, if you applied that 2 percent formula, you would save about $30 billion a year in taxes for hard-working Americans. That sounds like a good scenario.

Mr. HATCH. I think it does. I am a firm believer that the right tax rate reduction, especially marginal tax rate reductions, actually leads to more revenues as it increases more savings, investment, creation of jobs, and people working and people paying into the system.

Mr. GRAMS. Because of the sentiments expressed by the Senator from Utah and by thousands of Minnesotans that I have met over the last 2 years, I introduced Senate Joint Resolution 22, a balanced budget amendment which requires a three-fifths supermajority vote to increase taxes. Because I believe that Congress must pass the balanced budget amendment this month and because I do not want the taxpayer protection clause to be used as a cynical device to derail passage of the balanced budget amendment, I have decided not to offer this legislation as a substitute to the legislation currently pending on the floor. But as the Speaker of the House of Representatives has scheduled a vote for a taxpayer protection amendment to the Constitution on April 15 of next year, I believe that the Senate should take a similar step in scheduling a similar vote for next year.

Would the Senator from Utah agree with that?

Mr. HATCH. I would have no problem with that, if that is what the majority leader decides to do.

Mr. GRAMS. For that reason, I will be introducing a constitutional amendment requiring a three-fifths supermajority vote to increase taxes as separate legislation shortly in the Senate. I hope that the distinguished Senator from Utah will support this measure and also help us get it to the floor for a vote.

Mr. HATCH. I commend the Senator for being willing to stand up on the three-fifths vote and be against further tax increases on an already burdened populace.

Mr. GRAMS. I ask the chairman of the Judiciary Committee if he would be willing to hold hearings of this legislation yet later this year.

Mr. HATCH. I would be willing to do so. I think they are worthy of hearings because so many people in the House, and the Senator from Minnesota, feels so strongly about it. I would be willing to hold a hearing at least.

Mr. GRAMS. I thank the Senator for his assurance that we will have a hearing and also a markup on my legislation to protect taxpayers from higher taxes. I thank him for his efforts on behalf of all taxpayers, our children and grandchildren, to bring the balanced budget amendment to the floor of the Senate for a vote. I urge my colleagues to pass this measure without further delay.

I yield the floor.

Mr. HATCH. I thank the distinguished Senator from Minnesota and I appreciate his leadership in this area.

Mr. President, How much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 5 minutes remaining.

Mr. HATCH. If I may say a few words about the suggestion of the distinguished Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from Wisconsin. The Senators from Minnesota and Wisconsin, I believe, continue to confuse the distinction between a debate of constitutional language and principle and a debate of implementing legislation. We are here to affirm the principle of Government that we should not spend excessively and should not leave excessive debt for our children. But this motion does not deal with the timeless principles of Government of broad application. It deals with a subsection of our tax policy.

I, once again, invite my dear colleagues to bring this and similar ideas back during the budget debate, or the debate over the implementing legislation, which we are going to have to go through following passage of the balanced budget amendment. That would be the appropriate time to do that. Self-declared opponents of the balanced budget amendment continue their attempt to shift this debate from the appropriate focus on constitutional principles to an inappropriate focus on the details of tax policy or some other minutia of implementation.

My attitude is, let us do first things first. I think we have to table this motion and pass the balanced budget amendment, and then let us face these problems that they are sincerely raising on the implementing legislation and do what has to be done. If we can, that will be the way to do it.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. WELLSTONE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, first of all, let me just say I appreciate the colloquy. What we are trying to focus on at the moment is how we are going to cut $1.481 trillion, between now and the year 2002. That is the credibility gap.

I came on the floor earlier, several weeks ago, with an amendment that came right from the State of Minnesota, where the State senate unanimously—the house of delegates was three votes short of unanimous—and the Republican Governor all signed a resolution saying: Before you send the balanced budget amendment to Minnesota, Wisconsin, or any State, please specify where the cuts are going to take place, and how it will affect our States. Let us do the planning. What kinds of people are going to be affected by this? Step up to the plate and tell us what you are going to do.

I still do not hear any of my colleagues on the other side or, for that matter, on this side, that are for this balanced budget amendment specifying how in fact we are going to reach this goal.

But, Mr. President, this amendment today is identical to the majority leader's motion to refer. It does not have any real connection to the balanced budget amendment in terms of any conditionality at all. We are simply saying, given the focus on balancing the budget and on deficit reduction, do not take all of these tax expenditures—$420 billion worth—off the table. The motion is very general. It does not target specific tax breaks because we do not think that would be appropriate on a constitutional amendment. The Senator from Wisconsin made that clear and I have made it clear. We simply want to express the sense of the Senate that tax expenditures will undergo the same scrutiny that all other spending goes through. We do not eliminate any expenditures. We do not specify what should be eliminated. We leave that to another day, when we get to the specifics of the budget and the budget reconciliation process.

This is a statement of principle today, that as we continue this budget debate in the Congress and in future Congresses, we intend to subject these $420 billion worth of tax expenditures—all too many of them tax dodges—to much closer scrutiny than in the past.

My colleague from Utah wants to separate out this notion, this principle, from a debate on balancing the budget. You cannot. This is a basic standard of fairness. I think in many ways this amendment really is a litmus test, because what people in Minnesota and around the country are saying is we want to know where the cuts are going to take place.

People are for the balanced budget amendment in the abstract, but when you get into specifics and people hear about draconian cuts, cuts in Medicare, Medicaid, higher education, people say, "Wait a minute." Even if we all understand that we need to continue to invest in people and communities, but we also need to continue down the path of deficit reduction, what we are saying is that the Senate go on record saying we should evaluate these tax expenditures, all of these different expenditures, some of which may be necessary but many of which, some say in the General Accounting Office, are outdated, inefficient, unnecessary—and I add, about the huge dodges.

Why should regular Minnesotans be asked to pay more in taxes, be asked to sacrifice? I have not heard anybody on the other side—my colleague from Minnesota came out, but there was no response to this amendment. Nor have I really heard a response from my colleague from Utah. Should the Senate go on record that as we evaluate how we are going to reduce the deficit and balance the budget, that we are going to call upon all Americans to be part of the sacrifice? Large corporations, large financial institutions, the wealthiest of the wealthy people in our country, are we not going to ask them to be part of the sacrifice?

I will tell you something, Mr. President. I think the Senate ought to go on record that each and every citizen and each and every interest, all interests, ought to be asked to be a part of the sacrifice. Everybody should be asked to sacrifice. There should be some standard of fairness. That is one of the reasons I have so much trouble with the last 2 weeks of this debate. We are asked to vote for a balanced budget amendment without specifying what you are going to do.

If I thought there was some standard of fairness, if I was not so sure that there are just going to be cuts that are going to affect the most vulnerable citizens, if I was not sure about what this is going to do to higher education and health care, if I really thought we were going to go after $420 billion worth of tax expenditures and put that on the table, and that we were also going to scrutinize the Pentagon budget and we were going to cut where we should cut, that is exactly the path I want to go down. That is what this amendment says. Subject these expenditures to the same scrutiny that we are putting a whole lot of other programs and expenditures under.

How much time do I have, I ask the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 7½ minutes remaining.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I yield the floor to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I ask the Senator to yield for a question.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I am pleased to.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Minnesota if he noticed in his State the same thing I have in my State in recent weeks: That there is a heightened level of anxiety around our States about what is going to happen when we balance this budget.

I am hearing people who are concerned about the elderly nutrition program, people that are concerned about what is going to happen with the Corporation for Public Broadcasting. So far, there does not seem to be much talk about the so-called tax loopholes as a way to solve the problem. That is one of the reasons I want to bring this up. I am wondering whether the Senator is experiencing this sort of discrepancy between direct spending programs versus not talking about the tax loopholes.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I would say to my colleague, just this past Saturday, I was in southwest Minnesota in a meeting with a group of citizens that are really worried that Pioneer Public Television—which, in the rural area, is so important; it is a pool of information; economic development, citizenship—is going to be eliminated. They are very worried about that for very good reasons. Certainly when I meet with the elderly or I meet with children or advocates for children, people who work in schools and universities, everybody was very worried about this.

What people say to me in cafes is, "Look, we understand that we have to continue down the path of deficit reduction; we have to be fiscally responsible. We also know that there are crying needs in our community. We want to make sure children have opportunity, that we have to invest in education in our communities. We know it is not done by waving a magic wand, but there has to be some standard of fairness."

That is what I think we are talking about here today. Absolutely.

I would say to my colleague, I would be interested in his response. Let me just put a question to him.

I really fell like if we are not willing to go on record today on this motion to refer, which just puts the Senate on record as saying we should just look at tax expenditures and consider whether they should be part of what should be cut. We see cynicism in people in Wisconsin and Minnesota who will say, "Yeah, of course they will vote against this. Unlike those folks, we don't have the big bucks. We do not lobby everybody. Who do they represent? They don't represent us."

I think we have to consider these tax expenditures to have credibility.

I will ask the Senator from Wisconsin what his view is about it.

Mr. FEINGOLD. That is exactly my concern. We are out here talking about the big picture, in terms of we have to balance the budget, we are talking about direct spending programs, but we have an obligation to talk about everything that is spent out here.

I find in Wisconsin, and I am sure you do in Minnesota, that people do not know about some of these oil and gas deals. They do not know, necessarily, that foreign nationals get the special deals on tax breaks. We talk about it. We do a heck of a job in telling people about where this item of pork—you know, the Lawrence Welk issue, the steamboat issue—and we should, and we made some progress on this.

But back home people are being prevented from finding out—because we will not talk about it—that there is worse stuff a lot of times stuck in the Ways and Means Committee and in the Finance Committee that never comes up to public scrutiny.

That is why it is particularly unfair, when these other programs are threatened that really help people and they may have to take some cuts, that they are on the chopping block and the American people are not even told the truth. No one is telling the people about the tax loopholes; in effect, a conspiracy not to talk about it.

I think that is a very serious injustice to the people that you have described.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, might I interrupt my colleague to ask him a question?

Mr. FEINGOLD. Yes.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Is not also true that there is a very direct correlation—and, unfortunately, it is a hidden correlation, unless we are willing to be accountable and open and honest about this—between our failure to even look at—which is all we are asking for today—these tax expenditures and the kinds of cuts that are going to take place in some of these programs that are so important to people? And, in addition, is it not also true that regular taxpayers end up paying more?

Mr. FEINGOLD. Exactly.

If I may respond to the Senator from Minnesota, let us just think about, if you happen to be a supporter of the balanced budget amendment, your goal out of all of this is, of course, is that the States would ratify the balanced budget amendment. What do the supporters of the balanced budget amendment think is going to happen back in our home States when the people that are concerned about these programs find out the following: when they find out that defense spending is going up; when they find out that we are going to give out a big tax break across the board to everybody in the country; when they find out we would not even talk about tax loopholes?

It is not going to take too long before some of those State legislatures figure out, "Wait a minute. What is this coming out of?"

It is coming out of the local programs and the tax dollars, the property taxes, of hard-working people of places like Minnesota and Wisconsin.

So I would think you would be concerned that not laying it out for the American people and putting tax expenditures off the table—as this, in effect, does if we do not put it in the sense of the Senate—I would think you would be concerned and I think the Senator from Minnesota is right on target.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I would say to my colleague, if I was a proponent of this constitutional amendment to balance the budget, which I am not, I would vote for this amendment.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Right.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Because once people understand that some of the programs that have been most important to them and their communities, be it Medicare, be it Medicaid, be it Pell grants, be it nutrition programs for children, be it veterans' programs, you name it—are going to be cut and cut deeply—but the Pentagon budget is going up; and, you have all of these loopholes which are flowing disproportionately to large corporations and financial institutions in America with all the clout, without their being asked to sacrifice at all, there is going to be a huge amount of anger.

And I would say to my colleague, that is why I think the Senate must go on record today on this.

I would say to my colleague from Wisconsin we have a little under a minute left. I would be pleased if he would just conclude for us. It has been a joy working with him and I hope we get a good strong vote.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I thank the Senator from Minnesota. We will visit this subject again many times, both of us, and I know we will have support from others.

But what it really comes down to, this is not an attempt to delay on the balanced budget amendment. What we are doing here is to try to point out there are certain special interests that are being protected by tax expenditures and that those tax expenditures should be on the table. And, in large part, this is true because these tax expenditures have been a big part of the reason why this mess was created in the first place; one of the big reasons we have this deficit.

So why in the world should not that be on the table with all the other things?

That is our message and that is why we would urge the adoption of this motion to refer.

Mr. HATCH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back my time, if the distinguished Senators are prepared to yield back their time.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I thank my colleague from Utah. I am prepared to yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded back.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to table the motion and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There appears to be a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Utah to table the motion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WELLSTONE]. The yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. LOTT. I announce that the Senator from Kansas [Mrs. KASSEBAUM] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHCROFT). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 59, nays 40, as follows:

NOT VOTING—1

Kassebaum

So the motion was rejected.

MOTION INTENDED TO BE MADE

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of a motion to refer House Joint Resolution 1 to the Budget Committee, which I intend to make, be printed in the RECORD for the information of Senators.

There being no objection, the text was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Proposed motion to be made by Mr. BUMPERS:

I move to refer House Joint Resolution 1 to the Budget Committee with instructions to report back forthwith House Joint Resolution 1 and issue a report, at the earliest possible date, which shall include the following:

"SECTION 1. PROHIBITION ON BUDGET RESOLUTIONS THAT FAIL TO SET FORTH A BALANCED BUDGET.—Section 301 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(j) CONGRESSIONAL ENFORCEMENT OF A BALANCED BUDGET.—Beginning in 2001, it shall not be in order to consider any concurrent resolution on the budget (or amendment, motion, or conference report thereon) that sets forth a level of outlays for fiscal year 2002 or any subsequent fiscal year that exceeds the level of revenues for that fiscal year."

"SEC. 2. POINT OF ORDER AGAINST BUDGET RESOLUTIONS THAT FAIL TO SET FORTH A BALANCED BUDGET.—Add the following new section immediately following Section 904 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974:

"SEC. . Section 301(j) may be waived (A) in any fiscal year by an affirmative vote of three-fifths of the whole number of each House; (B) in any fiscal year in which a declaration of war is in effect; or (C) in any fiscal year in which the United States is engaged in military conflict which causes an imminent and serious military threat to national security and is so declared by a joint resolution, adopted by a majority of the whole number of each House, which becomes law."

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. CRAIG. I thank the Senator from Louisiana for yielding.

He is about to lay down an amendment that is a very important amendment to this issue that I think both sides are very concerned about and want ample time to debate. I would like to see if we could not arrive at a unanimous consent agreement here. Is it acceptable to the Senator from Louisiana if we look at 4 hours equally divided?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, that is acceptable.

Mr. CRAIG. I hope that if we can get a unanimous consent on that, we would both try to yield back as much as possible of the unused time and so encourage our colleagues.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Certainly. Mr. President, there is no intent at all to delay. All amendments are important. But this is one that I hope will pass and that my colleagues on the other side of the aisle will accede to. But in any event, we will yield back to the extent we do not use the time.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, I then ask unanimous consent for 4 hours equally divided on the Johnston amendment, prior to a motion to table, and that no amendments to the Johnston amendment be in order.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I certainly do not plan any second-degree amendments. I do not see any of my colleagues who do. So that would be suitable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CRAIG. I thank my colleague.

Mr. BYRD. Will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. I ask unanimous consent that upon the disposition of the amendment by Mr. JOHNSTON, I be recognized to call up an amendment. If this request is not agreed to, I will be here and seek recognition in my own right. I make that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold that for just a minute and let me talk to him about that?

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, I note the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield the floor?

Mr. JOHNSTON addressed the Chair.

Mr. BYRD. Was my request agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Does the Senator have a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. BYRD. That upon the disposition of the amendment that is being offered by Mr. JOHNSTON, I be recognized to call up an amendment.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAIG. And I will not object, would the Senator from West Virginia mind discussing with us at this time the amendment he plans to offer following this amendment?

Mr. BYRD. I stated to the Senator in private what it was.

Mr. CRAIG. Would the Senator mind for the RECORD saying so?

Mr. BYRD. I will say so when I get ready.

Mr. CRAIG. I see. Let me say for the RECORD, because I do not want to object to proceedings here, the three-fourths amendment in section 1, it is my understanding the Senator from West Virginia plans to offer an amendment to it?

Mr. BYRD. It is, but I have not reached the point yet that I feel I am under obligation to announce what my amendment does before I call it up.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, this is not an issue here. The Senator knows the rules of the Senate as do I, and certainly he is not under that obligation. I was only asking for a courtesy.

Mr. BYRD. I told the Senator in private out of courtesy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSTON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

AMENDMENT NO. 272

(Purpose: To provide that no court shall have the power to order relief pursuant to any case or controversy arising under the balanced budget constitutional amendment, except as provided in implementing legislation)

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JOHNSTON], for himself, Mr. BUMPERS, Mr. LEVIN, Mrs. BOXER, and Mr. PRYOR, proposes an amendment numbered 272.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of Section 6, add the following: "No court shall have the power to order relief pursuant to any case or controversy arising under this article, except as may be specifically authorized in implementing legislation pursuant to this section."

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, this amendment is very simple. It is essentially the 1994 Danforth amendment which was adopted by this body without dissent.

What it says is that no court shall have the power to order relief pursuant to any case or controversy arising under this article except as may be specifically authorized in implementing legislation pursuant to this section—no court jurisdiction unless specifically authorized by the Congress. That is virtually identical to the amendment which was adopted last year.

Why do we propose this? On January 31, we had an extended debate here on the question of whether or not this amendment is enforceable, and if so, how it is enforceable. I opined that the way it would be likely enforced would be to have the Supreme Court order an income tax surcharge, because the Court is particularly ill qualified to make choices between various spending programs, to choose between the B-2 bomber and the F/A-18, or to choose between Social Security and Medicare, or to determine what the effects of these budget cuts would be. The thing they would be able to do is to order an income tax surcharge. It would not change any of the rules. It would simply say you add on to the present income tax, using those rules, a surcharge, which they would order the Treasury to collect.

In response to that argument, I had an extended colloquy with my friend from Utah, Mr. HATCH. Mr. HATCH stated that he did not see any way the courts would find standing or justiciability, that only the Congress had power to enforce this amendment. Mr. HATCH made very clear that it is the intent of the majority party that this amendment not be enforceable by the courts.

I then asked, "If that is the intent, why did you not spell it out as we did in the Danforth amendment the previous year?"

To that, Mr. HATCH replied, in effect, that, "Frankly, there are those on the other side who I think will argue the courts ought to have some control. We just want to avoid that particular argument."

So in effect what we have is an intentional ambiguity fashioned in order to appeal to both sides of this argument. There are some who think the courts ought to be involved. There are some who think the courts should not be involved. Mr. HATCH thinks the courts are not involved. So, therefore, it is left intentionally ambiguous.

Mr. President, I would first like to submit to my colleagues that this is not at all clear. As a matter of fact, I believe the majority legal opinion would be that jurisdiction does lie. Quoting from a Harvard Law Review article of May 1983, they state:

Doctrinal analysis demonstrates, however, that taxpayers probably would have standing to challenge alleged violation of either the deficit spending prohibition or the tax limitation provision.

Harvard Law Review says when you analyze all the cases, they probably would have standing.

Assistant Attorney General Dellinger testified before the committee. Assistant Attorney General Walter Dellinger stated as follows:

Moreover, it is possible that courts would hold that either taxpayers or other litigants would have standing to adjudicate various aspects of the budget process under the balanced budget amendment. Even if taxpayers and Members of Congress were not granted standing, a criminal defendant prosecuted or sentenced under an omnibus crime bill that improved tax enforcement or authorized fines or forfeitures could argue that the bill "increased revenues" within the meaning of section 4.

Or take the distinguished professor, Harvard law professor Laurence Tribe. Mr. Tribe says:

So that one way or another, Members of Congress, a House of Congress, someone who has been cut off from a program, a taxpayer—these people will be able to go to court. No question about it.

I have a whole folder of cases and experts who say that taxpayers could go to court, that there would be jurisdiction in the courts, that it would be enforceable. Others say it is a question to be determined by the courts.

Suffice it to say, in my judgment, no one can seriously rise to his feet on the floor of this Senate and say that this is a clear question; that what Mr. HATCH says is correct, that is, that there is clearly no standing or jurisdiction to enforce this amendment. It simply is not so. As I have just quoted from Professor Tribe, from Professor Dellinger—Professor Fried says the same thing—Harvard Law Review—on and on. It is not clear what the limits of court jurisdiction would be.

I ask my colleagues this question, which is a fundamental question. Is there advantage in ambiguity? Is there some reason that we in this U.S. Senate, understanding the ambiguity of court jurisdiction, would want to leave it ambiguous? I think the answer is—which Mr. HATCH gave—that some of our people think they ought to have jurisdiction and some think they should not have jurisdiction so, therefore, we leave it ambiguous and hope to get the votes of both sides.

I submit that as a political matter on the floor of this Senate that is likely to do you more harm than good. There are some on this side of the Senate who, just as recently as 10 minutes ago, said the outcome of the Johnston amendment will influence their vote on this matter. There may be some on the other side of the aisle who feel differently.

I suggest if it is a political calculation that my friends on the other side of the aisle who are supporting this amendment check with their Members and see how many you lose by making clear the most fundamental question in this amendment. Are there really people in this Senate who would vote against the amendment because you cleared up an ambiguity? I do not believe so. But there may be some on this side of the aisle who recognize the pernicious, difficult effect of this amendment—no less authority than former Solicitor General, Judge Robert Bork, said the following, in a 1983 article:

The result would likely be hundreds, if not thousands, of lawsuits around the country, many of them on inconsistent theories and providing inconsistent results. By the time the Supreme Court straightened the whole matter out, the budget question would at least be 4 years out of date and lawsuits involving the next 3 fiscal years would be slowly climbing toward the Supreme Court.

Judge Bork is giving nothing but common sense. Everything the Federal Government would do would be subject to litigation. And, as Judge Bork says, thousands of lawsuits matriculating their way up to the Supreme Court, inconsistent results, and in the meantime what happens to this country? There would be bond issues which are subject to doubt. What attorney would issue an opinion on a bond issue that was clouded by a Supreme Court or by a district court case? There are so many other things that this Congress does with respect to issuing debts, making contracts—all would be unclear because we would not know what the jurisdiction of the court was.

To those who say that the court needs to be involved, I say the Congress, under this amendment, has that power. To the extent that Congress specifically gives to the court the power to get involved in the balanced budget amendment, we have the ability to do so. And we may wish to do so. We may, for example, wish to limit them to declaratory judgments. We might wish to limit them to interpreting the words of the Constitution, determining what an outlay is, what a receipt is, et cetera. We may want to give them injunctive power. We may want to limit their ability to raise taxes. In fact, on the Republican side of this aisle, there is a lot of feeling against raising any taxes, whether by Congress—there was one amendment proposed which required 60 votes to raise taxes, as part of this amendment. But you would give that power to an unelected court.

So the power to raise taxes is clearly, Mr. President, something that ought to be cleared up. Or, on the other hand, we may wish to say that the Supreme Court has original jurisdiction for the purpose of considering the balanced budget amendment. In other words, we may think that the matter is so important and it requires such expeditious relief, considering the uncertainties in the bond market, the uncertainties in contractual rights, that we need to expedite that consideration by providing that original jurisdiction in the Supreme Court. The Congress under this amendment would have that power. We would be able to define those limits, provide for that expediency, and provide whatever jurisdiction or limits on that jurisdiction that we wish under this amendment.

Mr. President, I ask why not do that? Why not clear up that American ambiguity? Why not make this constitutional amendment so far as we can free from litigation?

Mr. President, I ask my colleague from Idaho, for whom I have great respect and affection, first of all, if he agrees with me that this is a matter which is at least ambiguous and that the weight of authority is probably on the side of saying the court has jurisdiction. Would my colleague agree with that statement?

Mr. KEMPTHORNE. Mr. President, in response to the Senator, I too have great respect for the Senator from Louisiana and admire the fact that he is bringing this sort of discussion to this issue. But really I would defer from responding to that because I think the chairman of the Judiciary Committee would be more appropriate who is grounded in this field and aspect of it to respond to you so you get the meaningful dialogue and exchange that really this issue merits.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Will the Senator agree with me that, if it is a matter of ambiguity—and we will let Senator HATCH respond to that—then it ought to be an ambiguity that could be cleared up?

Mr. KEMPTHORNE. I think when you have ambiguity, I do not know why we would want to proceed down the road of solidifying ambiguity.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I thank the Senator. In his usual candor, he I think reinforces the point.

Mr. President, I see my friend from Utah coming onto the floor. I wonder if I could engage with him in a colloquy on this matter.

I thank my friend from Utah. My question was this: I had just quoted from the Harvard Law Review a number of professors who have stated that in their view there would be standing, justiciability and the matter would be handled by the court, although there are doubts about the limits about it. Will the Senator from Utah agree with me that it is at least a matter of ambiguity as to what the jurisdiction of the court would be?

Mr. HATCH. I really do not agree. I really do not think that you can find standing across the board. I do not think you can find standing. There may be some isolated cases where a person's peculiar interests have been affected. I cannot think of any right offhand. But I am certainly not ruling that out. But I really do not think you can find all three of those conditions to exist with regard to the balanced budget amendment. I will be happy to address that in greater detail when it comes my time to say a few words about it.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Did the Senator have an opportunity to hear me quote Assistant Attorney General Walter Dellinger who said that it is possible that the courts would hold that either taxpayers or other litigants would have standing to adjudicate various aspects of the budget process?

Mr. HATCH. I was there when he said that and he backpedaled off that in the middle of the hearings and had to admit that there is not much basis for that statement. I might add that was in the face of a former Attorney General and a whole raft of other witnesses who said that just is not true.

Mr. JOHNSTON. What Attorney General?

Mr. HATCH. Attorney General Barr was there.

Mr. JOHNSTON. You understand Attorney General Barr, to quote Attorney General Barr:

I do believe Congress should consider including language in the amendment that would expressly limit judicial review to actions for declaratory judgments. If, however, such a provision would prove to be politically unpopular, I believe for the reasons detailed in my written statement that Congress can safely pass the amendment in its current form without undue concern that the courts will entertain large numbers of suits challenging Congress' actions under the amendment or that, even if the courts do entertain some suits, they will order intrusive injunctive remedies.

General Barr says we ought to clear up the ambiguity because according to him, he says they—I mean the obverse. He says they will not entertain large numbers of suits. I do not know what large numbers are to him, and I do not know what intrusive injunctive remedies are.

Mr. HATCH. If the Senator will yield, I was there. He did say that as a political matter, if it helps you to pass a bill and dispose of amendments, that you might want to put a provision in with regard to declaratory judgments. We did that when we lost the last amendment. He said it is just a matter of political judgment. His opinion was that you are not going to—

Mr. JOHNSTON. I just quoted his opinion.

Mr. HATCH. No. No. That is what he said, not in his written statement. He was making a point in front of the committee that, if politically that helps you to pass the balanced budget amendment, you could live with that type of a provision. But his main points were that he did not see any reason to involve courts in the amendment either way.

Mr. JOHNSTON. If the Senator will yield.

Mr. HATCH. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I am quoting Attorney General Barr in a written answer to a posthearing statement in which he says "I do believe"—do believe—"Congress should consider including language in the amendment that would expressly limit judicial review to actions for declaratory judgment."

Mr. HATCH. Right. That is what we did in last year's debate.

Mr. JOHNSTON. In the Danforth amendment.

Mr. HATCH. But that has nothing to do withstanding, nothing to do with justiciability. The fact of the matter is—

Mr. JOHNSTON. Of course it does.

Mr. HATCH. Let me make my point. Declaratory relief in the eyes of many—and I think most authorities—can be as intrusive as injunctive relief. Take Justice Frankfurter in Coalgrave v. Green, 328 U.S. 549, page 552, a 1946 case, and he opined that declaratory relief should not be granted in situations where injunctions are inappropriate.

Mr. JOHNSTON. If the Senator will yield—

Mr. HATCH. If I could just finish, maybe I can help clarify. Let me finish. I only have two more comments to make.

Thus declaratory relief would be limited by the standing political questions of separation of powers doctrines.

Finally, the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Louisiana would be construed, if it passes, to grant the courts broad declaratory relief despite the standing in the political question of doctrine, and I might add the separation of powers doctrine. We think that is a mistake.

Mr. JOHNSTON. If I may correct the Senator at that point, my amendment precludes any judicial order of relief, except to the extent expressly authorized by the Congress and, unlike the Danforth amendment, does not include declaratory relief.

What I was saying about Judge Barr was that Judge Barr says you ought to limit this at least to declaratory relief, but he goes on to point out that it is probable that you would have some suits entertained. The distinguished Harvard law professor, Laurence Tribe, says:

So that one way or another, Members of Congress, a House of Congress, someone who has been cut off from a program, a taxpayer, these people will be able to go to court; no question about it.

We could go on here quoting from cases, quoting from other experts. I have not come across any expert who says it is clear that there is no jurisdiction, not one. I would welcome that statement.

Mr. HATCH. The fact that we leave it open says there may be jurisdictions. It does not mean the courts will grant it. I do not think they will. Let me read—

Mr. JOHNSTON. Wait. We are on my time now. Let me make my point first, and the Senator may respond. There is not one expert—not one—that I have come across who says the matter of justiciability, the matter of standing, or the matter of being a political question, which are the three bases on which my friend from Utah relied in our January 31 debate, not one expert says that that is a clear question. On the other hand, Professor Tribe says it is clear they would have standing. Mr. Dellinger says he believes they would have standing. Judge Barr says you ought to limit that because there may be some lawsuits and they may order some judicial relief, and no one that I can find disagrees with that.

What I am saying is that it is at best an ambiguity—at best—and a probability of court jurisdiction, a probability of court intrusiveness here. How can my friend from Utah say it is not a matter of ambiguity in the face of the Harvard Law Review and distinguished professors, including his own, who say otherwise?

Mr. HATCH. Because there is little or no chance that is going to happen. Let me, if I can, just go back to the written remarks—

Mr. JOHNSTON. Can the Senator give me one single expert who agrees with him?

Mr. HATCH. I am going to give it to you right now. Let me just go back—if you want to enshrine the word ambiguity, I am not going to do that for you. I can say that I cannot rule out that there might be some oddball case where somebody might have standing. I cannot rule that out. But I do believe we can rule it out on the basis of just reasonability that some oddball is not going to have an oddball case that affects everybody in the country because they are not going to be able to meet those three requirements.

Here is what General Barr said in his written comments: "In my view, though it is always difficult to predict the course of future constitutional law development"—from that standpoint, I have to grant the point that who knows whether some crackpots who occasionally do get to the courts, if we believe that is what is going to happen to the Supreme Court, who knows, you cannot say that anything is absolute in this world. Here is what he said:

In my view, though it is always difficult to predict the course of future constitutional law development, the courts' role in enforcing the balanced budget amendment will be quite limiting.

I see little risk that the amendment will become the basis for judicial micromangement or superintendence of the Federal budget process.

Furthermore, to the extent such judicial intrusion does arise, the amendment itself equips Congress to correct the problem by statute. On balance, moreover, whatever remote risks there may be that courts will play an overly intrusive role in enforcing the amendment, that risk is, in my opinion, vastly outweighed by the benefits of such an amendment.

Then he says:

I believe there are three basic constraints that will tend to prevent the courts from becoming unduly involved in the budgetary process. One, the limitation on the power of the Federal courts contained in article III of the Constitution, primarily the requirement of standing; two, the deference the courts will owe to Congress, both under existing constitutional doctrines and particularly under section 6 of the amendment itself, which expressly confers enforcement responsibility on Congress; and three, the limits on judicial remedies running against coordinate branches of Government, both that the courts have imposed upon themselves and that in appropriate circumstances Congress may impose on the courts.

When the Senator cites Laurence Tribe of Harvard to me and Walter Dellinger of Duke, they are both ardent advocates against the balanced budget amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Let us quote from Mr. Barr, who says in that same statement on page 8:

But I would be the last to say that the standing doctrine is an ironclad shield against judicial activism. The doctrine is malleable and it has been manipulated by the courts in the past.

The one expert that my friend from Utah quotes to say that this matter is clear himself says it is unclear, and he says you cannot predict what the court will do, and himself urges that you limit the jurisdiction of the court. That is what he says.

I ask my friend, why do we not clear it up?

Mr. HATCH. Because we do not have to. Even though he says that there is no absolute in the law, because you can always find, or you may find in the future, some judicial activist who will ignore what the law says, we do have all kinds of checks and balances in this country, not just the courts, but in the other branches of Government as well. Even in the courts we have checks and balances. That is why we have nine Justices on the Supreme Court. What he is saying is there is little or no likelihood that anybody is going to be able to go to court and meet those three requisites under current law or under the law as he envisions it to be.

If you ask him, well, assuming that there are no absolutes, and you want to be absolutely sure that the courts can never intrude, what would you do? Naturally, he would say I think you can have declaratory judgment relief if you want to write that into the amendment. We do not want to do that.

Mr. JOHNSTON. What harm does it do, to clear up this matter, to say that there is no jurisdiction, no power for the courts to grant judicial relief except to the extent we authorize it in the Congress; what harm does it do?

Mr. HATCH. I think the harm is that if the Senator writes the courts out of the Constitution, or out of this balanced budget amendment, he will be writing people out that we cannot foresee at this time—I do not know—who may have some legitimate, particularized injury to themselves that will enable them to have standing and a right to sue. That is a far cry from giving a broad, generalized right to the public at large.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Does the Senator understand what he just said? He has just been saying that this matter is clear that there is no jurisdiction, but we better not say there is no jurisdiction because there are some people we cannot foresee who may have jurisdiction and may want to sue, and the courts ought to be enforcing their rights.

Mr. HATCH. There is a difference between a general right to sue for all citizens and a particularized injury to one individual which I cannot foresee right now. I do not believe there are any instances I can come up with, but there may be.

Let me give you an illustration. Suppose Congress—this is not to say this is going to happen—but suppose Congress passes legislation cutting spending programs only to Jewish people. That will not happen, but let us give that as a bizarre illustration. In this case, should they not have a right to sue?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Well, now, tell me, would the court's power to order relief be limited or could the court say you have not balanced the budget and therefore we order an income tax surcharge?

Mr. HATCH. I do not think the court can do that.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Where does my friend find such limitations on the court's power? If somebody has standing to sue, then they have standing to ask for whatever relief is appropriate.

Mr. HATCH. We deal with judicial restraints, judicial powers, every day in our lives. And one of the reasons why the law develops year after year after year is because of ingenious people who find ways to develop it.

All I am saying is this: We do not want to take away anybody's rights that may develop sometime in the future. We do not want a generalized right to sue and we do not believe anybody can make a good case that they will have that right.

I do not think Professor Tribe did it or Walter Dellinger did it in front of the committee.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Do you know what Robert Bork said?

Mr. HATCH. And on the courts raising taxes, it is a question of redressability. You know, it is a separation of powers of doctrine.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Judge Bork says:

The result would be hundreds, if not thousands, of lawsuits around the country, many of them on inconsistent theories and providing inconsistent results.

Mr. HATCH. And Judge Bork has very good reason to feel that way with the way he was treated. His legal contentions are based on overexaggerated fears of judicial activists. Actually, the post-Warren Supreme Court has tightened the standing and justiciability doctrines to such a degree that balanced budget enforcement suits would probably be dismissed on those grounds alone.

And I cite the Lujan versus the Defenders of Wildlife case in 1992.

In fact, Bork admits—

Mr. JOHNSTON. If I may interrupt—and I do not like to interrupt.

Mr. HATCH. If I may just finish.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Are we proceeding on my time?

Mr. HATCH. I will be happy to make this response on my time.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SANTORUM). The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. In fact, to make my case a little more clear, Bork admits, on page 2 of the letter he wrote, that standing would probably be denied. That is what most real constitutional experts would say. The substance of the legal argument is to speculate on the consequences of what if courts assumed jurisdiction. Well, what if courts decided to raise taxes? What if they decide to send armies to war? What if judicial activists decide to do anything that is outside of their jurisdiction and their range? I suspect we could conjure up any kind of a scare tactic, any kind of bizarre situation.

What we have to rely on is what is the law. And it is very tough under current law and under the laws that existed for a long time, to come up with standing, with the requisites to meet the standing, justiciability, and the political question doctrine and some separation of powers doctrine in order to do what the distinguished Senator is suggesting Tribe and Dellinger say can be done.

Mr. Dellinger back-pedaled quite a bit at that hearing. We did not have a lot of time to question him, and if we had, I think he would have back-pedaled a lot more. Neither Tribe nor Dellinger are supporters of the balanced budget amendment.

And I have found, as the excellent lawyers they are, and they are really excellent lawyers, that they can come up, as law professors—and both of these are law professors, although Dellinger, Professor Dellinger, and I do not mean to denigrate him; Professor Dellinger is now down at the Justice Department—both of them can come up with alternatives on everything.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. Barr is a supporter.

Mr. HATCH. No, Mr. Barr is not a supporter. I listened to the testimony, and in speculating about it and hypothesizing about it, he says, "Well, if you want to do this, you can do it." But Barr basically says you should not have to do it; the law is such that you should not have to do it.

And Bork is just saying it because he fears judicial activists. Bork is saying that, you know, well, his comments are based on what I consider to be, and I think many others, exaggerated fears of judicial activists.

Mr. JOHNSTON. You do understand that Mr. Barr said:

I do believe Congress should consider including language in the amendment that would expressly limit judicial review.

Mr. HATCH. I was there. I believe I was there when he said it.

Mr. JOHNSTON. No, this was in the posthearing answer to written questions. That is the last word from Mr. Barr.

Mr. HATCH. I am aware.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Did he ever back up on that?

Mr. HATCH. I think if Mr. Barr, if General Barr, was asked what his opinion is, he would say, "Don't clutter up the Constitution." Because every time you add a provision like this into to, every time you add that kind of provision or any kind of provision, you have a whole myriad of problems that arise from there.

Now we have people in both bodies who want the courts involved. We have people who do not want the courts involved. I think there is little or no likelihood that the courts are going to be involved on this amendment as it is written.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Is that not the real answer; that some of your Members are for it and some are against it, and you want to please both sides, so you leave it ambiguous?

Mr. HATCH. First of all, I do not think it is really ambiguous. Nothing is absolute, so I guess you can claim ambiguity on any proposition you make.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I just read to you the most distinguished professors in the country, including Mr. Bork, and you have not one single expert, not one, who supports your position. Name me one. I mean, you do not like Judge Bork; you do not like—

Mr. HATCH. I love Judge Bork. And I do not disregard Professor Tribe and Professor Dellinger.

What I am saying is this: The Senator is partially correct. We are dealing here with a constitutional amendment of general application. We are dealing with one of the most difficult debates in the history of the country. We are dealing with consensus problems. We are dealing with Republicans and Democrats. We are dealing with 38 years of trying to get this to the floor—38 years; really, better than 200 years of getting the House to vote on this. Thirty-eight years of trying to get it to the floor, nineteen years in my life of trying to do it, having brought it to the floor in 1982, where we passed it in the Senate without that language, having brought it three other times to the floor, and this is the fourth time, and trying to bring people together who have a mixture of viewpoints.

We are doing the best we can. Now, can we satisfy everybody's urge, including Professor Tribe's or Professor Dellinger's? Can we satisfy everybody's demand or desire for their own wording in this amendment? Can we satisfy those who do not want the courts involved in this to the exclusion of those who do? There are not many who do, but there are some who do.

Or do we do what we have to do, and that is, get a consensus on this matter and fight for it as hard as we can and do the best we can? Well, that is what we are doing.

Mr. JOHNSTON. If I could ask my colleague at that point, I disagree not just with the legal calculus, but with the political calculus, as well.

The Danforth amendment was virtually identical to this amendment and was passed without opposition. Is there really opposition on your side? Are there Senators who on your side would say, I will not support this amendment unless it has the right of the courts to order relief?

Mr. HATCH. I believe there are. I believe there are some on your side. In fact, I think there are as many, if not more, on your side.

So what I am saying is we are trying to do the art of the doable here. Personally, I do not like courts involved—in certain aspects of this, I would not want them involved at all—and I do not believe they will be, or I would be arguing for the Senator's position. I might add that some do like the courts involved in some of these areas, but I do not know many who do.

But let me just say that what we are trying to do is bring Senators together and reach a 67-vote total. We are one or two votes away from that. Some think we are there, but I do not ever count that until the final vote. We are one or two votes away from being there. And we are trying to keep the amendment intact.

And keep in mind, we have 300 people in the House of Representatives who voted for this amendment. If we add anything to it, it has to go back to them.

These are considerations the distinguished Senator from Illinois and I have to meet.

Now, as I recall, just to name two experts, Griffin Bell, former Attorney General of the United States, upholds this position. Professor Van Alstein, from Duke, who was Walter Dellinger's partner down there, upholds this position, as far as I know.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Who say this is a matter that has no ambiguity.

Mr. HATCH. Who say there is little or no likelihood that people can generally sue on behalf of all Senators under this amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON. There is a huge amount of difference between "little likelihood" and "clear."

See, the difference is that we would have this litigation going through the courts. As Judge Bork said, thousands of cases with inconsistent results. Bond issues, contracts, subject to lack of clarity.

It is not too much to say that the capital markets of this country could, during the pending litigation, be put into complete chaos.

Mr. HATCH. I think those are scare tactics myself. Let me say a few things, and maybe I can clarify to a degree.

Mr. President, the balanced budget amendment is a fine-tuned law. It manages to strike the delicate balance between reviewability by the courts and the limitations on the courts' ability to interfere with congressional authority.

I wholeheartedly agree with the former Attorney General William B. Barr, who stated that if House Joint Resolution 1 is ratified there is, *** little risk that the amendment will become the basis for judicial micromanagement or superintendence of the Federal budget process. Furthermore, to the extent such judicial intrusion does arise, the amendment itself equips Congress to correct the problem by statute.

In other words, we can correct any problem that does arise. "On balance," he goes on to say, "whatever remote risk there may be the court will play an overtly intrusive role in forcing the amendment, that risk is, in my opinion, vastly outweighed by the benefits of such amendment."

In regard to Congress' power to restrain the courts, which I think is an important point, I think the Senator from Louisiana does the Senate a service in raising the issue.

In order to resist the ambition of the courts, the framers gave to the Congress in article III of the Constitution the authority to limit the jurisdiction of the courts, the type of remedies the courts may remedy, if Congress truly fears certain courts may decide to ignore the law and the precedence. If Congress finds it necessary, through implementing legislation, it may forbid courts the use of their injunctive powers already. And the Congress has done that from time to time.

Or Congress could create an exclusive cause of action or tribunal which carefully limits power satisfactory for Congress to deal with the balanced budget components or complaints.

But Congress should not, as the distinguished Senator from Louisiana proposes, cut off all judicial review. I believe that House Joint Resolution 1 strikes the right balance in terms of judicial review. By remaining silent about judicial review in the amendment itself, its authors have refused to establish congressional sanction for the Federal courts to involve themselves in fundamental, macroeconomic, and budgetary issues in question.

At the same time, this balanced budget amendment does not undermine the courts' equally fundamental obligation, as first stated in Marbury versus Madison, to say what the law is. After all, while I am confident that courts will not be able to interfere with our budgetary prerogatives, I am frank enough to say I cannot predict every conceivable lawsuit—nobody can—which might arise under this amendment and which does not implicate these budgetary prerogatives.

A litigant in such a narrow circumstance, if he or she can demonstrate standing, ought to be heard. They ought to have their case heard. It is simply wrong to assume that Congress would just sit by in the unlikely event that a court would commit some overreaching end. Believe me, Congress knows how to defend itself. Congress knows how to restrict the jurisdiction of courts or limit the scope of judicial remedies where the courts get completely out of line as they would have to be in this situation.

I do not think it is necessary. Lower courts by and large, and really almost always, follow precedent. The precepts of separation of powers and the political question doctrine effectively limit the ability of courts to interfere in the budgetary process. Nevertheless, if necessary, a shield against judicial interference is section 6 of House Joint Resolution 1, the constitutional amendment itself. Under this section Congress may adopt statutory remedies and mechanisms for any purported budgetary shortfall such as sequestration, rescission, or the establishment of a contingency. Pursuant to section 6, it is clear that Congress if it finds it necessary, could limit the type of remedies the court may grant or limit the courts' jurisdiction in some other manner to proscribe judicial overreaching. This is not at all a new device nor is it at all a new constitutional device. Congress has adopted such limitations in other circumstances pursuant to its article III authority.

In fact, Congress may also limit standing, judicial review, particular special tribunals with limited authority to grant relief. Such a tribunal was set up recently as the Reagan administration needed a special claims tribunal to settle claims on Iranian assets. Beyond which, in the virtually impossible scenario where these safeguards fail, Congress can take whatever action it must to moot any case in which a risk of judicial overreaching becomes something real.

Now, these standing, separation of powers, and political question issues are restraints. I might add, there is a distinction between remedies court can give and the ability to bring relief. Courts cannot interfere with the budgetary process. It is a political question. It would violate the separation of powers doctrine.

These three restraints—these are basic constraints—prevent the courts from interfering in the budgetary process.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. If I could finish this, I would like it to be uninterrupted. Then I would be happy to yield.

First, limitations on Federal courts contained in article III of the Constitution, primarily the doctrine of standing. That is not one.

Second, the deference the courts owe to Congress under both the political question doctrine and section 6 of the amendment itself, which confers enforcement authority in Congress—not in the courts, in Congress—specifically. I think a court would really have to overreach and overreach badly to try to go around that.

Third, the limits on judicial remedies which can be imposed on a coordinate branch of government; in this case, the legislative branch.

These are limitations on remedies self-imposed by courts and that, in appropriate circumstances, may be imposed on the courts by Congress. These limitations such as the doctrine of separation of powers prohibits courts from raising taxes—that is a power exclusively delegated to Congress by the Constitution—and it is not altered in any way, shape or form by the balanced budget amendment that we are offering here today.

Consequently, contrary to the contention of the opponents of the balanced budget amendment, separation-of-power concerns further the purpose of the amendment in that it assures that the burden to balance the budget falls squarely on the shoulders of Congress, which is consistent, as I see it, with the Framers of the Constitution that all budgetary matters be placed in the hands of Congress.

Concerning the doctrine of standing, it is beyond dispute that to succeed in any lawsuit, a litigant must further demonstrate the standing to sue. To demonstrate article III standing, a litigant at a minimum must meet three requirements: No. 1, injury, in fact, that the litigant suffered some concrete and particularized injury.

No. 2, traceability—that the concrete injury, not only is the injury in fact because the litigants suffer some concrete or particularized injury, but traceability means that the concrete injury was both caused by and is traceable to the unlawful conduct.

And No. 3, redressability—that the relief sought will redress the alleged injury.

That is a large hurdle for a litigant to demonstrate that injury in fact requirement. That is something more concrete than a generalized grievance and burden shared by all citizens and taxpayers.

I do not know anybody who is an authority on this subject who would disagree with that. They might not like that, but that is what the law is. Even in the vastly improbable case where an injury in fact was established, a litigant would find it nearly impossible to establish the traceability and redressability requirement of the article III standing test. After all, there will be hundreds and hundreds of Federal spending programs even after Federal spending is brought under control.

Furthermore, because the Congress would have numerous options to achieve balanced budget compliance, there would be no legitimate basis for a court to nullify or modify a specific spending measure objected to by the litigant.

Now as to the redressability problem, this requirement would be difficult to meet because courts are wary of becoming involved in the budget process. They always have been, which they admit is legislative in nature, and separation of powers concerns will prevent courts from specifying adjustments of any Federal program or expenditures.

Thus, for this reason, Missouri versus Jenkins, the 1990 case that is often cited, where the Supreme Court upheld a district court's power to order a local school district to levy taxes to support a desegregation plan is inapposite. Plainly put, the Jenkins case is not applicable to the balanced budget amendment because section 1 of the 14th amendment, from which the judiciary derives its power to rule against the States in equal protection claims, does not apply to the Federal Government and because the separation of powers doctrine prevents judicial encroachments on Congress' bailiwick. Courts simply will not have the authority to order Congress to raise taxes. It is just that simple. And anybody who argues the Jenkins case just does not understand its 14th amendment implications.

Now on the political question, and these are important points, and I apologize to my colleague for making him wait until I make these points but I think they need to be made in order, and then, of course, I will be glad to discuss it with him.

The well-established political question doctrine and justiciability doctrine will mandate that the courts give the greatest deference to congressional budgetary measures, particularly since section 6 of House Joint Resolution 1 explicitly confers on Congress the responsibility of enforcing the amendment, and the amendment allows Congress to "rely on estimates of outlays and receipts."

Under these circumstances, it is extremely and all but unlikely that a court will substitute its judgment for that of Congress. I just cannot conceive of it, other than some future country that does not abide by its laws.

Moreover, despite the argument of some opponents of the balanced budget amendment, the taxpayer standing case, Flast versus Cohen, in 1968, is not applicable to enforcement of the balanced budget amendment. The Flast case has been limited by the Supreme Court to establishment clause cases. Also, Flast is, by its own terms, limited to challenging cases for an illicit purpose.

I also believe there would be no so-called congressional standing for Members of Congress to commence actions under the balanced budget amendment because Members of Congress would not be able to demonstrate that they were harmed in fact by any dilution or nullification of their vote, and because under the doctrine of equitable discretion, Members would not be able to show that substantial relief could not otherwise be obtained from fellow legislators, through the enactment, repeal or enforcement or amendment of a statute, it is hardly likely that Members of Congress would have standing to challenge actions under the balanced budget amendment. Highly unlikely.

Mr. President, I believe it is clear that the enforcement concerns about the balanced budget amendment do not amount to a hill of beans. The fear of the demon of judicial interference is exorcised by the reality of over a century of constitutional doctrines to prevent unelected courts from interfering with the power of the democratically elected branch of Government and to bestow Congress with the means to protect its prerogatives.

I think that even though you can always say there are ambiguities in the law, there always are. That does not negate the fact that this balanced budget amendment does not need to be amended to take care of something that is the most highly unlikely set of occurrences that could happen.

I will be happy to interchange with my friend from Louisiana.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I thank my colleague for yielding. On this question of justiciability and standing, the Senator is, I believe, familiar with the fact that many States have balanced budget amendments and there is a plethora of litigation in which State courts have taken jurisdiction.

In New York, in the 1977 fiscal crisis where they had a loan of $250 million, the court declared that that was permissible; took jurisdiction.

In the State of Georgia, a lease by development authority, the question whether that constituted indebtedness under that State's constitution.

In Wisconsin, whether a lease-purchase agreement constituted indebtedness.

In 1981 in Illinois, the legislature closed the schools early in pursuit of the balanced budget amendment of that State. The court took jurisdiction and, by the way, they said it was permissible but they took jurisdiction and made the decision.

In California, the employees' retirement system challenged the action of the State legislature which, in turn, passed fiscal emergency legislation to suspend funding to the State employees' retirement system, and the court took jurisdiction in that case and was able to order. They do so all across the country.

In my State, the courts specifically have stated they have jurisdiction. In the face of all of these State courts, in the face of Judge Bork, Attorney General Dellinger, in the face of Laurence Tribe of the Harvard Law Review and all of these others who say you probably would have standing, jurisdiction, justiciability, how it can be said—and I ask my colleague—how it can be said that there is no standing justiciability or that this is a political question escapes me.

Does the Senator desire to respond to that, or may I make one other point? Is he ready to respond to that? I see my colleague from Utah is not here.

Mr. BROWN. The distinguished Senator from Louisiana may want to go ahead and complete his points before we respond.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The Senator from Utah also said the Congress would have the power if there were courts who began to meddle in this, accepted jurisdiction, that the Congress would then have the power, I guess by getting 60 votes to overcome a filibuster, in order to limit that jurisdiction of a case already started.

I just wonder at what point the Congress would feel constrained to act. Would it be after the district court had issued an injunction, after the court of appeals had ordered taxes increased or after the Supreme Court had acted? Why do we not fix that in advance so the court will not exercise this jurisdiction, will not exercise that power, except to the extent that the Congress specifically authorizes it? That is my question, and then I will yield to my friend from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Louisiana has raised some concerns. My hope is that I can offer at least some comments that will be helpful to a portion of his concerns.

The issue of whether or not this provides "a plethora of litigation"—I think those are the words that were stated—is a fair question to ask, and I think it is reasonable to bring it before the body. I asked that question specifically of the Assistant Attorney General when he came before the Judiciary Committee.

The point of the administration was that this could lead to a flood of litigation. I noted that a large number of our States, the vast majority of our States have similar balanced budget amendments. The one in Colorado is, of course, very strict, much stricter than this. This is the softest form of a balanced budget amendment that I know of. I think Americans that watch this debate will be shocked to find how weak a version it is because it can be waived by simply 60 votes.

However, the allegation that this would lead to a large amount of litigation already is a question that has been faced by this country because the vast majority of our States have constitutional amendments that require a balanced budget, and they are much tougher than anything we are talking about.

I asked the Assistant Attorney General to name for me the cases that he was worried about, this flood of litigation. He could not name one single case. Mr. President, let me repeat that because the Attorney General who had made that allegation was unable to name a single solitary case. And when pressed on it, he came up with the name of several cases that, indeed, involved States but did not involve the balanced budget amendment that those States had.

Now, what is the fact? Colorado has a balanced budget amendment. The last litigation we had—

Mr. JOHNSTON. Will the Senator yield on the question of what the Attorney General said?

Mr. BROWN. I would be happy to yield to my friend from Louisiana.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Quoting from Mr. Dellinger, Assistant Attorney General Dellinger's testimony on page 137 of the hearings, he stated as follows:

There is as yet nothing in this amendment proposal that would preclude the courts of getting involved in issues of taxation. Recall Missouri v. Jenkins from 1990, where the Supreme Court held that while a Federal district court had abused its discretion in directly imposing a tax increase to fund a school desegregation program, that the modifications made in that case by the Court of Appeals satisfied equitable and constitutional principles.

If we have an amendment that for the first time constitutionalizes the taxing and spending process and creates a constitutional mandate which the courts are sworn on oath to uphold, there is simply no way that we can rule out the possibility that tax increases or spending cuts would be ordered by the judiciary.

The Senator asked what was the case Mr. Dellinger was concerned about. That is it—taxing being ordered by the courts or spending cuts being ordered by the courts. That is page 137 of last year's hearing.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to place in the RECORD at this point Mr. Dellinger's testimony.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXCERPT FROM HEARING ON SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 41—BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT

Mr. DELLINGER. Mr. Chairman, thank you.

Two hundred and seven years ago this summer, the framers of the Constitution met in Philadelphia. Their goal, as one of the founders put it, was to design a system of government that would ensure the grandeur and importance of America until time shall be no more.

The coming together of the American Colonies into a single Nation was more difficult than we can easily now imagine. John Adams wrote home from the Continental Congress in 1775 to the remarkable Abigail Adams, and he spoke of 50 gentlemen meeting together, all strangers, not acquainted with each others' ideas, views, language, designs. We are, he said, timid, skittish, jealous.

They came as representatives of legislative democracies that had some independence from England and had engaged in self-government, in many instances, for more than a century. They took enormous risk to create, in that summer of 1787, between the first day, May 25, and the last day, September 17, 1787, a system of government that has lasted longer and served better as a foundation for free government than any other constitution yet written.

It was the government designed to create a great republic, the kind of republic that John Marshall could then imagine as a young Chief Justice; where, from the St. Croix to the Gulf of Mexico, revenue was to be collected and expended, armies are to be marched and supported. To this end, Marshall wrote, all the sword and the purse, all the external relations and no inconsiderable portion of the industry of the Nation are entrusted to this Government.

This Government, under this system of government, as you know as the great historian of this body, the Senate, has provided an extraordinary basis for the achievement of the grandeur and importance of the American Nation.

I think we are considering today an amendment to that document that poses great risk. For that amendment is profoundly anticonstitutional, not unconstitutional—no amendment ratified in due course could rightly be called unconstitutional—but anti-constitutional in the sense that it goes against the basic spirit, the basic essence of some of the most profound aspects of the Constitution.

The Constitution, as written by the framers, did not constrain choices. It, rather, empowers the people to enact choices, except in those few instances, such as the freedom of speech and the press and of religion, that are ruled out of bounds altogether. This amendment is inconsistent with that goal, by seeking to shackle government.

It is a Constitution in which the principle of majority rule is so fundamental, so essential, that it literally goes without saying. There is no need even to mention that decisions are made by majority rule. And yet, here is an amendment that would, for the first time, allow 40 percent to hold hostage a majority of the Government with respect to a matter—the passage of a budget—that must be done.

We have, and will hear in the judiciary subcommittee today and yesterday, discussions to the fact that there are other supermajority provisions of the Constitution—and so, there are. But notice how different this proposal is. Each of the other supermajority provisions of the Constitution—the ratification of treaties, conviction of a President on charges of impeachment, the override of a veto, the expulsion of a Member or proposing an amendment to the Constitution—each of those calls for a supermajority in circumstances in which the default, the status quo, is perfectly acceptable and can remain if no action is taken.

If we do not propose a constitutional amendment because there is no supermajority, the Constitution we have remains as it is. We can go without a treaty. We can decline to impeach a President. We can decline to override the President's veto. But we must pass a budget. There is no underlying status quo of no budget that is acceptable. So that, in this unusual event, we would distort and challenge the basic notion of majority rule.

Some have noted that, indeed—and you would know this better than I—such a provision could, in fact, worsen budget deficits. I would certainly defer to your judgment, Mr. Chairman, on this, but I could easily imagine circumstances in which a majority and a minority leader thought it a lot more difficult to assemble 50 votes for a stringent budget vastly increasing taxes and cutting cherished programs than it would be to outbid each other to assemble 60 votes, where, if you achieve 60 votes through a bidding war, there is simply no limit on how large the deficit may be under this amendment.

So, you have this odd distortion between the votes necessary to pass a budget and one which could work in quite unexpected ways.

But those, Mr. Chairman, are just introductory remarks to what I think is the central concern that would be appropriate for the Department of Justice to represent to you today. And that is the implications of this amendment for the basic structure of our constitutional government and to the status of our Constitution as positive law.

Yesterday, one of the thoughtful supporters of this amendment described it as a necessary, quote, mechanism of discipline for our budget situations. And yet, the very flaw of this proposal is that it has no mechanism. And it is that absence of a mechanism of enforcement that makes this amendment such a threat to our basic constitutional values.

The central problem is that this proposed amendment promises a balanced budget without providing any mechanism for accomplishing that goal. It simply declares that outlays shall not exceed expenditures, without ever explaining how this desirable state of affairs shall come about, and without specifying who among our Government officials shall be empowered to ensure that the amendment is not violated or, if violated, the Nation is brought into compliance.

Some have said that Congress will feel duty bound to comply with the requirements of this constitutional amendment. And I agree that each Member of Congress would properly consider himself or herself individually bound to comply with the amendment. The difficulty is that the amendment does not provide any mechanism by which those individual Members of Congress can coordinate their separate constitutional obligation to support a balanced budget.

Each Member of the Senate and House might conscientiously set about to comply with the amendment. One Senator might vote to cut military spending; another to reduce retirement or other entitlement benefits; a third to raise taxes. Each would have been faithful to his or her oath of office. But each of the measures may fail to gain a majority support and, therefore, the amendment would not be, and the requirements of the amendment would not be, met.

Or, of course, Congress might simply, by 55 votes, pass an amendment that does not, in fact, produce a situation in which outlays do not exceed receipts.

What are we then left with? What would the senior advisors to the President tell the President would be the case if this amendment to the Constitution of the United States was not being complied with by the functioning and processes of Government?

I think we would certainly expect a vast array of litigation to ensue. One of the first matters to be litigated would be whether the President was obligated or entitled to make his own unilateral cuts in budget or otherwise, unilaterally, to raise revenues. This would be a very difficult question. I would imagine that different courts would resolve the issue differently.

Some would say that the President alone would be in a position simply to order a cut, even where the law required otherwise, because now he had the higher obligation to ensure that the Constitution was complied with.

Others would argue that it would be extraordinary to infer from the silence of this amendment such a sweeping and radical change in the allocation authority among the branches of Government. And yet, the issue would be resolved by judges and courts.

Surely the most alarming aspect of the amendment is that by constitutionalizing the budget process, the amendment appears to mandate an extraordinary expansion of judicial authority. Both State and Federal judges may well be required to make fundamental decisions about taxing and spending—issues that they clearly lack the institutional capacity to resolve in any remotely satisfactory manner.

One would hope that the judiciary would consider these questions political and beyond their scope. This political question doctrine, simply put, is the doctrine that is designed to restrain the judiciary from inappropriate interference in the business of the other branches of Government.

On its face, that basic doctrine would appear to constrain the court's review of a balanced budget amendment. And yet, the most recent decisions of the Supreme Court suggest that the court would be prepared to resolve questions that might once have been considered political.

We have the example of United States v. Munoz-Flores from 1990, in which the court adjudicated a claim that an assessment was unconstitutional because it failed to comply with the provision that it originate in the House of Representatives.

I would have thought before Munoz-Flores that the court would decline to adjudicate and would accept the authentication of Congress. And I would have been wrong.

In 1992, the court considered the congressional resolution of how one goes about apportioning the last seat for the House of Representatives, what formula to choose when Congress decides which State gets that last 435th seat in Congress. The losing State challenged—Montana—the Department of Commerce. And I would have assumed that the court would have considered this, too, a political question, left for the final resolution of the Congress. And, again, I was wrong in that assumption. Because the court did go to the merits, did consider it judiciable, and did pass judgment on this question.

So I think that however wise or unwise it may be for the courts to be involved in these issues—and I tend to think it is unwise—it is nonetheless the case that no one can provide any assurances that once this amendment constitutionalizes the budget process the court will not consider itself obligated to resolve issues that arise under that amendment.

Let me mention, for example, one that I noted just last evening where I could readily imagine a justiciable case where the party has standing and a declaration invalidating a major act of Congress, if this amendment were law today.

Section 4 of Senate Joint Resolution 41 provides that no bill to increase revenue shall become law—no bill shall become law if it increases revenue—unless approved by a majority of the whole number of each House on a rollcall vote. It is often the case that there are major pieces of legislation, like the crime bill, that contain provisions which a litigant might later argue, increase revenue, by providing more effective enforcement mechanisms, by providing forfeiture provisions.

A criminal defendant would surely have standing, prosecuted or sentenced under omnibus crime legislation, to say that this bill contains a provision which would increase revenues, and, therefore, it falls under section 4 of this amendment and is unconstitutional unless Congress had been alert to ensure that its approval was by a majority of the whole number of each House on a rollcall vote. Once you constitutionalize an area you take the resolution of critical questions, critical concerns, out of the hands of the elected representatives of the people and leave them in the hands of courts that now would be under a mandate to resolve these issues.

There are others who might have standing. Taxpayers, to be sure. I have never, myself, fully been reconciled to Flast v. Cohen, but it remains the law. Many of the provisions of this amendment appear to be an express or specific limitation on the tax against spending power which would generate standing in taxpayers to litigate. Certainly, if the President took action to cut benefits, if he, say, cut Social Security across the board by 9 percent in order to comply with the amendment, a beneficiary would challenge the President's authority to do that, and that issue would wind up in litigation.

There is as yet nothing in this amendment proposal that would preclude the courts of getting involved in issues of taxation. Recall Missouri v. Jenkins from 1990, where the Supreme Court held that while a Federal district court had abused its discretion in directly imposing a tax increase to fund a school desegregation program, that the modifications made in that case by the Court of Appeals satisfied equitable and constitutional principles. Those modifications included leaving the details of the mandate to increase taxes to State authorities, while nonetheless imposing a mandate that must have been met.

If we have an amendment that for the first time constitutionalizes the taxing and spending process and creates a constitutional mandate which the courts are sworn on oath to uphold, there is simply no way that we can rule out the possibility that tax increases or spending cuts would be ordered by the judiciary. And I think we would all agree that that is a profound change in our constitutional system.

I believe it was in the 48th Federalist that Madison assured those who were about to vote on whether to ratify or reject the proposed Constitution, Madison assured them that the legislative department alone has access to the pockets of the people. That is a theme which is carried forward by Justice Anthony Kennedy in his dissent in Missouri v. Jenkins, where he writes of how jarring it is to our constitutional system to have unelected life tenure judges involved in the process of taxation. Justice Kennedy wrote, "It is not surprising that imposition of taxes by an authority so insulated from public comment and control can lead to deep feelings of frustration, powerlessness, and anger on the part of taxpaying citizens." We would not, I think—you would not want lightly to have put out a provision that so radically restructured the fundamental nature of our constitutional system in the face of such limited discussion about how these enforcement mechanisms would work.

Chairman BYRD. Mr. Dellinger, what was the vote in that case? The Supreme Court vote?

Mr. DELLINGER. I believe it was five to four. But I have not checked the vote. I believe it was five to four. I am seeing one of your very helpful staff members nodding behind you and assuring me. So it is a very close case, and I think the constitutional proposition set forth in section 1 would provide for many justices a more sound basis for being engaged in taxing and spending, where it says total outlays for any fiscal year shall not exceed total receipts. This is no longer part of the Pledge of Allegiance or a Fourth of July speech. We are talking about making this a part of the Constitution of the United States of America.

Mr. BROWN. I thank my friend for raising that point, and it proves precisely the point that I want to make. That case was not based on a balanced budget amendment. That case was based on the 14th amendment.

I might mention that the constitutional amendment before this body does not repeal the 14th amendment. The 14th amendment is in the Constitution. The cases are going to come up about the 14th amendment all the time. That was the whole point. The Assistant Attorney General had brought this specter of floods of litigation and his prime example was one that dealt not with the balanced budget amendment but dealt with the 14th amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON. He was saying that under the balanced budget amendment they would have the authority, that nothing would prevent the same authority exercised as in Missouri versus Jenkins.

Mr. BROWN. I think the point here is that the case he cited to express his concern was one that did not deal with the balanced budget amendment, and there are many of them that exist across the country.

Mr. JOHNSTON. No, but it dealt with the power of Federal courts to order taxation, which was what his concern was, which is what my concern is, and my amendment would prevent that. And why not do that?

Mr. BROWN. Let me suggest, the Senator's amendment deals not with the 14th amendment. It deals with appeals to courts and deals with appeals to courts on this amendment.

Now, the question is clearly this: Is the passage of a balanced budget amendment going to lead to a flood of litigation? When the Assistant Attorney General was asked to name a case, one case where you have had appeals to the courts and litigation in the courts about the numerous balanced budget amendments around the country, he was unable to name a single solitary case.

Now, Mr. President, those cases do exist. Colorado has had a constitutional amendment for a balanced budget in its constitution for over 100 years. We have had litigation on it. And the last litigation in Colorado on our balanced budget amendment was in 1933. It dealt with a peripheral case.

Now, this flood of litigation that the Assistant Attorney General is forecasting has not reared its head in the State of Colorado for over a half century, not a single case in over a half century. And the one that came up literally 60 years ago was one that did not deal directly with the issue of the balanced budget. It dealt with a peripheral issue.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Perhaps my friend did not hear the cases which I cited from around the country where courts have gotten involved in this. Looking to my own State of Louisiana, for example, in 1987, the court of appeals case, just to quote briefly, says:

Defendants contend that there exists no justiciable issues in this case because the courts should not "step in and substitute their judgment for that of the legislature and executive branches" in the budget process. We disagree. The determination of whether the legislature has acted within rather than outside its constitutional authority must rest with the judicial branch of government.

That is from Bruno v. Edwards, 517 So. 2d 818, a 1987 case. It is all over the country that this is done. I do not know what they have done in Colorado. They have done it in my State. They have done it in New York. They have done it in Georgia. They have done it in Wisconsin, California. All across the country they have taken balanced budget amendments, and there has been standing found and the courts have found those issues to be justiciable and indeed in a 14th-amendment case, Missouri versus Jenkins they ordered up taxes.

Mr. BROWN. Let me reclaim my time, if I could.

Mr. President, the statement that I made was not that it is impossible that you would ever have litigation. That certainly has never been my position, and it is not now. And if the Senator's point is that it is possible that you could have litigation over this question, I would certainly indicate to him I think he is right. It is possible you could have litigation come up.

What we are dealing with here, though, is a question of whether or not this is going to engender a flood of litigation, a plethora of litigation, as has been indicated. That simply is not an accurate statement if you look at what has happened in the States of our country. It is simply inaccurate, and the proof—I have given proof in my State. We have not had a case in 60 years, and the one we did have 60 years ago dealt with a side issue.

Now, the Missouri versus Jenkins case that was referred to was a State action, and it dealt with the 14th amendment. It was not a balanced budget amendment case. So you can raise all sorts of specters, but let me suggest a test for all of these. Many Members honestly and sincerely think it is a mistake to have a limitation on spending. That is a difference between men and women of good spirit. While I am one who thinks the record shows that this country is not going to survive without a change in the way we appropriate money, while I am one who believes that some control on spending is essential to this Nation providing leadership in a world economy in the next century, I recognize that people of good spirit and good intentions may not share that view.

But when the question is put, if this amendment is passed will people who currently oppose the amendment to the Constitution then vote in favor of the constitutional amendment, my understanding is that they will not. I think you have to ask yourself, is this amendment put forward to improve the constitutional amendment to balance the budget? I believe that is the intent of the Senator from Louisiana. It is a sincere effort to deal with a problem of excessive court involvement. I know he is sincere about that. I think the purpose of his amendment is, indeed, to improve this constitutional amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Will the Senator yield briefly on that point?

Mr. BROWN. I will in just a moment.

I think it is important to note that there does not appear to be anyone who is coming forward and saying look, if this amendment is adopted, we are willing to sign on and agree with you; limitations are important.

I yield to the distinguished Senator.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I just want to point out, right before this debate started there were, I believe, two Members who are undecided, on our side, who said in my presence right here that this amendment may determine how they vote. They will have to speak for themselves.

I will tell my colleague privately who they were. I do not think I should use their names. They can speak for themselves. My question is, are there those on your side of the aisle whose votes you lose by making clear the jurisdiction of the court? My guess is you do not, because this is almost identical to the Danforth amendment which was passed in the last Congress without objection.

Mr. BROWN. That is a fair and appropriate question. I suspect I have a responsibility to check on that.

Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator from Louisiana would be willing to respond to a question of mine?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN. I guess the question that occurs to me is, would it be the Senator's intent, if this constitutional amendment is passed and if Congress refuses to abide by that constitutional amendment, to preclude any enforcement of it through the courts?

Mr. JOHNSTON. No. As a matter of fact, the amendment very specifically allows the Congress to implement the—to authorize judicial relief. But only to the extent that Congress specifically authorizes it.

As I mentioned, the Congress may well want to, for example, say the court shall have declaratory relief; may be able to cut spending but not raise taxes; or you may want to have direct jurisdiction in the Supreme Court—original jurisdiction there, so as to expedite the hearings. There are all kinds of things we may want to do that would help clear up, for example, what happens in the bond market while these cases are moving through ever so slowly from all around the country. We ought to be able to deal with that in congressional legislation. I not only do not preclude that, I specifically authorize it in this amendment.

The difference between that and the way we are now is it is unclear whether or not the courts have that inherent authority. If the Congress does not act, then it is my belief, along with Laurence Tribe and Robert Bork and Professor Dellinger, et cetera, that they would probably have that jurisdiction. I say: Make it clear.

Mr. BROWN. At least my understanding is that Congress does have the ability to deal with that now.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The Congress does have the ability under, I believe it is section 5—section 6, to do that. That is clear.

However, upon failure to act by the Congress, then the courts would probably have this jurisdiction anyway. The difference between section 6 of the amendment as presently stated and under my amendment, my amendment says that unless Congress specifically acts, there is no jurisdiction in the court. Whereas section 6 says the Congress may act, but in the meantime it is unclear what the authority of the courts is.

Mr. BROWN. I wonder if the Senator has thought about spelling out in his amendment the kinds of appeals that he would have in mind? I think part of the concern as we look at the amendment is the concern that this could well end up sabotaging the balanced budget amendment, in that if the Senator spelled out the kinds of appeals he had in mind, it might go a long way toward generating support on it.

Mr. JOHNSTON. What Senator HATCH has stated is that the court would have no jurisdiction. He says that is clear. I think it is demonstrably unclear.

I think the question of how you spell out the jurisdiction and remedies ought really to take up some serious time of the Judiciary Committee: Bring in the legal experts, talk about whether you want to limit it to injunctive relief, whether you want to limit the power to enact taxes. All of those are very close and difficult legal questions that I think take a lot of thought, which are beyond my ability to spell out.

I think you can spell out the broad constitutional terms right here. The court shall or shall not have power. But we would preserve that power of the Congress to do that. The real question is: Should the court have the power to order taxes, provide injunctive relief, make decisions, declaratory judgments, if the Congress does not specifically authorize it?

I believe the answer to that is no. And that is why this amendment clears that up and makes it unambiguous.

Mr. BROWN. I might say, Mr. President, at least my understanding, and the Senator may want to correct me if he feels I have misphrased it, my understanding is Senator HATCH's view is that the courts could not interfere with the budgetary process but that Senator HATCH does feel the courts should be able to give some limited relief.

I think that may be a different way of describing the Senator's position. Obviously, Senator HATCH is quite able to describe his own position.

Mr. JOHNSTON. My description of Senator HATCH's position is that he would like to have it both ways to satisfy those who think there ought to be court relief and to satisfy those who think there should not be court relief, because he has some of those voting for the amendment. I understand the position of my friend, Senator HATCH, which is he wants to pass the amendment, and that is fine.

I have called into question the political calculus that says you lose votes by passing this amendment. I think you endanger, politically, this amendment by not clearing up this fundamental question.

Mr. BROWN. Let me say I am shocked to hear that any Member of the Senate would want to have it both ways. I cannot imagine—it seems unprecedented—that any august Member of this body would take that position.

Mr. JOHNSTON. One wants it this way and one wants it that way. You can sort of be all things to all people by saying: Well, it is clearly a settled question there is no standing to sue, so therefore the court will not get involved. But, on the other hand, there may be some cases that will need to come to the court, where the court will need to order some relief.

The classic, to me, was Attorney General Barr, who said—this is really rich. First of all, he said:

I do believe the Congress should consider including language in the amendment that would expressly limit judicial review to actions for declaratory judgment.

Then he goes on to say:

If, however, such a position would prove to be politically unpopular, I believe, for the reasons detailed in my written statement, that Congress can safely pass the amendment in its current form without undue concern that the courts will entertain large numbers of suits challenging Congress' action on the amendment or that, even if the courts do entertain some suits, they will order intrusive injunctive remedies.

I mean, he says well, they are probably not going to do it. If they do, there will not be many. And even if they do a few, they will not order intrusive injunctive relief.

What is intrusive? I would think Missouri versus Jenkins—if they got their foot in the door, and Solicitor General Barr says they might have some suits, having their foot in the door it does not take many orders of the Supreme Court increasing taxes to be pretty intrusive to the American people.

Mr. BROWN. I thank the Senator for his comments. I, of course, am shocked that any Member would try and have it both ways as we go forward.

But let me suggest—

Mr. LEVIN. While the Senator is expressing his shock, I wonder if he will yield for additional comment?

Mr. BROWN. No, I will not yield. Let me finish my statement, and then I will be glad to yield to the Senator.

It is quite clear there is a distinction between remedies that the courts can give and their ability to bring relief. That is well established. I do not think anyone questions it. The courts cannot interfere with the budgetary process because it is a political question. I think that is well established. It would violate the separation of powers. Those are quite clear. The real question I think you get down to with this is do you want to find a way to wiggle out from even the very, very modest levels of discipline that this constitutional amendment would bring?

My belief is that it is quite clear that the courts cannot get involved with a political question, that the talk about a 14th amendment case as applying here when it has not found that kind of action with regard to any of the balanced budget amendments that appear in any of the States is to raise a red herring. I do not mean it is not brought up in good faith. I share the view that the Missouri versus Jenkins case was not decided correctly. But it does not apply to the balanced budget amendments. It dealt with the 14th amendment.

Let me just say one other thing. Any American that honestly believes that we can continue on the way we have been I think is kidding themselves. Any American that can look at the last quarter-century in which we have not balanced the budget one single solitary time and think that we are going to solve this without changing the system is kidding themselves. Whether Democrat, Republican, liberal or conservative, you are driving this train off a cliff. You are taking the future of this Nation, the future of our children and running it off a cliff.

There may be Members who come to this floor and say, look. We can solve this thing. Just let us continue on the way we are, and say it sincerely. But I do not think it is true. I do not think you can look at what has happened and decide in any other spectrum that we have a train wreck ready to happen, that we are unable to help ourselves, that we have to have some discipline.

The question I think that is fairly asked is, is this the right remedy? The American people ought to look at the States that have constitutional amendments that require a balanced budget. In Colorado we have had the constitutional mandate to balance the budget for over 100 years. Of those over 100 years it has been balanced every single year. It has been balanced in good years and it has been balanced in bad years. It has been balanced when we have had a Republican administration and when we have had a Democratic administration. It has been balanced when we have had a Democratic legislature, and it has been balanced when we have had a Republican legislature, and it has been balanced because they had to do it. If you had not required them to do it, I guarantee it would not have gotten done.

In the last 25 years, we have not had a single, solitary year, not one, where you have had a balanced budget. I do not think there is anybody in this Chamber—or at least not very many—who would come to the floor and say we have done a good job setting priorities. If anybody is comfortable with a program to subsidize tobacco at the same time you have a program to urge people not to use it, I want them to come forth and tell me about it. That is ludicrous. Whether you are from a tobacco State or not, to subsidize a crop that you turn around and urge people not to use and bill the taxpayers for both ends of it is stupid. That is what we are doing.

We have a foreign assistance program that buys weapons for one country to counter the weapons we bought for another country which were given to counter the weapons we bought for the other country to begin with. That is nuts. We have refused to set priorities. That is just plain ludicrous.

We have a farm program that results in people growing crops on land that are better suited to other crops. Does that make any sense at all? We literally grow crops on ground that would never be used for that purposes if you did not have a program like that. That is the silliest thing I ever heard of. And we continue to do it.

If you think those examples are out of place, look at the rest of the way we spend our money. Does anybody believe that the Tea Tasting Board is a good idea? The National Jute Association or the International Jute Association? There is not one of these, there is not 10 of these, there is not 1,000 of these. There are thousands and thousands and thousands, and the reason they exist is we have not set priorities.

The facts are these: We have not balanced the budget once in 25 years. We have not balanced it when we have had a recession and we have not balanced it when we have had a boom.

The President who says we can solve this without a balanced budget amendment sent us a budget the other day. The estimates I believe are inaccurate. But even if you accept the estimates, which incidentally include a suggestion that we are not going to have a recession in the next 5 years—and, if anybody wants to make a bet on that one, I would be glad to take their money—even with assumptions that you are not going to have a recession again, even with the assumptions that the rate of inflation is going to have less of an impact on increasing spending than it will on raising revenues. Let me be specific about that.

They assume a rate of inflation that will increase revenue at a higher rate than you will increase the cost of programs. One level of inflation, and they assume that you are going to have a higher level of inflation for increasing revenue than you will have for increasing programs. It would be laughable if it were not so serious. Even with assumptions that by anybody's definition are creative, even with assumptions that say we are not going to have any new spending programs—and we have not had a Congress when you did not have new spending programs that I can recall—even with wild assumptions, even with no new programs, even with no emergencies, even with no waivers for the budget, the deficit continues on for a level of a couple hundred billion dollars. And CBO says that it is going to go up to above $400 billion by 10 years out.

That is from the person who says we can solve this legislatively. It is nonsense. It is nonsense. To say no to a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution is to say no to our future, to gut this constitutional amendment from ever being able to be enforced is a travesty in this Member's view.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. If we are going to deal with this issue, we need an alternative. I have to tell you I think this balanced budget amendment that is before this body is far too weak. Colorado says you have to have a balanced budget. And we balanced it. This says you have to have a balanced budget unless 60 percent of Members vote to waive it. It is the softest, weakest, most ineffective balanced budget amendment I have seen. There may be others in the States that are weaker than this. But I do not know about them.

This very, very, very modest form of discipline apparently is too much for people who believe that the future of our country is on uncontrolled spending. But let me tell you, Mr. President. This issue is a lot more important than Colorado or Louisiana or Michigan. This issue goes to the very heart of the future of this Nation and the future of the men and women who have their children and their grandchildren who are going to be raised in this country.

This issue is a question of whether or not we are able to control the waste that has given us the biggest national deficit in the history of this country or the history of any country in the history of the world.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. BROWN. Let me finish my statement, if I could, because it seems to me we are overlooking the real problem. The real problem here is an appetite by this Congress for uncontrolled spending. The real problem here is an unwillingness to live by any limitation.

Mr. President, I want to relate a fact to the Members in this body, because I think every one of them knows it and shares it. I came to Congress in 1981. We passed a budget, and the budget was not balanced. But what it said is the next year out it is going to be balanced. We are not balanced this year. But give us another year, and we will have it balanced. We had a plan to get there. We had limitations on spending, and projected tax revenue. What happened? What happened was this: Congress appropriated more money than they had allowed for in their own budget. They waived their own Budget Act. The fact was our estimates were overblown, and we exceeded our own spending limits. You would say, OK. That is one year out of one. That is not too bad. But what happened the next year? The next year we adopted a budget with the phony estimates in it. And that is exactly what they were. They were phony, and they were Reagan estimates, and I called them phony at the time. We adopted a budget with phony estimates in it, and Congress exceeded its own spending budget again. And everybody said next year. The next year we adopted a budget, and it said after a couple or 3 years we are going to get down to a balanced budget et. It had phony estimates in it, and Congress exceeded the amount that they allowed themselves to spend.

Mr. President, that has happened every single, solitary year. It happened in 1981, it happened in 1982, and it happened in 1983 and 1984, it happened in 1985, 1986, and 1987, 1988, 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, and 1994. Does anyone honestly believe it is not going to happen again and again and again? If you do not believe it look at the President's budget. Look at the assumptions that are in the President's budget. Come to this floor and honestly tell me you think we are on the right path.

The simple facts are these: We are hoodwinking America. We have passed budgets every time in the last 15 years, and every time those budgets were not realistic, and every time those budgets were not followed and they are not going to be followed.

We are debating an amendment that says we are going to eliminate the Court's ability to have any discipline here. It does not surprise me that this Congress does not want to have discipline over spending. But if anybody cares about the future of their kids and grandkids and what this country stands for, then they had better figure out a way to bring discipline to this place and figure out a way to have accurate estimates, better figure out a way to have us change our ways, because the reality is that this is shameful. The reality is that we have taken the future of the strongest, greatest Nation on the face of the Earth and we have thrown it in the trash because people did not have the courage and the willingness to stand up and eliminate wasteful spending and set priorities.

I do not know how many people watch Presidential trips, but I can tell you it happens both in Democratic and Republican administrations. You have so many people that go with the President on trips, and it is shameful. Any one who looks at the way Congress spends its money has to be shocked. Do you really need elevator operators on automatic elevators? Are Members really unable to push the buttons themselves? Do you really need a staff that is nine times bigger than any other country in the world has for its deliberative body? Incidentally, that is what our staff is, said the Congressional Research Service the last time they did a study on it. Does anybody believe we need 1,100 police officers on Capitol Hill? I mean, that is two, 2½ for every Member of Congress.

Mr. President, this Congress is out of control. We desperately need controls. We desperately need discipline. To adopt an amendment that eliminates our ability to have this measure enforced, I think, turns a blind eye to the problem the American people have. I do not know whether this constitutional amendment is going to pass, but I will tell you one thing, the American people are not going to watch their future thrown down the drain.

This is a lot more important than Democrats or Republicans, a lot more important than party. It deals with the future of our country and of our children. I do not think anybody who believes you can continue on with the kind of abuse we have had for this system is looking at the world right. I have listened to the debate on the floor. I hear Members come to the floor say, goodness, the problem is not with Congress. The Congress' budgets have been less than what the President has asked for. That is right, but it is not accurate. The truth is, yes, the budgets Congress has passed have not been as large as what the Executive—sometimes—has asked for, but left unsaid in that is the fact that Congress has appropriated more than either they budgeted or what the President asked for in budgeting.

To say that and describe the problem in that way simply misleads people. Congress has not been responsible when it has come to our budget. Yes, we have adopted budgets that look good at the time, but we did it with phony estimates and we turned around and ignored them.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I think the point of all of this—and then I will yield—is simply this: If we are looking for an answer to this problem that avoids discipline, that avoids controls, that avoids limits, we are going to fail.

I yield the floor.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BROWN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. JOHNSTON. My colleague made a powerful speech—and I really mean that—for a balanced budget. But I do not understand him to be saying that the court ought to be the one to order a balanced budget, to order a tax increase, or to order spending cuts; am I correct in that?

Mr. BROWN. Well, my belief is that political questions will not come out of the jurisdiction of the court. It seems to me there is an area for court jurisdiction here—enforcement.

Mr. JOHNSTON. But is the Senator familiar with the fact that, in 1982, two former attorneys general, Senators GORTON and Rudman, offered an amendment of the same import of my amendment today, and that although it was defeated, 12 Republicans who are still serving in the Senate voted for the amendment, including Senators CHAFEE, COHEN, DOLE, GORTON, HATFIELD, KASSEBAUM, LUGAR, MURKOWSKI, PRESSLER, ROTH, SPECTER, and STEVENS—that list includes some of the best lawyers in the Senate—and the point is, on this question of whether the courts ought to have jurisdiction—I think my friend would agree with me—is one that really merits some very serious thought; would the Senator not think?

Mr. BROWN. I certainly agree. In terms of the other Members the distinguished Senator mentioned, I would leave it to them to defend their votes. I have enough trouble defending my own.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Has the Senator voted on this question before?

Mr. BROWN. I would be glad to check the record and let the Senator know.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I would not think the Senator made the mistake of voting against this kind of amendment before. I do not believe he has, because it was passed in the last Congress, without objection. The Danforth amendment was passed in the last Congress, without objection. It truly has been a bipartisan amendment, where Senators on both sides have seen the real need to limit the intrusiveness of the courts. The power of the courts, once granted, can extend to raising taxes, as well as cutting budgets, and they are not elected. They do not represent the people and they should not be able to do it, except to the extent that we in the Congress give them the power to do it.

I hope the Senator will come to my point of view. That has nothing to do with whether you are for this balanced budget amendment or not—just as those Republican Senators who voted in 1982 for the Rudman-Gorton amendment were supporters of the balanced budget amendment but wanted to limit the intrusive powers of the courts to get involved in this matter.

Mr. BROWN. Let me suggest to my friend that while 1982 was not a long time ago, it was before the Lujan case, which occurred in 1992 and which, obviously, affects thinking in this area. Clearly, these Members will be able to speak for themselves and defend it as they wish. We have other requests for time, so I will yield the floor.

Mr. LEVIN. Will the Senator from Colorado yield for a question?

Mr. BROWN. Our time is limited. I will yield the floor, and I know the Senator will be recognized in due course by the Chair.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. I wonder if the Senator from Colorado will respond to some questions that I have of him on my time now. One of the things which the Senator from Colorado epitomizes is honesty and straightforwardness, and he, with great feeling, I think, expressed the view of all of the Members of this body, which is that we should not kid ourselves, that we ought to be honest. Honesty is something which he has reflected throughout his career, and I admire him for what he says, what he believes, what he feels and what he represents.

The Senator has made some statements about the balanced budget amendment and how it is, in some respects, quite weak and not self-enforcing which, frankly, I happen to share, but that is not the purpose of my question. The purpose of my question goes to the Johnston amendment and whether or not we should be honest as to whether or not the courts are going to be able to enforce the balanced budget amendment in the absence of legislation, pursuant to section 6.

The Johnston amendment makes it very clear that we are able to authorize the court, if we adopt enforcement and implementation legislation, pursuant to section 6, to do whatever we authorize that court to do. But in the absence of implementation legislation, setting forth the authority of the court, the question is, honestly, what is the intention of this amendment? There is ambiguity, and if we are looking for honesty—and I believe we all are—we should clarify that issue. There is no reason to write a constitutional amendment which is ambiguous at the heart of the amendment which is: How is it going to be enforced? That is the heart of it. We can make all of the great statements we want about balancing the budget, and we have during the early 1980's.

But the key to a constitutional amendment is how it is going to be enforced. The key to this constitutional amendment, as has been said over and over again by the sponsors, to section 6 which is the implementing legislation, implementing legislation which would be required of a future Congress.

I have problems with laying this on the doorstep of a future Congress, because I think we ought to adopt implementing legislation. I do not think we ought to kick this can down the road up to 7 years. But that is a different speech. That goes to the question of just how effective this is as a budget balancing tool.

My question of my friend from Colorado goes to the intent of the sponsors of this amendment as to court enforcement, and I have two questions. First, is it the intent, is it his understanding of the intent, that Members of Congress would have standing to file suit to enforce this constitutional amendment?

Mr. BROWN. Well, the Senator is asking for a legal interpretation. I would be glad to supply that and I will supply it for both the Senator and for the RECORD.

Let me say I think it is worthwhile noting here that none of the amendments to the Constitution—and, as you know, we have a number—have included the language as suggested by the distinguished Senator from Louisiana. What is being suggested is different from what we have done with any other constitutional amendment.

Second, we did have a proposal last year, I understand, that did limit appeals to declaratory judgments. That is the first time I am aware of—the distinguished Senators may wish to correct me—it is the first time I am aware of that you have had that added to a proposed amendment to the Constitution.

Finally, let me suggest, I think it is section 2 of this amendment that deals with the question of whether or not those questions are left open or vague or unanswered. At least I think a fair reading of that section indicates that there is real guidance within the amendment itself.

Mr. LEVIN. Specifically in section 2, what is the Senator referring to?

Mr. BROWN. Let me get that section for you.

Section 2 reads as follows:

The limit on the debt of the United States held by the public shall not be increased unless three-fifths of the whole number of each House shall provide by law for such an increase by rollcall vote.

That, at least as I read the constitutional amendment, is where the real discipline of this matter is.

Mr. LEVIN. My friend from Colorado points to something which has also been pointed to by other sponsors of this legislation, which is section 2. But is it not true that section 2, in terms of that particular type of debt limit, requires Congress to act?

Mr. BROWN. Sure.

Mr. LEVIN. So that even section 2 depends upon implementation by Congress of a limit on the publicly held debt; is that correct?

Mr. BROWN. I think the value of this, I say to my friend, is that while you are looking for a device that controls this and avoids ways for people to wiggle out of it, by focusing on what people borrow, we think that may be the single most effective enforcement device there can be.

Mr. LEVIN. But my friend from Colorado is not responding to my question, which is: Is it not true that there is no current debt limit, as defined in section 2, which is a debt limit on the publicly held debt and, in order to establish such a debt limit, legislation would have to be passed?

So again, it depends on a future Congress to establish a limit on the so-called publicly held debt, a limit which has not heretofore been established by statute; is that correct?

Mr. BROWN. I think the Senator makes a valid point. There is no question that future Congresses obviously have to be involved in this decision, whether it is the discipline or whether it is the definition.

Mr. LEVIN. The discipline which my friend refers to again depends on future Congress acting.

I ask unanimous consent that a letter from the Attorney General to me stating exactly that be now printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, DC, February 14, 1995.

Hon. CARL LEVIN,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR LEVIN: This responds to your letter to the Attorney General of February 14, 1995, concerning the proposed Balanced Budget Amendment to the Constitution. In that letter you asked whether legislation setting a "limit on the debt of the United States held by the public" would have to be passed before Section 2 would have any force. Section 2 states that any increase in the limit on such debt must be passed by a three-fifths rollcall vote of the whole number of each House of Congress.

We have consulted the Office of Management and Budget, which has advised us that there is at present no statutory limit on the "debt of the United States held by the public," the type of debt described in Section 2. Rather, there is a limit on the "public debt," which includes debt held by the public and certain other debt, such as debt held by the Social Security Trust Fund. Unless and until Congress passes legislation establishing a limit on the type of debt described in the amendment, the strictures against increasing this debt limit would have no effect.

Please do not hesitate to contact this Office if we can be of assistance on this or any other matter.

Sincerely,

SHEILA ANTHONY,
Assistant Attorney General.

Mr. LEVIN. Because over and over again we have heard that section 2 is the discipline. In fact, section 2 is only operative if a future Congress establishes something called a limit on publicly held debt—publicly held debt.

Mr. BROWN. I would beg to differ with my friend. I think the language of section 2 is quite clear, not vague. "The limit on the debt of the United States held by the public shall not be increased unless three-fifths of the whole number of each House shall provide by law for such an increase by rollcall vote." Obviously, it involves the Congress in several extents. One, of course, is the waiver should they vote—

Mr. LEVIN. If I could interrupt my friend again. That is not the point I am making. Any increase in that debt would have to be voted by 60 percent of the Senate. That is clear in the language. But the establishment of the limit itself would have to be, in the first instance, created by the Congress, because there is no such limit at the moment. Would the Senator from Colorado agree with that?

Mr. BROWN. I think the Senator is right to point out that defining what the terms "debt of the United States held by the public" is indeed something that requires it.

But I would point out—

Mr. LEVIN. It requires Congress to act; is that correct?

Mr. BROWN. Yes. Indeed, I think the Senator is correct. But I would point out on that that if that is the Senator's concern, let me suggest I think the words of that section are very clear. I do not mean to suggest to the Senator that creative minds that abound in this Congress and our courts could not find a way to misinterpret that. But I suspect that even the most creative minds would be pressed to find that language vague or unreasonable.

Mr. LEVIN. I think it would be quite simple, actually, to have an argument as to what is meant by that term.

Now to get back to my question. Is it the intent of the Senator from Colorado that a Member of Congress would have standing to file suits to enforce this constitutional provision?

Mr. BROWN. That is an appropriate legal question. I would be glad to supply the Senator a legal memo to that effect, and I would be glad to put it in the RECORD.

Mr. LEVIN. In that case, I will ask a second question. I think these are critical questions and I think we should get answers to them from the sponsors.

Is it the intent of the Senator from Colorado that a court could invalidate an individual appropriation or a tax act?

Mr. BROWN. Let me speak in reference to section 2. It seems to me, at least in regard to section 2, the device here that I think is so helpful, at least I like it very much, is that it limits Congress' ability to continue to borrow money in that regard and that indeed does have an impact on one's ability to fund new programs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time yielded to the Senator from Michigan has expired.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator from Louisiana would yield me 5 additional minutes?

Mr. JOHNSTON. I so yield.

Mr. LEVIN. My question to the Senator from Colorado is: Is it the intention under this amendment that courts could invalidate the individual appropriations or tax acts? The Senator from Colorado repeatedly said that it is not the intention of the Congress, it is not the intention of this balanced budget amendment to have courts interfering with the budgetary process. That is what the Senator from Colorado has represented. It is not the intention of this amendment to have courts interfere in the budgetary process?

My question is: Is it the intention of the sponsors or of the Senator from Colorado that a court could invalidate an individual appropriations or a tax act?

Mr. BROWN. I am sorry.

Mr. LEVIN. Does the Senator wish me to repeat the question?

Mr. BROWN. Would you please?

Mr. LEVIN. Is it the intention of the sponsors or the Senator from Colorado that a court could invalidate an individual appropriations or tax act?

Mr. BROWN. It strikes me that the beauty of section 2 is that it places the limit on the amount we can borrow, which places then back in the hands of Congress the discretion as to what we fund and the limit discipline it places on us is our limit to add to the debt. So at least my impression would be Congress would retain the ability to make a decision as to where their limited funds would be allocated.

Mr. LEVIN. Let me ask my friend from Illinois, because I do not think that is responsive to the question.

The Senator from Illinois is on the floor. Is it the intention of the sponsors of this amendment that the court, without further authority under section 6, would have the power to invalidate an individual appropriation or a tax act?

Mr. SIMON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, in response, my instinct is that unless there was a blatant violation of the intent of this amendment, the courts would not get involved. We are not dealing with something like the 14th amendment where it is somewhat amorphous.

Mr. LEVIN. The words "blatant violation" are all that have to be alleged in a suit brought in a court to then allow the invalidation of an appropriation or tax act.

Is that what the Senator from Illinois is saying?

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, the answer is we can imagine all kinds of scenarios. But the reality is that we want to handle this ourselves. We do not want the courts to get involved. If some future Congress were just to blatantly say, "We will ignore the Constitution," then the courts might get involved.

The courts have only been involved in a tax matter in the Jenkins case in Kansas City where we have a different constitutional principle involved.

In this amendment we are not talking about very precise things, but about a self-enforcing mechanism.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, since we are on my time, I say to the Senator from Illinois, I think the Senator from Pennsylvania wants to comment.

Let me tell Members what the reason is that I am pressing folks on this. The key sponsor of this legislation in the House, Representative SCHAEFER of Colorado, who is the lead sponsor of Schaefer-Stenholm, had the language that we are debating now. He said the following: "A Member of Congress or an appropriate administration official probably would have standing to file suit challenging legislation that subverted the amendment."

I want to read all three of these comments of Representative SCHAEFER and contrast this to the assurances that the Senator from Utah, I think in good conscience, gave as to his intention that there is no standing to sue on the part of Members of Congress, that the courts will not be able to intervene. And yet the sponsor on the House side states a very, very different intent, which is the reason we should adopt the Johnston amendment, because there is not only ambiguity among law professors, there are differences between sponsors on this side and sponsors on the House side.

The second statement of Representative SCHAEFER: "The courts * * * could invalidate an individual appropriation or tax act." Think about that. Here we are told there is no intention for courts to be involved in the budgetary process. The principal sponsor on the House side says under this amendment a court could invalidate an individual appropriation or tax act. If that is not meddling in the budgetary process, I do not know what it is.

Finally—I think my time is run out. I yield the floor.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the statements of Representative SCHAEFER, along with the accompanying letters, be inserted in the RECORD at this time.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,

Washington, DC, February 14, 1995.

Hon. JANET RENO,

Attorney General of the United States, Washington, DC.

DEAR MADAM ATTORNEY GENERAL: Enclosed is a copy of the proposed Constitutional Amendment relative to the balanced budget. My question is the following:

The Committee Report states (p. 8) that the amendment is "self-enforcing" because of Section 2, which requires a three-fifths vote to increase "[t]he limit on the debt of the United States held by the public." Is Section 2 self-enforcing, or must Congress act pursuant to Section 6 to adopt enforcement and implementation legislation for this provision to be legally enforceable?

I would appreciate your very prompt reply, given the fact that we are debating this amendment at the current time.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

CARL LEVIN.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,

Washington, DC, February 14, 1995.

Hon. CARL LEVIN,

U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR LEVIN: This responds to your letter to the Attorney General of February 14, 1995, concerning the proposed Balanced Budget Amendment to the Constitution. Assistant Attorney General.

STATEMENTS OF REPRESENTATIVE DAN SCHAEFER, LEAD SPONSOR OF THE SCHAEFER-STENHOLM SUBSTITUTE TO HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 1

A member of Congress or an appropriate Administration official probably would have standing to file suit challenging legislation that subverted the amendment.

* * * * *

The courts could make only a limited range of decisions on a limited number of issues. They could invalidate an individual appropriation or tax Act. They could rule as to whether a given Act of Congress or action by the Executive violated the requirements of this amendment.

* * * * *

... no role for the courts is foreseen beyond that of making a determination as to whether an Act of Congress ... is unconstitutional and a court order not to execute such Act. . . .

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I yield 15 minutes to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Louisiana which would make it clear that the balanced budget amendment cannot be used to turn over to the judicial system the responsibilities of managing the fiscal obligations and priorities of the United States.

The amendment of the Senator from Louisiana would make clear we do not intend that unelected judges would assume the power to set tax rates or impound Social Security checks of elderly citizens in order to comply with the constitutional mandate that is created through the balanced budget amendment.

Mr. President, there is probably no more significant amendment that will be offered during this entire debate on the balanced budget amendment. It goes to the very heart and structure of our system of government which we established over two centuries ago.

Unless the Johnston amendment is adopted, the constitutional amendment we are debating could be construed to authorize Federal and State courts to intervene into the most political decisions now made by elected officials, including decisions about levying taxes and spending the revenues raised on national priorities that are established through our democratic process.

Instead, Mr. President, individuals appointed, not elected, to lifetime judicial seats could become intimately involved in these matters. The independent judiciary, of course, is as important to our system as any other element, one of the most important. We do intend that our judges be free from partisan pressures. We intend that they make decisions based upon the law, not upon opinion polls or election returns.

That structure is also based on something else, Mr. President. It is based upon the assumption that those courts with unelected leadership will not be given the responsibility for actions which are intended and reserved for elected officials, those in the legislative and executive branches.

If the balanced budget amendment is added to the Constitution without an amendment which clarifies and limits the potential role of the courts in establishing fiscal priorities for the Federal Government, we will have suddenly opened the door to one of the most radical restructurings of our system at any time in our history.

I assume in the last Congress, Mr. President, concerns about this issue led to the adoption of the so-called Danforth amendment which specifically restricted the role of the courts in enforcement of the balanced budget amendment to the issuance only of declaratory judgments. We do not have that here in this amendment now. We do not have that restriction. Indeed, some of the most stalwart proponents of the amendment have conceded that without clear limitations, either in the amendment itself or the implementing legislation, the judiciary could become intimately involved in actually directing compliance with the balanced budget amendment.

Now, of course, the response to these concerns has uniformly been, "Do not worry about the details; we will fix it later." That is what we are told about all of our amendments. Repeatedly it is asserted that this issue can be addressed simply by implementing legislation.

Now, the Judiciary Committee report accompanying Senate Joint Resolution 1 suggests that the silence of the amendment on the issue of judicial review is somehow a good thing, a virtue, asserting that through this silence the authors have refused to establish a congressional sanction for the Federal courts to involve themselves in fundamental macroeconomic and budgetary questions while not undermining their equally fundamental obligation to say what the law is.

The proponent goes on to say to the extent that we do have any judicial intrusion, it can be reigned in later on by having implementing legislation.

Mr. President, that is the classic sidestepping of critical decisions that has engendered public disdain for this body and for elected officials in general. It is irresponsible and an abdication of our most awesome duties to have failed to address this issue in a forthright and honest manner.

The role of the courts in enforcement of this amendment ought to be resolved now, not sometime later. This is when we send it out to the States, not later.

Mr. President, this entire debate over the balanced budget amendment has become somewhat troubling. We seem to be rushing the proposal through to meet an arbitrary deadline that was originally set up as a campaigning proposition. There has been little serious debate over the words of the proposed constitutional amendment. We are constantly diverted from any real discussion of the problems that should be addressed before this language is placed in the Constitution to a generalized discussion of Federal deficits and their impact on the national economy.

Mr. President, I suggest that for a moment we set aside these generalities and focus on the language of the balanced budget amendment that we are considering, and specifically the role of the courts. I strongly urge the supporters of the amendment to consider the Johnston amendment on the merits and not just vote it down again because of some prearranged agreement to defeat any and all amendments. That is not appropriate when we are talking about the most fundamental issue of the separation of powers that this country is founded upon. It is not appropriate, not in the U.S. Senate.

This is a constitutional amendment we are debating and we may well be sending on to the States. We better take the time to ensure that we have not created unintended consequences by careless wording of the amendment.

Mr. President, the ratification of the balanced budget amendment without the Johnston amendment will result in judicial involvement in its implementation. I think that is virtually without question.

The Constitution of the United States has been amended only 27 times in over 2 centuries. Ten of those amendments comprise the Bill of Rights. Three others, the 13th, 14th, and 15th, arose out of the Civil War.

Our Founding Fathers made it difficult to amend our great national charter, and rightly so.

A constitution is designed to endure for the ages, not merely reflect the passing issues of the day.

Once altered, it is very difficult to change.

For example, the 18th amendment, Prohibition, was ratified in 1919. It was a mistake. It inserted government into the private lives of citizens. It was widely flaunted and bred disrespect for the law. It was not repealed until 1933 by the 21st amendment. It took 14 years to undo that error.

An amendment to the Constitution is not like any ordinary legislative matter that we can change next year when we find out that it does not work exactly as intended.

The Constitution is not something we can tinker with and adjust from one Congress to the next.

If the 104th Congress is intent upon adding the balanced budget amendment to the Constitution of the United States, then we better do it right.

We better take the time to ensure that we have not created unintended consequences by careless wording of the amendment.

Let us not allow legitimate frustrations over the Federal deficit inadvertently lead to a radical restructuring of our entire system of governance.

Mr. President, that ratification of the balanced budget amendment without the Johnston amendment will result in judicial involvement in its implementation is virtually without question.

Legal scholars from left to right agree that the balanced budget constitutional amendment will force the courts into potentially endless litigation over its enforcement.

Former Solicitor General and Federal Judge Robert Bork said,

The result . . . would likely be hundreds, if not thousands, of lawsuits around the country, many of them on inconsistent theories and providing inconsistent results.

Kathleen Sullivan, professor of law at Stanford University similarly observed,

. . . enforcement of the Balanced Budget Amendment would inevitably wind up on the doorstep of the state and federal courts, and ultimately at the Supreme Court.

She further testified,

. . . the possibilities for litigation over balanced budget compliance are staggering. Judges [might be asked] to enforce balanced budgets either by enjoining excess spending or by ordering tax increases, the latter possibility no mere phantom after recent decisions by the Supreme Court upholding . . . federal judicial power to require the levy of a tax.

Yale University professor of law, Burke Marshall, had this to say:

I have little doubt that the courts ultimately would, however reluctantly, exercise the power of judicial review over such questions as the meaning of the language [used in the Amendment].

Although some may hope that the dictates of the amendment would be self-enforcing and self-policing by the Congress, there is little basis for such speculation. There is a virtual endless list of situations where litigation is likely to result from efforts to interpret or enforce the amendment.

Courts will be asked to interpret the language of the amendment, including such questions as what constitutes total outlays and total revenues. These terms are not self-evident and are not likely to be self-evident to future generations.

Litigation will surely ensue to determine what activities are or are not covered by the amendment.

Almost unbelievably, the Judiciary Committee report, for example, makes the remarkable observation that the electrical power program of one quasi-public entity, the Tennessee Valley Authority, would not be covered by the amendment since its operations are entirely the responsibility of the electric ratepayers. Not only is the naming of this one agency remarkable, it clearly opens the door to many other quasi-public entities seeking similar status. As the author of legislation introduced on January 4, S. 43, to terminate some of the public funding of TVA programs and develop privatization plans for this entity, because I wanted to identify and show where I would create the balanced budget. I am both intrigued and perplexed by the decision to specifically exempt the Tennessee Valley Authority as a part of this balanced budget amendment process that supposedly is neutral as to what would and would not be included.

Courts will be asked to hear challenges to the executive branch efforts to carry out the constitutional mandates. For example, if outlays exceed revenues in any fiscal year, the President could argue on constitutional grounds that it is necessary to impound funds and take other actions unilaterally to meet the requirements of balanced budget amendment. As Presidents test these powers, surely those affected will seek judicial review.

For example, during the 1970's there was substantial litigation over the Presidential assertion of impoundment authority. Roughly 80 cases were decided by the courts on impoundment questions, generally against the broad interpretation of such power advanced by the Nixon administration. Passage of the Impoundment Control Act of 1974 brought that litigation to rest.

Yet, backed by a new constitutional balanced budget amendment, many believe that the President would have not only the authority to impound appropriated funds, but would have an obligation to do so under the constitutional mandate.

Surely, individuals whose retirement checks are withheld or Federal employees whose salaries are reduced by executive fiat would very likely have standing to sue under this amendment.

Louis Fisher of the Congressional Research Services noted in testimony to the Senate Appropriations Committee that the experience in the States indicates that courts could well be asked to monitor spending, taxing, and indebtedness actions.

Mr. Fisher observed, "If state actions are a guide, judges will not be shy about tackling budgetary and fiscal questions, no matter how complex."

Former Solicitor General Charles Fried also testified before the Appropriations Committee that "[t]he experience of state court adjudication under state constitutional provisions that require balanced budgets and impose debt limitations * * * shows that courts can get intimately involved in the budget process and that they almost certainly will."

Cases will also arise when Members of Congress seek to challenge the actions of the executive branch.

One of my former professors, Prof. Archibald Cox, observed, "There is * * * substantial likelihood that the Federal courts will be drawn in by congressional suits."

The Supreme Court has recently assumed that either House has standing to sue to enjoin action rendering its vote ineffectual, Burke versus Barnes (1987).

Thus, if the President impounded funds appropriated by Congress on the grounds that anticipated revenues had fallen short of projections, either House might challenge such action and, again, as the Senator from Louisiana so well points out, we have the strong likelihood of the courts being involved. Although the question of when individual Members of Congress might have standing to pursue such actions remains open, the standing of Congress itself to assert its prerogatives seems clearly established.

Finally, there are strong arguments to be made that individual taxpayers could have standing to bring suit to challenge a failure to enforce the amendment.

Harvard Law Prof. Archibald Cox observed in his testimony before the Appropriations Committee last year that if the Supreme Court's formulation of standing in Flast versus Cohen, the seminal taxpayer standing case, is taken at face value, a Federal taxpayer would surely have standing to challenge an expenditure under the proposed amendment upon the allegation that it had resulted or would result in a violation of the specific limitation imposed by section 1 of the amendment.

Certainly, taxpayer suits in the State courts are well-known, and the amendment does not restrict litigation to the Federal court system. Absent a provision placing exclusive jurisdiction in the Federal court system, the issue of State court litigation remains a viable option.

This nightmare of litigation will likely have three major results.

First, it will insert judges into policymaking functions that are unprecedented, for which they have no experience or judicially manageable standards to guide their decisions. That courts would take on such tasks as levying taxes is not mere speculation; the 1990 decision of the Supreme Court in Missouri versus Jenkins, upholding a district court decision directing a local school district to levy a tax in order to support a target school required in a desegregation order makes it clear that this is a very real possibility.

Second, it would entail a radical and fundamental transformation of roles assigned to the different branches of government in this country.

As Nicholas Katzenbach testified,

* * * to open up even the possibility that judges appointed for life might end up making the most fundamental of all political decision is not only an unprecedented shift of constitutional roles and responsibilities but one that should be totally unacceptable in a democratic society.

Third, and equally important, this shift in power to the judiciary could do incalculable damage to the judiciary itself. As Federal courts take on the task of enjoining the expenditure of funds appropriated by Congress or requiring the levy of specific taxes, the backlash toward judicial fiats could be enormous. Ultimately, the very effectiveness of the courts in preserving constitutional rights and liberties of citizens could be undermined.

The answer to these concerns which has been made by the opponents of this amendment has been singularly unsatisfactory. Repeatedly, we are told, "we will deal with the problem in the implementing legislation."

Well, Mr. President, the short answer is what if Congress fails to agree on implementing legislation?

What if the President vetoes any implementing legislation passed by Congress and Congress lacks the two-thirds majority needed to override such a veto?

Is there any serious doubt that the judicial branch has the ability to enforce a constitutional mandate even in the absence of implementing legislation?

It is hornbook law that the Federal courts have the duty to enforce constitutional requirements.

There is no implementing legislation for the first amendment, or the fourth amendment or the sixth amendment. The power of the courts to enforce the constitution arises from the constitution itself, as was held in Marbury versus Madison, very early in our country's history.

As Assistant Attorney General and former Duke Law School Professor Walter Dellinger testified before the Senate Judiciary Committee last month,

Section 6 of the Balanced Budget Amendment does give Congress affirmative authority to legislate implementing legislation. But unless that authority is deemed exclusive, it does not oust the courts of jurisdiction to act without any implementing legislation, just as the courts are able to act under section 1 of the 14th Amendment.

Mr. President, before I conclude, let me address one last argument, the political question argument, advanced by proponents of the amendment who believe that judicial intervention into the budget process is not likely to follow ratification of the amendment. The proponents argue that the courts are likely to use the political question doctrine to duck deeper involvement into budgetary decision making. The constitutional scholars, pointed out before the committee that the questions which are likely to arise under the balanced budget amendment simply do not meet the criteria established under Baker versus Carr (1962), which lays out the political question doctrine. Moreover, recent cases have suggested a narrowing of the political question doctrine.

In light of the legislative history of this amendment and the presumption by both proponents and opponents that the courts will have some powers to hear cases involving its implementation, there is little likelihood that the political question doctrine will shield the amendment from judicial review.

Mr. President, in the Federalist No. 78, Alexander Hamilton warned that "there is no liberty, if the power of judging be not separated from the legislative and executive powers."

If the Johnston amendment is not adopted, we run the grave risk of creating precisely the kind of peril against which Hamilton warned: and the peril is allowing unelected judges to decide policy questions that have heretofore been dealt with by the legislative and executive branches of our Government. To embark in that direction is the height of foolishness.

Those on the other side of this debate who call themselves conservatives ought to be among the first to cosponsor and applaud the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana.

Why leave this important issue of whether unelected judges should have the authority to make economic decisions unresolved?

Why would the Senate abdicate its responsibility? I have authored a lot of amendments here, Mr. President. I may have more. I care about them all—middle-class tax cut, tax expenditures, issues having to do with how this amendment is set up. I would happily drop all those amendments if we could just solve this fundamental problem and if we could just resolve, through the Johnston amendment, the question of whether we are going to turn over this Government to the unelected judges or whether we are going to maintain our right and our responsibility to uphold the Constitution and deal with budgetary matters.

Mr. President, there is no question, of any amendment, this is the one that should be adopted.

Mr. SANTORUM. Will the Senator from Wisconsin yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania? Who yields time?

Mr. SANTORUM. Does the Senator have time left?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 2 minutes left.

Mr. SANTORUM. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. FEINGOLD. I yield for a question.

Mr. SANTORUM. The question I have is, given everything the Senator says will happen—all these suits occurring, et cetera—is there not specific authority in section 6 of this amendment for Congress to pass implementing legislation wherein we can specifically limit the ability of taxpayers, Members of Congress and others to sue on this amendment? Is that not the ability of the Congress to do even prior to maybe even ratification by the States? Could we not have legislation moving through the process to do that?

Mr. FEINGOLD. Surely there is a possibility we could try to pass that language and that would help. What I am suggesting here is, under the balanced budget amendment and under the inherent powers of the court to enforce the balanced budget amendment, that that may well be overridden by the power of the courts to take those suits and these folks would have standing.

Mr. SANTORUM. I did not understand, what would be overridden by the courts, our implementing legislation?

Mr. FEINGOLD. I am suggesting that simply barring those particular lawsuits, or attempting to, may not be consistent with the court's ruling of his inherent powers in this situation.

Mr. SANTORUM. The Senator is suggesting the Congress cannot limit suits? That is not within our ability to redress to the courts—

Mr. FEINGOLD. I am suggesting in the situation where the budget is not balanced, where there is a problem with the entire balanced budget amendment and the balancing of the budget, that the courts are going to have a certain amount of inherent power to enforce the amendment. I do not deny Congress certainly has some power.

Mr. SANTORUM. Could we not limit them to simply declaratory judgment? Is the Senator saying the courts could go beyond that even though Congress limits them to simply declaratory judgment?

Mr. FEINGOLD. Is that the Senator's intent?

Mr. SANTORUM. If we did that in the implementing legislation, to limit them to declaratory judgment, is the Senator suggesting the courts can ignore that?

Mr. FEINGOLD. I am suggesting it is possible that subsequently the U.S. Supreme Court could rule that the balanced budget amendment, that would derogate from the balanced budget amendment and take away the power of the people to have a balanced budget by taking away the right to enforce it. If you do not include in the constitutional amendment itself, if you do not specify in the Constitution that statutory provision cannot necessarily be interpreted by the U.S. Supreme Court to derogate to the balanced budget amendment. I am not convinced of that at all.

Mr. SANTORUM. I can read to the Senator, if he would like, example after example—I would like to submit it for the RECORD—of where the Congress has specifically limited the powers of the courts dealing with these kinds of matters.

Mr. FEINGOLD. That is under the current Constitution; this is under a new Constitution, one with a balanced budget amendment in it. The courts do not currently have a balanced budget amendment to deal with.

What I am suggesting is, if you have a balanced budget amendment, and later on you decide that you want to have a statute, it is not certain that the court would rule that that limitation—

Mr. SANTORUM. Does not—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. SANTORUM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. FEINGOLD. It may be unconstitutional.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I would like to yield myself some time to address this issue.

Section 6 of the constitutional amendment which we are discussing, the balanced budget amendment, specifically states that Congress has the ability to pass implementing legislation. In that legislation we can limit the authority of the courts—

Mr. FEINGOLD. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SANTORUM. To address this question.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SANTORUM. Even assuming the worst case, assuming that the sky will fall down—

Mr. FEINGOLD. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SANTORUM. We have the ability here in this Chamber and across the aisle to deal with this issue, and in fact I suspect that as we do pass implementing legislation, which I am sure we will, we will be back on this floor and I think that is the arena for this discussion as to what the appropriate remedies should be.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SANTORUM. I will be happy to yield for a question.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I would ask the Senator's reaction to the statement of Solicitor General Freed with regard to this issue where he said that if Congress attempted to pass legislation pursuant to section 6 to eliminate Federal court jurisdiction of questions arising in the balanced budget constitutional amendment, that limitation itself might very well be unconstitutional.

That is my point. You may want to pass legislation afterwards. You may hope that the court will accept it. But there is no certainty whatsoever that the court will not say, I am sorry. This is merely a statute. And my question is, how does the Senator react to the question?

Mr. SANTORUM. I disagree. It has been law in this country for as far as I know. The only situation where that could be a problem is if all due process, all other court access is denied. If we provide for some court access, which I am sure we will, if we provide for some court access, then I think it is very clear that they will not have other recourse—as long as we provide an avenue to the courts. We have the power to do that, to direct what avenue they take.

If we say in the implementing legislation that there will be no access, I think the Senator might have a point. But I do not think we are going to do that. But I think that is a discussion for another day, not to insert in the Constitution in this amendment a complete prohibition of all court activity because I think that overreaches.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. FEINGOLD. Will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. SANTORUM. I will briefly yield and then I wish to respond to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I think the Senator brings up an important and close point and that is whether the phrasing in section 6, where Congress shall enforce and implement the article, whether a denial of jurisdiction, a denial of all remedies would be considered to be enforcing and implementing. This same kind of language is in section 5 of the 14th amendment. I am quite familiar with this because I had an amendment here which I passed twice in the Senate, invoked cloture twice on it, to limit busing under the 14th amendment, and the question was addressed by the then Attorney General as to whether that limitation was implementing the 14th amendment, and the decision of the Attorney General was not altogether satisfactory. Suffice it to say, there would be a real question as to whether that would be implementing and enforcing if you denied all jurisdiction. But it seems to me that is not the important—

Mr. SANTORUM. If I can take my time back, I would agree with the Senator that I think we could run into problems if we denied every access to the courts. I am suggesting that I do not believe that will be the case. I think there will be some sort of relief provided for in the implementing legislation. And if we did not, I think we would have some sort of constitutional question. But I am saying that is an issue we should bring to the floor and discuss, but we should not do a complete ban on any kind of redress to the courts. I think it is unwise just from a policy perspective. But I think it does not have a place in the Constitution as far as I am concerned.

Mr. JOHNSTON. If the Senator will yield just for one statement—

Mr. SANTORUM. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Which is that under my amendment we do not prohibit the Congress from acting. To the contrary, we say that the court shall have no jurisdiction except to the extent that Congress specifically acts. So we allow that. We contemplate it. We encourage it. And Congress ought to act. On that the Senator and I agree.

The question is if Congress does not act, what is the inherent power of the Court? And we wish to make it clear that they have no inherent power except to the extent we give it to them.

Mr. SANTORUM. All I would suggest is that implementing legislation certainly must follow. It is a certainty that it will follow this legislation, and I think we will provide, I know we will provide some remedies therein to provide for redress of this grievance with respect to the question that the Senator from Michigan brought up. It is a good question. The question is whether a citizen or someone would have standing to bring here.

Standing is one issue. Whether they would be successful is another issue. Standing is the first hurdle that someone must pass.

With respect to that question, there is a three-part test that is used, that has been used for quite some time, and number one, the citizen must show injury in fact. I think that is a very high hurdle, for one individual to show a personal injury due to the fact that we have an unbalanced budget, and in fact we have cases that are very clear on that: Frothingham versus Mellon, a very old Supreme Court case still in effect, a 1923 case, says that allegations that amount to generalized grievance are not justiciable.

That to me is a pretty clear indication that you have a high burden upon just the first leg of this three-part test to cover.

No. 2, you have to show that one particular piece of legislation caused the unbalancing. Well, which one caused the unbalancing? How do you go about attacking that one as the one that did it? I think that also raises a very difficult question.

And finally—and we have talked about this briefly—whether it is a redressable grievance. What can the Court do to solve this problem? And you run into the political question doctrine and a whole lot of other things about whether the Court can reach over into article I and impose taxes under a balanced budget amendment. I think that is a very tall order, for the courts to say that they have that kind of power in that branch of the Government when it is very clear that article I says that Congress has the power to tax and to spend.

Mr. LEVIN. Will the Senator allow a response to that?

Mr. SANTORUM. I promised the Senator from Illinois I would yield him some time, so I will yield to the Senator from Illinois 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. I thank the Chair.

Let me just make a few observations. First—and I do not question the sincerity of my colleague from Louisiana at all on this; I know he is sincere—some who attack this are going to attack it no matter what. One former Member of this body was attacking this because the courts were going to intervene, and then we adopted the Danforth amendment, and he attacked it because it was toothless and it was unenforceable. It is kind of a no-win situation for some of the opponents.

Second, in terms of a precedent for what you are talking about, court intervention, the only real precedent is the Jenkins case in Missouri where you are dealing with individual rights and something that is not real clear. Here you are talking about an institutional situation where we can precisely measure what has happened. I think on balance the risk is very small. And I would quote from former Attorney General Barr.

I see little risk that the amendment will become the basis for judicial micro-management or superintendence of the Federal budget process. Furthermore, to the extent such judicial intrusion does arise, the amendment itself equips Congress to correct the problem by statute. On balance, moreover, whatever remote risk there may be that courts will play an overly intrusive role in enforcing the amendment, that risk is, in my opinion, vastly outweighed [vastly outweighed] by the benefits of such an amendment.

We clearly have the ability to determine who has standing. Now, obviously—and I heard my friend from Michigan, Senator LEVIN, quote Congressman SCHAEFER. I differ with Congressman SCHAEFER in terms of what our implementing legislation should be, and I think the majority in the House and Senate will.

I think standing ought to be limited to, perhaps, 10 Senators, 30 House Members, 3 Governors—something along that line—and limited solely to the Federal courts. I think we can pass something like that so there is not going to be, in any event, just a huge amount of litigation even if you try stretching your imagination.

I point out, also, we can avoid all of this by building small surpluses, as Alan Greenspan, Fred Bergsten, and other economists have recommended that we do. If we do not have surpluses, if we have a situation, with a 60 percent vote, we can have a deficit. And it takes a 60 percent vote to add to the debt. These are very precise measurements. We are not talking about individual rights where there may be strong disagreements.

I point out also, and my colleague from Colorado, Senator BROWN, pointed this out in committee when we had the hearing, that States have somewhat similar provisions, 48 of the 50 States, in their State constitutions. There has been almost no litigation on this. So the history of States suggests this will not happen. Senator BROWN mentioned in the history of Colorado's provision, there has been no litigation on this question.

Does that mean the courts cannot ever get involved? The answer is, if we blatantly ignore the Constitution, then there is a narrow window for the courts to get involved. That window, I think, should remain open. I do not think we should close that window. I think it is unlikely that will ever be a problem. But who knows who will be in Congress 50 years from now? Some Congress may decide we just want to ignore the Constitution. I cannot imagine that, but it is possible.

In that kind of case, the courts can intervene. But I think the history of State provisions, the provision that says the Congress shall enforce and implement this article by appropriate legislation, makes it very clear we are not going to have a massive amount of litigation.

I thank my colleague for yielding the time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. Will the Senator from Louisiana yield me some additional time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. You have the floor.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I have been speaking to my colleagues on the other side of the aisle, particularly Senators BROWN and GORTON. I believe we have an agreement as to at least what we could agree to. If my colleagues on this side of the aisle would have no objection to this language, then I will propose to modify my amendment accordingly.

The language is a combination of language originally proposed by Senator GORTON back in 1982, and with the Brown suggestion about section 2. It would read as follows. I am not asking at this point to modify the amendment, but I would like to discuss it before I do.

The judicial power of the United States shall not extend to any case or controversy arising under this article except for section 2 hereof or as may be specifically authorized in implementing legislation pursuant to this section.

Section 2, my colleagues will recall, as Senator BROWN talked about, provides that:

The limit on the debt of the United States held by the public shall not be increased, unless three-fifths of the whole number of each House shall provide by law for such an increase by a rollcall vote.

As Senator BROWN pointed out, that is a powerful way to enforce the amendment. That would be exempted from the—in other words, the court would have jurisdiction under section 2, but otherwise would not have jurisdiction—would not—the judicial power would not extend, except as specifically authorized by Congress.

Mr. LEVIN. I wonder if the Senator from Louisiana will yield for a question, a clarification, on this?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Yes, of course.

Mr. LEVIN. As far as I am concerned, any clarification is an improvement because we now, as the Senator so eloquently pointed out, have an ambiguity which is unacceptable in a provision. Whether people favor the provision otherwise or oppose it otherwise, we ought to seek clarity in what we are doing.

As I understand the language the Senator has just read, it would say that basically a court could enforce the section 2 limit on the debt. That limit on the debt held by the public would still have to be defined by Congress, since there is no existing statute that sets that debt held by the public, and that is confirmed by letter from the Attorney General which I put in the RECORD.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I believe that is also in the committee report. They say the debt is a creature of legislation and would be subject to that definition by Congress.

Mr. LEVIN. But my question of the Senator from Louisiana is this. Is the Senator saying that, in the event that the Congress did not adopt a limit on the debt of the United States held by the public—and there is no such statutory limit now, the statutory limit now is on the debt, not just the debt which is held by the public which is part of the national debt—if the Congress did not set such a limit as provided for in section 2, that this language that the Senator just read would authorize a court to legislate that limit?

Mr. JOHNSTON. No. No. The court would have—the judicial power of the United States would extend to that case or controversy, however it arose and whatever remedies the court would feel were appropriate. We do not know what remedies those might be.

Mr. GORTON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEVIN. I am wondering though, if I could clarify this question. Is it the intention of this language—and I think it is important that language be before this body for more than a few minutes so people can study it. This is a critical question. My good friend from Washington has been deeply involved in this question over many, many versions of the constitutional amendment and is really an expert on the subject. So I think this language should be before the body for more than a few minutes.

My question, however, is: Is it intended that a court could order a specific limit on the debt "held by the public," in the event that Congress did not adopt a statute defining such a publicly held—

Mr. JOHNSTON. There is a limit on the debt now.

Mr. LEVIN. That is the importance of the letter from the Attorney General. With the permission of my friend from Louisiana, I would like to read it. It is a short letter.

DEAR SENATOR LEVIN: This responds to your letter to the Attorney General of February 14, 1995, concerning the proposed Balanced Budget Amendment to the Constitution. In that letter you asked whether legislation setting a "limit on the debt of the United States held by the public" would have to be passed before Section 2 would have any force. Section 2 states that any increase in the limit on such debt must be passed by a three-fifths rollcall vote of the whole number of each House of Congress.

We have consulted the Office of Management and Budget, which has advised us that there is at present no statutory limit on the "debt of the United States held by the public," the type of debt described in Section 2. Rather, there is a limit on the "public debt," which includes debt held by the public and certain other debt, such as debt held by the Social Security Trust Fund. Unless and until Congress passes legislation establishing a limit on the type of debt described in the amendment, the strictures against increasing this debt limit would have no effect.

I cannot say it any more clearly than the Attorney General of the United States. There is no statutory limit on the "debt of the United States held by the public" in current law. It would require a future Congress to establish such a new kind of debt limit, which would exclude debt held, for instance, by the Social Security Administration.

My question, then, is whether or not it is the intention of the framers of this new language that a court could order a Congress, or adopt itself, language which would define "debt of the United States held by the public," since there is no such debt in current law?

Mr. GORTON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON. This amendment has the judicial power of the United States to extend to that case or controversy. I can imagine the number of things the court could do. The court can do what they want to because they are omnipotent. They can say that the public debt, as presently set by limit, was meant to be the same thing as this. But from my standpoint, if the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Washington would like to redefine that term in light of this letter, that would be suitable with me. But I would say that it is improbable that a court would be able itself to set a limit on the public debt.

Mr. GORTON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Yes, of course.

Mr. GORTON. The answer the Senator from Louisiana has given to the Senator from Michigan is accurate insofar as it goes. But I think the more fundamental answer to the Senator from Michigan is that this particular part of the proposed revision does not change the basic balanced budget amendment with respect to section 2 at all. Right now the thrust of the argument of the question raised by the Senator from Michigan is just as valid in the present unamended form to the balanced budget amendment as it would be if this modification were passed. This Senator, as each of the Senators knows, was greatly disturbed by this particular question of judicial review 13 years ago, in 1982, and proposed an amendment to essentially cause these questions to be political questions at that time.

This Senator is very sympathetic with the direction of the amendment Senator JOHNSTON has put forward and would prefer that it be phrased slightly differently, but, nonetheless, I feel that I do not wish to expand the judicial power of the United States to writing budget for the United States. When I proposed that, without the exception for section 2, the Senator from Colorado and others expressed to me a deep concern about a form of violation of the Constitution that I think will never take place. Their comments were directed at our comments, which would simply defy the plain requirements of section 2 and pass a debt limit increase with 55 percent of the votes in the Senate or 55 percent of the votes in the House and just simply flat out ignore the Constitution. They wished to see to it that the courts would have jurisdiction to prevent that blatant violation of the Constitution. I do not believe that it is even remotely conceivable that would ever happen.

The reason I sympathize with the general direction of what the Senator from Louisiana wants to do, what I fear is going to happen under this constitutional amendment is that Congress is going to pass a budget and the President is going to sign a budget, under the same circumstances which happens today, that is invalid according to the estimates by the CBO and the like and that someone or some group will have standing to go into court and say, "No; the CBO estimates are wrong. We have to get the estimates," and that some court which desires to get into this business is going to say, "Yes, you are right. Your estimates are better than Congress," and order the rewriting of a budget. I do not believe anyone, I say to the Senator from Michigan, who was asked this question, believes we are going to get cases under section 2. But, in any event, we are not going to get any more cases under section 2 with this revised amendment than we will get without any amendment at all.

Mr. LEVIN. Will the Senator from Washington yield? I thank him for his clarification. As I understand it, it would be his intention as one of the co-authors of this language, I gather, that the Senator from Louisiana has described, that the jurisdiction is referred to the court, pursuant to section 2, to enforce the 60-vote requirement in that amendment, not to define words that a legislature or Congress would ordinarily be required to define.

Mr. GORTON. Clearly, any controversy arising under section 2 would in fact be justiciable under the modification of the draft working with the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Louisiana. But the point is that it is true with the original balanced budget amendment, we are not changing that by proposing this. This modification, just as Senator JOHNSTON's original amendment limits the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, modifies it in this fashion. It does not do it quite as much because it does not limit it with respect to section 2. It just limits with respect to the other section, but nothing, in my view, given the Supreme Court, by this modification that is not there in the present form of the balanced budget amendment that we have been debating for 3 weeks.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. GORTON. Technically the Senator from Louisiana has the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS). The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I agree with the Senator from Washington. Moreover, there is a legislative limit today on the debt of the United States. So Congress must act, plus act every year to increase the debt. They may act to increase the debt as defined by statute now. But, if you can do that, chances are you will be able to do it to increase it pursuant to the terms of this constitutional amendment.

Mr. GORTON. Yes. As I understand, that was in the letter from the Attorney General. I must say it sounds like chopped logic to me. We have a statute under the deficit now which uses words slightly different from those of section 2 in House Joint Resolution 1.

Mr. LEVIN. It is slightly different. If the Senator will yield, the question is whether or not to include debt held by the Social Security Administration. That is not a slight difference.

Mr. GORTON. I am convinced that the simplest of all implementing legislation for this kind of constitutional amendment, should it become part of the Constitution, will define the debt in a way which is totally consistent with section 2. So as a practical matter, I do not think such a case of controversy will ever arise.

Mr. LEVIN. I wonder if I could ask the Senator from Louisiana this question, the same question, now that we have the letter from the Attorney General. It is the intent, as I understand it, that under the languages which you read that the court could enforce the requirement of 60 votes, and that is the principal purpose of the language.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I do not mean to be evasive. I am just saying that the judicial power of the United States would extend to cases and controversies arising under section 2. The court can do what it thinks is proper, if it finds standing, if it finds there is a justiciable question and it extends to such powers as the court thinks are proper.

Mr. GORTON. Will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Yes.

Mr. GORTON. Since what the Senator from Louisiana has read is in the handwriting of the Senator from Washington, the answer of the Senator from Washington to the Senator from Michigan is yes.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

If no other Senator is seeking recognition, I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask unanimous consent that it be equally divided.

Mr. THOMPSON. If the Senator will withhold, I will address a question to the Senator from Washington. It has to do with the purpose of this language which I have heard and have not had a chance to read. As I understand it, this would deprive the courts of jurisdiction except with regard to section 2.

Mr. GORTON. The amendment that is before the body now, the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, does not deprive the court of jurisdiction. The court has no jurisdiction at the present time on a constitutional amendment. It says, in essence, that the court will not have jurisdiction over cases arising out of the balanced budget amendment, except with respect to its enabling legislation. That is the proposal of the Senator from Louisiana.

While this modification has some slight language differences from his original point, its only substantive change in the proposal before the body right now is to allow the court to deal with cases and controversies arising under section 2. The purpose of it, I may say—since while I was the draftsman, I am not the person who thought it up—the purpose of it was to deal with the sincere concerns of the Senator from Colorado, Mr. BROWN, that Congress, without such jurisdiction, literally could define the plain language of section 2 and pass a debt limit increase by less than a 60-percent supermajority vote.

As I have said, I cannot conceive of Members of Congress so blatantly violating their oaths of office under such circumstances. As a consequence, I was perfectly willing to go along with the Senator from Colorado because I do not think any such case or controversy will ever arise. But the purpose is to carve out from the general exemption—which is Senator Johnston's amendment—section 2.

Mr. THOMPSON. So while there is an exemption under the Senator's amendment with regard to enabling legislation, this exemption would apply to part of the language of the constitutional amendment.

Mr. GORTON. Yes, plus enabling legislation.

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, and that is section 2. Does the Senator consider that if such amended language was agreed to, that might obviate the argument that the courts did not have jurisdiction with regard to section 2? In other words, as I heard the debate here a short time ago, I think very strong arguments were made with regard to the amendment itself, the totality of the amendment, that there were serious questions with regard to the justiciable issue regarding political questions and all of that, with regard to the amendment in totality, including section 2.

I wonder whether or not, if such language were agreed to, this would be an open invitation to the courts that in fact we are inviting you to take on anything that could be a part of section 2 and might in fact go against the intent of the proponents of the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. GORTON. I say to the Senator from Tennessee that he is a shrewd reader of legislative constitutional language, because I think in this case he is precisely correct. The paradox, in my opinion, this year, last year, and in 1982, when we debated this subject, is that those who have opposed adding this kind of judicial review section to a balanced budget amendment have made two totally inconsistent, opposite arguments against including such a section. One is that the courts would never take cases or controversies under this. They do not have any such jurisdiction, and they would not exercise any such jurisdiction. The other argument is that we certainly want the courts to enforce it if Congress violates these constitutional provisions.

I did not understand those arguments in 1982; I did not understand them in 1986; I did not understand them last year; and I do not understand them now. I think those who oppose adding something like the Johnston amendment at least ought to pick one side of that argument or the other. If their sole reason for not wishing to add something like the Johnston amendment is that it is unnecessary because the courts will never, under any circumstances, deal with a case or controversy arising under the balanced budget amendment, then under those circumstances, we have actually created a cause of action by this particular modification with respect to section 2. I think that is the utter logical conclusion.

My own view on the subject is that the fundamental argument is flawed. I am convinced that the courts would in fact exercise jurisdiction under cases or controversies arising under this entire amendment. There is no way in the world we can guarantee that the Supreme Court next year, much less 100 years from now, is not going to decide it wants to write a budget and override our estimate.

My deep concern is not a case or controversy that is going to arise under section 2 as to whether we have invalidly increased the debt limit, or many other sections here; I believe that the history of the Federal courts of the United States clearly indicates that we will be faced very soon—maybe in the first budget that passes after this constitutional amendment becomes a part of the Constitution—with a Congress and a President who have passed what they consider to be a balanced budget, using Congressional Budget Office estimates of revenues, for example, and Joint Tax Committee estimates of receipts, and that some individual withstanding will sue and say the Congressional Budget Office estimates are off, they are phony, this is Congress' own creation, they have fixed the figures, and we think there is a much better estimate of expenditures and those expenditures are a lot higher than the Congressional Budget Office has said and we, therefore, order the Congress either to use our estimates, the estimates of the court, to rewrite the budget, or we will impose a 5-percent surcharge on the income tax this year to bring it into balance.

It is that kind of judicial activism, in my opinion, which has plagued the United States in many respects for the last 50 years, with courts running prisons and school systems and shelters for the homeless and the like, and acting in a legislative fashion. And for anybody, particularly somebody conservative, to state with assurance that the courts will not involve themselves in this field I just think is a faulty argument.

If the argument, on the other hand, is the courts ought to be in this field, I can see someone arguing that they like judicial activism and want courts involved in this field. I just disagree with them. If I thought the courts were going to be in this field, I would not want anything to do with the balanced budget amendment, of which I am a co-sponsor and a very, very strong supporter. Under those cases, they would probably rather have it in section 2 than not to have it at all. Personally, I would prefer we not have it at all. Personally, I also want to get something accomplished here, and I do not think this exception for section 2, in my view, is ever going to come up at all.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. GORTON. The answer to the question of the Senator from Tennessee is that he is absolutely right. It settles that first argument with respect to section 2 and makes it invalid.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee controls the time.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Who has the time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I wonder if the Senator would not agree with me that section 2 involves, really, a yes or no proposition—that is, that the limit on the debt of the U.S. public shall not be increased except by a three-fifths vote. It is subject only really to a yes or no proposition. That is, you either had the three-fifths or you did not have it. It does not get into all the fiscal questions that might flow from that; rather, it is a yes or no proposition.

So I wonder if the Senator from Washington does not agree that really about all the court could do on that is say, yes or no, you did or you did not, and if you did not, it is not valid and the President could not sign it anyway if it violates the Constitution.

Mr. GORTON. That is certainly the thrust of what the Senator from Colorado was himself concerned with.

Again, it is very important, as the Senator from Michigan said, when we deal with the Constitution that we be as clear as we possibly can in what we say. And it is certainly possible, in the absence of any statute on this subject, that a case or controversy could arise under other provisions in section 2. But, as I said, the first thing we will do will be to make the slight definitional changes that are necessary to use the phrase in this Constitution and the debt limit legislation which we have at the present time.

So, as a practical matter, I think the only time the question would ever come up is the way the Senator from Louisiana states it.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I share the concern of both the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Washington concerning judicial activism. As the Senator from Washington puts it, on one hand, he is concerned about it, and, on the other, he is concerned about the notion that the courts should indeed be involved.

I think there is probably a middle ground here that many people are struggling with. I think a very good case can be made for the proposition that, indeed, it is unlikely—I am talking about under the original amendment—that it is unlikely that the court would involve itself in the detailed budgeting process of the Congress of the United States.

Now, can anybody say that will not happen with certainty? Absolutely not.

We all know that it can happen. It is a possibility.

The question is: What is the likelihood? It has never been done before. You look at what has happened on the State level. You look at what has happened on the Federal level.

I remember the lawsuit against President Nixon back in 1974. The court dealt with a little different situation there, but they were dealing with the powers of the executive branch. If you read that case, you will see how reluctant the Supreme Court is to get into the operations of and put limitations on the power of the other branches of Government.

That case came down requiring the President to give up his tapes, but in doing so really they raised the threshold very substantially as far as any future similar actions against a President. You had to have eyewitnesses in that case, eyewitnesses, in effect, saying the President was involved in criminal activity or very possibly could have been. So they decided against the President in that case. But by their language, they were struggling mightily with it and it had to be very fact specific and it had to be an egregious case by that language for them to step into the affairs of the President of the United States.

I think in all probability that is the way it will be with Congress. My own guess is—and I assume that is all we can acknowledge, that is basically all we are doing here—my own guess is that, absent some egregious case that the Senator from Washington says he does not think will ever happen, and I agree, but absent some very egregious case where the Congress of the United States just blatantly and openly disregards the Constitution, I do not think the Supreme Court would involve itself, even the Supreme Court as we know it today, which too often gets into too many things, as we all know.

I think many of us simply share the concern that if there is no enforcing mechanism at all, if there is no possibility, if we foreclose any possibility under any circumstances that the court cannot decide this, that a future Congress would use that and circumvent the intent of the balanced budget amendment.

So it gets back to how badly do you think our fiscal crisis is; how badly do we need this balanced budget amendment? And I think pretty badly.

We have heard the debate here for many, many days. We are headed down the wrong road at breakneck speed. We are bankrupting the next generation by any objective standard. By any bipartisan analysis that has been made of it, we are in serious, serious circumstances here and we are kind of fiddling around here while Rome is burning and missing the central point that we better keep in mind, and that is we better get our fiscal house in order.

The balanced budget amendment, without being cluttered with a lot of controversial amendments designed primarily by some to kill it and not to improve the amendment so that they could support it, instead of doing that, we ought to refocus and pass the balanced budget amendment.

I intend at this stage of the game to say, let us pass it without this amendment.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

AMENDMENT NO. 272, AS MODIFIED

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, we have had this discussion.

At this point, I wish to modify my amendment by inserting, in lieu of the present language, the following language, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has that right, and the amendment is so modified.

The amendment, as modified, reads as follows:

At the end of Section 6, add the following: "The judicial power of the United States shall not extend to any case or controversy arising under this article except for section 2 hereof, or as may be specifically authorized in implementing legislation pursuant to this section."

Mr. LEVIN. Will the Senator yield for two additional questions?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Yes.

Mr. LEVIN. One of the questions I think it would be valuable for us to perk a bit so that others, including members of the Judiciary Committee, could look at the language is a very important change—again, whether you favor or oppose the amendment on other grounds, it is important that we clarify the amendment, and the Senator from Louisiana has done very, very important work in achieving this clarification. I would like to pursue it because there is still some ambiguity.

I have two questions. One is the judicial power of the United States refers to Federal courts. State courts also implement the Constitution and enforce the Constitution. I am wondering whether or not it is the intention of this language that State as well as Federal courts would be prohibited from enforcing this provision except as specifically authorized in implementation legislation? Is that the intent of the authors of this language?

Mr. JOHNSTON. It is not the intent of this language to give State courts the power. I do not believe they would have the power to order a tax increase or give a declaratory judgment or cut a Federal program. I believe that that judicial power adheres only in the United States.

Mr. GORTON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Yes.

Mr. GORTON. I have to say to the Senator from Michigan, the Constitution of the United States, as it is presently formulated, or formulated here, makes no statements with respect to the jurisdiction of State courts. In a very real sense, State courts interpret the Constitution, but State courts cannot order the Congress of the United States to do anything. They have no such jurisdiction.

So, just as is in the rest of the Constitution, the balanced budget amendment and the debt limit legislation are silent as to the jurisdiction of State courts, which is exactly what they are ought to be.

Mr. LEVIN. As I understand it, however, it is the intent of the Senator from Louisiana that, to the extent that this gives any authority at all under section 2 or otherwise, that section 2 authority exclusively goes to the Federal courts.

Mr. JOHNSTON. That is correct.

Mr. GORTON. The phrase in the Constitution, of course, is the judicial power of the United States. That is the Federal Government.

Mr. LEVIN. My question is, the language here as it authorizes section 2 implementation refers only to Federal courts.

Mr. GORTON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Yes.

Mr. LEVIN. The other question relates to a question I have asked the sponsors of the legislation. I sent them a whole list of questions as to the enforcement provisions under section 6, because it raises a whole question as to whether or not there is an enforcement mechanism for this constitutional amendment or whether or not it is just a statement of intent and then has no teeth in it. But that is a different issue for a different argument.

My question, though, is this.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time is controlled by the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Could we answer the questions on the other side's time, because I think we are about to run out?

Mr. LEVIN. Will the Senator from Washington yield for this question?

Mr. GORTON. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana controls the time.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time is expired. Who yields time?

Mr. LEVIN. Would the Senator from Washington ask for a minute or two of time in order to respond to the question of the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. GORTON. The Senator does not have time.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I say to the Senator from Michigan, we have a limited amount of time remaining, and we have speakers that we have to accommodate.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the questions which I forwarded to the Senators from Utah and Illinois, including section 17 be inserted in the RECORD and specifically any response to section 17 that is obtained today be inserted in the RECORD at this time.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT QUESTIONS

1. What exactly is the definition of receipts? For example, do receipts include the receipts from Postal Service stamp sales and TVA power sales? Do they include Medicare premium payments? Do they include the receipts of government corporations and quasi-federal agencies which deposit money in non-Treasury accounts? Who will make this determination?

2. What exactly is the definition of outlays? For example, do outlays include federal loans and federally-guaranteed loans? Do they include spending by government corporations and quasi-federal agencies which pay for their activities out of user fees instead of out of Treasury accounts? Who will make this determination?

3. Will estimates or actual levels be used for receipts and outlays? In an instance in which the OMB and the CBO disagree with each other on what outlays or receipts are, how will the dispute be resolved so that it can be determined whether or not outlays exceed receipts?

4. Who will determine whether a bill is 'a bill to increase revenues?' For example, what happens if OMB says the bill is revenue neutral, and CBO says the bill will result in a net increase in revenues? Whose estimate will prevail? How will the dispute be resolved?

5. At what point will it be determined that outlays will in fact exceed receipts, triggering remedial action? August 1? September 15? Who will make that determination—OMB or CBO?

6. At whatever point it is determined that outlays do or will exceed receipts, will automatic spending cuts or tax increases be triggered? When would that happen, and who would be responsible for making it happen? Will cuts affect all programs equally across-the-board, or will certain programs be exempt?

7. Would it violate the language of the amendment if Congress passes, with less than 60% of the votes, a budget resolution that is not balanced?

8. Would it violate the language of the amendment if Congress passes, with less than 60% of the votes, a bill to increase spending from some base level without offsetting spending cuts or revenue increases? Would it matter whether this was the last appropriations bill of the year, and would result total appropriations exceeding expected receipts? If not, how will we ensure that Congress does not increase spending without paying for it?

9. Would it violate the language of the amendment if Congress passes, with less than 60% of the votes, a bill to cut taxes without offsetting spending cuts or revenue increases? If not, how will we ensure that Congress does not cut taxes without paying for it?

10. What happens if Congress passes a budget resolution which is in balance, and enacts appropriations bills on the basis of that resolution, but part way through the year it appears that outlays will exceed receipts? Would Congress be required to vote separately on whether to authorize or eliminate the excess, even though it voted for budget and appropriation bills in the belief that the budget would be balanced? What mechanism would be created to ensure that such a bill would be considered?

11. At what point during the fiscal year would Congress be required to vote to authorize an excess of outlays or to eliminate that excess? What would happen if Congress did not approve either such measure?

12. Would the amendment be enforced through sequestration or impoundment? If so, when and how would that action take place?

13. What happens if Congress approves a specific excess of outlays over receipts by the required three-fifths vote of each House, but the projection turns out to be wrong—the deficit is greater than expected. Would a second vote be required to approve the revised estimate of the deficit? Who determines the dollar amount of excess that Congress will vote on in each case? Who determines that the estimated excess was wrong? How often would such determinations be made, and such votes be required? Who determines when the votes must take place?

14. The resolution requires that three-fifths of each House vote to approve an excess "by law". Does this mean that the President must sign a bill to approve an excess? What happens if three-fifths of the Members of each House approve a deficit, but the President vetoes the bill? On the other hand, what happens if Congress passes a reconciliation bill to balance the budget and the President vetoes it and there are insufficient votes to override the veto? For example, what if Congress votes to increase taxes to eliminate the deficit and the President says he prefers spending cuts and vetoes the bill. If there are insufficient votes to override the veto, who has violated the Constitution—the Congress or the President?

15. Could Congress shift receipts or outlays from one year to another to meet balanced budget requirements? For example, could paydays for government employees be put off a few days into the next fiscal year to achieve a balance between receipts and outlays? What mechanisms will prevent this type of abuse?

16. Section 2 of the resolution provides that "the limit on the debt of the United States held by the public shall not be increased" without a three-fifths vote. What is the current statutory "limit on the debt of the United States held by the public", if any? If there is currently no such limit, how will such a limit be established?

17. What does the debt of the United States held by the public include? Specifically, does it include the debt of wholly-owned government corporations (like the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Overseas Private Investment Corporation)? Does it include the debt of mixed-ownership government corporations (like Amtrak and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation)? Does it include loans guaranteed by the federal government, such as guaranteed student loans, guaranteed agriculture and export loans, or Mexican loan guarantees? If not, could additional government corporations and quasi-governmental agencies be created to conduct federal programs off-budget to evade the amendment? Could new government guaranteed lending programs replace government spending? How would this be prevented?

18. May the President transmit a proposed budget which is not in balance in addition to his balanced budget proposal? May the President transmit a balanced budget, but recommends against its adoption? Can he submit the balanced budget at any time before the fiscal year begins?

19. The Committee report states that the words "bill to increase revenue" covers "those measures whose intended and anticipated effect will be to increase revenues to the Federal Government." Does this mean net revenue? Over what period of time would this be judged?

Would the revenue provision apply to a bill that increases revenues for three years and reduces revenues for the following three years, with a net change of zero over the six-year period? What happens if the amendment is repealed after three years, because it would result in a deficit?

Would a bill to increase the capital gains tax be exempt, since many argue would have the effect of reducing revenue in at least the early years after enactment?

20. Does "revenue" include fees? How do we tell the difference between a revenue measure increasing fees and a spending measure decreasing outlays by requiring users to pay for services provided to them instead of funding the services out of tax revenues?

What about a bill to raise the federal share of receipts from concessions in our national parks?

What if the bill simply required regular competition for national park concessions? Would that be a bill to increase revenue, since it would have the "intended and anticipated effect" of increasing the federal share?

21. Does revenue include tariffs? Would a trade measure which authorizes use of retaliatory tariffs in certain cases be considered a "revenue measure", since it would arguably have the "intended and anticipated effect" of increasing revenues? Who will make this determination?

22. Does revenue include civil and criminal penalties? Would a bill that establishes a new civil or criminal penalty be considered a "revenue" measure? How about a bill that indexes certain penalties for inflation? How about a measure to toughen enforcement of criminal or civil penalties? Would a bill to tighten enforcement of the tax laws or provide more personnel to the IRS be covered, since it would have the "intended and anticipated effect" of increasing revenues? Who will decide what is covered by this provision?

23. Would a statute that requires a new, lower measure for inflation, be considered a bill to increase revenue, since by slowing the adjustment of tax brackets it would have the "intended and anticipated effect" of increasing taxes? Would the elimination of a special, targeted tax break be covered by this provision? Would it cover a bill authorizing the sale of buildings or land?

24. Sponsors of the amendment have said that the social security trust funds will be protected in implementing legislation and that the budget will not be balanced at the expense of the States. How will this result be ensured?

25. The term "fiscal year" is not defined in the amendment. The report indicates that Congress has the power to define the term "fiscal year." Does this mean that Congress could change the effective date of the amendment by legislation, passed by majority vote, which changes the statutory time at which a fiscal year begins and ends?

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I wanted to make a comment about the practical effect that the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana will have on the process once the balanced budget amendment passes.

I think this may be the serious constitutional infirmities that this amendment could have, and when I say "constitutional infirmities," what I believe the Senator's amendment will do is, by denying access, by denying access to the courts in this constitutional amendment, in a sense what we are doing is modifying the fifth amendment due process clause. You are saying we have no redress to this act—none—until Congress acts.

Now, I think the practical effect of that will be—and I think we are seeing within this body a lot of support for the courts keeping hands off, not reaching in—so what may happen, what I think there is high probability of happening, is we will leave that alone. We, in fact, will not implement. We will not provide. There is no requirement for Members to do so. There is no reason for the Senate now to provide access when, in fact, we have stated constitutionally they have no access.

On the other side, if we do not have the Johnston amendment in place, it is incumbent upon Members to act because I think the Senator is right, we have left a big open question here. Now, it is our duty to define what avenues the court will have to address this constitutional amendment.

I think what we have done here is take the Congress off the hook of having to come back, look at this question, debate it, find out specifically what areas we are going to deal with or provide for the citizenry, for Members of Congress, to address this issue in the courts.

By this amendment we will, in fact, foreclose that discussion. I believe that discussion will not occur, or if it does occur, will not prevail, that we will feel most comfortable leaving the courts completely out of it. It has been passed in the constitutional amendment. There will be no reason for Members to come here because we have taken care of this issue.

If we leave it open, the issue will arise again. And I believe the Senator is absolutely right. There is such a question here. We will be driven to provide specifically for that kind of redress in the court.

I think not only do we have a limitation of the due process clause of the 5th amendment as a result of the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, which I think is a red flag, No. 1. No. 2, we have in a sense decided this issue now maybe for a long period of time and eliminated any prospect of judicial review for this legislation.

I do not think we are prepared to do that. I think we are prepared, at least what I hope most Members are prepared to do, is say, "Let's leave this question open for us to go and then provide specific redresses in the implementing legislation to deal with this question. Let's be precise about it. Let's be limited about it but have a full and open discussion about it, not foreclose and slam the door for any possibilities of judicial overview," whatever limited amount it may be.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SANTORUM. Very briefly.

Mr. JOHNSTON. What appropriate role would the Senator think the courts ought to have?

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I think that is a discussion that we need to have. I think that is a discussion that has to be talked about far beyond the few hours of debate we have here on the Senate floor. We need to look at whether we should limit it to declaratory judgment or whether we should grant injunctive relief. All those kind of avenues. Who should we give standing to move these suits forward. All of those discussions, the particulars, need to be dealt with in the implementing legislation.

If we pass the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, I do not believe we will get there. I do not believe we get there because we have already settled the issue and the courts do not have a role.

Mr. JOHNSTON. We say the courts do have a role to the extent we specify.

Mr. SANTORUM. But there is no incentive as a result of your amendment to specify. We have now kept them out of our affairs. There is no reason for Members to come back and give them access, where, if we did not pass the amendment, it would be a broad open question as to what extent they could get involved.

It could be incumbent upon the Senate to protect our own viability as a body, for the Senate to specifically chart out where they would. I think any kind of implementing legislation—I think the Senator from Wisconsin was right on this. If we, through implementing legislation, said they have no access, I think we would have constitutional problems with that. We would have to provide some sort of limited access for suit. Your amendment does not do that.

I think you run into very severe limitation on the due process clause. We are telling every citizen of this country that you cannot redress your Government through a constitutional amendment. I think that is a real problem. I think that is one of the reasons I would be opposed to it.

The second is, I think it forecloses any future discussion on this matter. I would be happy at this point to yield the floor.

Mr. HATCH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I understand the hullabaloo is about the modification of the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana applying only to section 2, because the claim is the budgetary language is different from the constitutional amendment language.

To me, that is such a trivialization of the debate that it is not funny. If we have 67 people who will pass this amendment, we are certainly going to have 51 votes to change any budgetary language we have to in the implementing legislation.

Why should we get into a big scholastic—and by “scholastic,” we will call it scholasticism — how-many-angels-stand-on-head-of-a-pin argument in the debate over the constitutional amendment over that issue?

Now, if Members of Congress believe that the issue of standing and the separation of powers and political question are not well defined by the courts and well defined by better than a century of law on this subject, then I can see where they might want to support the distinguished Senator from Louisiana and his amendment here.

The law is so well defined and it is so clear in those areas. I think we made the case earlier in the day that it is clear that I do not need to repeat it again at this particular point. I am hoping all Senators will vote against this amendment. It is a mischievous amendment. It is offered to try to scuttle the balanced budget amendment, knowing that there can always be made some argument about any term in any balanced budget amendment or any amendment to the Constitution that others might agree or disagree on.

What we are talking about here is an amendment passed by 300 Members of the House of Representatives, the two-thirds-plus vote, for the first time in history. In my opinion, we simply cannot amend it further because of that historic vote and the fact that it is a bipartisan consensus amendment by Democrats and Republicans that will work. These frightful occurrences are not going to occur and everybody knows it.

The whole purpose of this amendment is, of course, to try to amend this constitutional amendment which puts Members through the whole process again. Now the original amendment of the distinguished Senator from Louisiana said, “No court shall have the power to issue relief pursuant to any case or controversy arising out of this article except as may be specifically authorized in implementing legislation pursuant to this section.”

The modification, as I understand it, would add on to section 6 the following:

The judicial power of the United States shall not extend to any case or controversy arising out of this article except for section 2 hereof, or as may be specifically authorized in implementing legislation pursuant to this section.

We do not need to have litigation for section 2. We do not need to have litigation for any aspect of it. I think under the rules of law that have existed for well upward of a century, this is a false issue, and we should vote to table this particular amendment. I hope our Senators will do that.

I yield the floor.

Mr. JOHNSTON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I am indebted to the distinguished Senator from Washington [Mr. GORTON] and the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. BROWN] for helping work out this modification which I think achieves very well the purposes that most Senators want to achieve on this floor, which is to ensure that the real biting enforcement and sanction of section 2 is preserved in this amendment so that, as the Senator from Colorado said, section 2 is the real guts of the enforcement and that remains here with the power of the court to enforce it.

But other than that, Mr. President, this amendment will provide that the courts may not raise taxes and may not substitute their judgment for that of the U.S. Congress.

It is to me an amazing circularity of logic that the opponents of the amendment as modified have. They say, on the one hand, this is absolutely clear, we know there is no standing to sue, we know there is no justiciable question; this is a political question which the courts cannot get into. But, on the other hand, there may be some cases where some people will need to go to court and enforce this. But, on the other hand, it is absolutely clear. But, on the other hand, if we pass this amendment, the Congress will never act because then it will be clear.

Well, Mr. President, it either is clear or it is not clear, and we know what the real answer to that question is: It is intentionally ambiguous, and in that ambiguity, we have mischief, because while what Judge Bork says is thousands of cases matriculating up through the district courts and the courts of appeal of this country, while we are waiting for those to be decided, the capital markets of this country, the bond markets, the very fiscal essence of the country will be held in limbo while the court decides such arcane questions as whether this is a political question, whether there is standing to sue, or whether it is a justiciable issue.

We have the power to decide that issue now, to make it clear and unambiguous, which is, the courts do not have authority, except to the extent we give them authority.

Mr. President, we have between now and 2002—2002—to act to implement this article. Section 6 says:

The Congress shall enforce and implement this article by appropriate legislation.

If this Senate and this Congress can pass a constitutional amendment by a two-thirds vote, by 67 votes, surely it could pass simple implementing legislation which requires only a simple majority. Why would Congress ignore section 6, ignore its duty when it takes only a majority vote, when we feel so strongly today that we are giving a two-thirds vote to the constitutional amendment? It does not make sense, and it does not add up.

If any Member believes, as I believe, that what the courts would really do if they took jurisdiction is order a tax increase and then maybe say, “Congress, this will go into effect 60 days from now or 4 months from now unless you act”—I think that is what they would do because that is the only thing they have expertise to do. They do not have the expertise to cut budgets, to decide between competing claims in a budget, but they sure do know how to order an income tax increase, because it takes no expertise. This amendment would prevent that; it would deprive the courts of the ability to meddle in this constitutional duty, which is properly the Congress’, except to the extent that we authorize them to do so.

Mr. President, it clears up an intentional ambiguity. It loses no votes. I believe this gets votes for this amendment, and it certainly makes a better amendment. I hope my colleagues will go along with it.

I yield the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I would be interested in whether it will get the vote of the distinguished Senator from Louisiana if this amendment passes.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I can tell the Senator from Utah what my concern is about this amendment. There was a Treasury study which showed that my State was more heavily impacted than any other State. It made certain assumptions. It made the assumptions that defense would not be cut, as the contract calls for; that Social Security would not be cut, as everyone promised. It was a nationwide study, and it determined, as I recall, the cuts to Louisiana were something like $3 to $4 billion.

Mr. HATCH. May I ask the Senator to comment on his time?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Until I know what makes up the cuts, I cannot vote for the amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, we have been through that argument already, and that is, we have never been able to tell where the cuts are up to now. Until we get this into the Constitution, we never will. That is why we have to get it in the Constitution.

This is a bigger issue than any of our individual States. All of us are concerned about our States, all of us are concerned about what cuts or tax increases, but all of us need to be concerned about the future of this Nation, the future of our children and our grandchildren.

We have a Federal Government that is running away from us; it is out of control. We can debate these things forever. But under the Johnston amendment, allowing suits under section 2 may allow the courts to relax the standing rules that they have. It would be the exact opposite of what everybody in this body would like to see happen. It would be an indication to them we want them to relax standing rules. Presently, courts will not allow standing to give relief that interferes with budgetary processes, and I do not know anybody who would rebut that statement.

Ironically, the Johnston amendment may allow the very thing he fears. I frankly do not know why anybody would want to vote for it who understands the implications of it, but let me just summarize our position on this.

Senator Johnston's amendment would deny all judicial review to enforce the balanced budget amendment, except for section 2 which may give an indication to the courts that they should relax the standing requirements which means even more litigation all over this society, more than ever before, and there would be no way you could stop it.

I believe it is an overreaction to a problem that simply does not exist, and to apply what happens in States—and there have not been many suits in States—to apply that to this just is inapposite.

The ghost that haunts opponents of the balanced budget amendment is that the judiciary will usurp Congress' power delegated to it by the Constitution over spending, borrowing, and taxing matters.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Would—

Mr. HATCH. I do not have enough time or I would yield.

That horrible phantom will place the budgetary process under judicial receivership, through its equitable powers, cut spending programs, and even order the raising of taxes, they say. But the apparition is simply make believe; it is a bad dream. The courts simply do not have the authority to usurp Congress' role in the budgetary process.

That unfounded phobia has its antidote in the time-honored precept of standing and the political question and separation of powers doctrines. As I said, these jurisprudential doctrines stand as impenetrable barriers to the courts commandeering of the democratic process.

Besides, it is just wrong to think that Congress cannot and will not protect its institutional prerogatives. The framers of the Constitution designed a constitutional system whereby each branch of government would have the power to check the zeal of the other branches. In James Madison's words in the Federalist No. 51:

[T]he great security against a gradual concentration of the several powers in the same department, consists in giving to those who administer each department, the necessary constitutional means, and personal motives, to resist encroachments of others. The provision for defence must in this, as in all other cases, be made commensurate to the danger of attack. Ambition must be made to counteract ambition.

Frankly, I find it utterly inconceivable, as a practical matter, that the chairmen of congressional Appropriations, Budget, and Finance Committees and subcommittees, and Congress as a whole, will stand idly by if some district court judge somewhere exceeds his or her authority and allows a case implicating this institution's budget and tax and spending prerogatives to proceed. Why, it defies belief that these Senators like MARK HATFIELD, ROBERT BYRD, PETE DOMENICI, JIM EXON, and leaders like ROBERT DOLE and TOM DASCHLE, and their counterparts in the other body, or any of us, would allow a court to tamper with congressional prerogatives. Congress would do what it would have to do and moot any such case which even hinted at success. Does anyone doubt this?

Moreover, to resist the ambition of the courts, the framers gave to Congress in article III of the Constitution the authority to limit the jurisdiction of the courts and the type of remedies the courts may render. If Congress truly fears certain courts may decide to ignore law and precedent, Congress—if it finds it necessary—may, through implementing legislation pursuant to section 6 of House Joint Resolution 1, forbid courts the use of their injunctive powers altogether. Or, Congress could create an exclusive cause of action or tribunal with carefully limited powers, satisfactory to Congress, to deal with balanced budget complaints.

But Congress should not, as the distinguished Senator from Louisiana proposes, cutoff all judicial review. I believe that House Joint Resolution 1 strikes the right balance in terms of judicial review. By remaining silent about judicial review in the amendment itself, its authors have refused to establish congressional sanction for the Federal courts to involve themselves in fundamental macroeconomic and budgetary questions. At the same time, this balanced budget amendment does not undermine the court's equally fundamental obligation, as first stated in Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch 137, 177 (1803), to "say what the law is" in those cases where standing exists and the separation of powers and political question doctrines do not bar the courts from proceeding. After all, while I am confident that courts will not be able to interfere with our budgetary prerogatives, I am frank to say I cannot predict every conceivable lawsuit which might arise under this amendment, and which does not implicate these budgetary prerogatives. A litigant, in such narrow circumstances, if he or she can demonstrate standing, ought to be able to have their case heard.

JUDICIAL ENFORCEMENT

Nonetheless, I must underscore that keeping open the courthouse door to a litigant who is not seeking to interfere with the spending and taxing powers of Congress, does not license the judiciary to interfere with budgetary decisions. Because this issue is of great importance to my colleagues, I would like at some length to address the concern of some that under the balanced budget amendment courts will become superlegislatures. Indeed, opponents march out a veritable judicial parade of horrors where courts strike down spending measures, put the budgetary process under judicial receivership, and like Charles I of England, raise taxes without the consent of the people's representatives. All of this is a gross exaggeration. This parade has no permit.

I wholeheartedly agree with former Attorney General William P. Barr who stated that if House Joint Resolution 1 is ratified there is "little risk that the amendment will become the basis for judicial micromanagement or superintendence of the federal budget process. Furthermore, to the extent such judicial intrusion does arise, the amendment itself equips Congress to correct the problem by statute. On balance, moreover, whatever remote risk there may be that courts will play an overly intrusive role in enforcing the amendment, that risk is, in my opinion, vastly outweighed by the benefits of such an amendment."

STANDING, SEPARATION OF POWERS, AND POLITICAL QUESTIONS

There exists three basic constraints which prevent the courts from interfering in the budgetary process: First, limitations on Federal courts contained in article III of the Constitution, primarily the doctrine of standing, particularly as enunciated by the Supreme Court in Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 112 S.Ct. 2130 (1992); Second, the deference courts owe to Congress under both the political question doctrine and section 6 of the amendment itself, which confers enforcement authority in Congress; third, the limits on judicial remedies which can be imposed on a coordinate branch of government—in this case, of course, the legislative branch. These are limitations on remedies that are self-imposed by courts and that, in appropriate circumstances, may be imposed on the courts by Congress. These limitations, such as the doctrine of separation of powers, prohibit courts from raising taxes, a power exclusively delegated to Congress by the Constitution and not altered by the balanced budget amendment. Consequently, contrary to the contention of opponents of the balanced budget amendment, separation of power concerns further the purpose of the amendment in that it assures that the burden to balance the budget falls squarely on the shoulders of Congress—which is consistent with the intent of the framers of the Constitution that all budgetary matters be placed in the hands of Congress.

Concerning the doctrine of standing, it is beyond dispute that to succeed in any lawsuit, a litigant must first demonstrate standing to sue. To demonstrate article III standing, a litigant at a minimum must meet three requirements: First, injury in fact—that the litigant suffered some concrete and particularized injury; second, traceability—that the concrete injury was both caused by and is traceable to the unlawful conduct; and third, redressibility—that the relief sought will redress the alleged injury. This is the test enunciated by the Supreme Court in the fairly recent and seminal case of Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 112 S.Ct. 2130, 2136 (1992). [See, e.g., Valley Forge Christian College v. Americans United for Separation of Church & State, Inc., 454 U.S. 464, 482–83 (1982).] In challenging measures enacted by Congress under a balanced budget regime, it would be an extremely difficult hurdle for a litigant to demonstrate the injury-in-fact requirement, that is, something more concrete than a generalized grievance and burden shared by all citizens and taxpayers. I want to emphasize that this is hardly a new concept. See Frothingham v. Mellon, 262 U.S. 447, 487 (1923). Furthermore, courts are not going to overrule this doctrine since standing has been held to be an Article III requirement. See Simon v. Eastern Ky. Welfare Rights Org., 426 U.S. 26, 41 n.22 (1976).

Even in the vastly improbable case where an injury in fact was established, a litigant would find it nearly impossible to establish the traceability and redressibility requirements of the article III standing test. Litigants would have a difficult time in showing that any alleged unlawful conduct—the unbalancing of the budget or the shattering of the debt ceiling—caused or is traceable to a particular spending measure that harmed them. After all, there will be hundreds and hundreds of Federal spending programs even after Federal spending is brought under control. Furthermore, because the Congress would have numerous options to achieve balanced budget compliance, there would be no legitimate basis for a court to nullify or modify a specific spending measure objected to by the litigant.

As to the redressibility prong, this requirement would be difficult to meet simply because courts are wary of becoming involved in the budget process—which is legislative in nature—and separation of power concerns will prevent courts from specifying adjustments to any Federal program or expenditures. Thus, for this reason, Missouri v. Jenkins, 495 U.S. 33 (1990), where the Supreme Court upheld a district court's power to order a local school district to levy taxes to support a desegregation plan, is inapposite because it is a 14th amendment case not involving, as the Court noted, "an instance of one branch of the Federal Government invading the province of another." [Jenkins at 67.] Plainly put, the Jenkins case is not applicable to the balanced budget amendment because section 1 of the 14th amendment—from which the judiciary derives its power to rule against the States in equal protection claims—does not apply to the Federal Government and because the separation of powers doctrine prevents judicial encroachments on Congress' bailiwick. Courts simply will not have the authority to order Congress to raise taxes.

Furthermore, the well-established political question and justiciability doctrines will mandate that courts give the greatest deference to congressional budgetary measures, particularly since section 6 of House Joint Resolution 1 explicitly confers on Congress the responsibility of enforcing the amendment, and the amendment allows Congress to "rely on estimates of outlays and receipts." See Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 217 (1962). Under these circumstances, it is extremely unlikely that a court would substitute its judgment for that of Congress.

Moreover, despite the argument of some opponents of the balanced budget amendment, the taxpayer standing case, Flast v. Cohen, 392 U.S. 83 (1968), is not applicable to enforcement of the balanced budget amendment. First, the Flast case has been limited by the Supreme Court to establishment clause cases. This has been made clear by the Supreme Court in Valley Forge Christian College, 454 U.S. at 480. Second, by its terms, Flast is limited to cases challenging legislation promulgated under Congress' constitutional tax and spend powers when the expenditure of the tax was made for an illicit purpose. Sections 1 and 2 of House Joint Resolution 1, limit Congress' borrowing power and the amendment contains no restriction on the purposes of the expenditures. Finally, in subsequent cases, particularly the Lujan case, the Supreme Court has reaffirmed the need for a litigant to demonstrate particularized injury, thus casting doubt on the vitality of Flast. [See Lujan, 112 S. Ct. at 2136.]

I also believe that there would be no so-called congressional standing for Members of Congress to commence actions under the balanced budget amendment. Although the Supreme Court has never addressed the question of congressional standing, the D.C. circuit has recognized congressional standing, but only in the following circumstances: First, the traditional standing tests of the Supreme Court are met, second, there must be a deprivation within the zone of interest protected by the Constitution or a statute—generally, the right to vote on a given issue or the protection of the efficacy of a vote, and third, substantial relief cannot be obtained from fellow legislators through the enactment, repeal, or amendment of a statute—the so-called equitable discretion doctrine. See Melcher v. Open Market Comm., 836 F.2d 561 (D.C. Cir 1987); Riegle v. Federal Open Market Committee, 656 F.2d 873 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1082 (1981). Because Members of Congress would not be able to demonstrate that they were harmed in fact by any dilution or nullification of their vote—and because under the doctrine of equitable discretion, Members would not be able to show that substantial relief could not otherwise be obtained from fellow legislators through the enactment, repeal or amendment of a statute—it is hardly likely that Members of Congress would have standing to challenge actions under the balanced budget amendment.

THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT AND THE BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT

Furthermore, some of my colleagues contend that because section 6 of House Joint Resolution 1, the section that mandates that Congress enforce the amendment through implementing legislation, is similar to section 5 of the 14th amendment, which permits Congress to enforce that amendment, courts will also be able to enforce the balanced budget amendment to the extent courts enforce the 14th amendment.

This analogy is misleading. First, courts may only enforce an amendment when legislation or executive actions violate the amendment or when Congress creates a cause of action to enforce the amendment. An example of the latter is 42 U.S.C., section 1983, the 1871 Civil Rights Act that implements section 1 of the 14th amendment. Of course, Congress has not created, and need not create, an analogous cause of action under section 6 of the balanced budget amendment, so there is no direct judicial enforcement provision in existence similar to section 1983.

Second, as to the judicial nullification of legislation or executive action that is allegedly inconsistent with a constitutional amendment, the case-or-controversy provision of article III requires that a litigant demonstrate standing. As I have stated at great length already during this debate, it is very improbable that a litigant could demonstrate standing under the balanced budget amendment—that the litigant could demonstrate a particularized injury, different from the generalized harm facing any citizen or taxpayer. Contrast this with cases under the 14th amendment where standing was found because a litigant could demonstrate a particular, individualized, and concrete harm, as in the one man, one vote case. See Reynolds v. Sims, 369 U.S. 186 (1962).

Third, in this circumstance, as I previously explained, under the separation of powers doctrine, courts will not entertain a suit where they cannot supply relief to the litigant. Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 112 S.Ct. 2130 (1992). The Constitution under article I delegates to Congress taxing, spending, and borrowing powers. These are plenary powers that exclusively and historically have been recognized as belonging to Congress. The balanced budget amendment does not alter this. Courts, consequently, will be loathe to interfere with Congress' budgetary powers. It is simply an exaggeration to contend that courts will place the budgetary process under receivership or cut spending programs.

Fourth, as I also explained, the political question doctrine will deter courts from enforcing the balanced budget amendment. Budgetary matters—such as where to cut programs or how to raise revenues—are prototypically a political matter best left to the political branches of government to resolve. Courts, under the political question doctrine, will leave these matters to Congress.

CONGRESS' POWER TO RESTRAIN THE COURTS

Finally, it is simply wrong to assume that Congress would just sit by in the unlikely event that a court would commit some overreaching act. Believe me, Congress knows how to defend itself. Congress knows how to restrict the jurisdiction of courts or limit the scope of judicial remedies. But I do not think this necessary. Lower courts follow precedents, and the precepts of standing, separation of powers, and the political question doctrine, effectively limit the ability of courts to interfere in the budgetary process.

Nevertheless, if necessary, a shield against judicial interference is section 6 of House Joint Resolution 1 itself. Under this section, Congress may adopt statutory remedies and mechanisms for any purported budgetary shortfall, such as sequestration, rescission, or the establishment of a contingency fund. Pursuant to section 6, it is clear that Congress, if it finds it necessary, could limit the type of remedies a court may grant or limit courts' jurisdiction in some other manner to proscribe judicial overreaching. This is nothing new. Congress has adopted such limitations in other circumstances pursuant to its article III authority. Here are a few: First, the Norris-LaGuardia Act, [29 U.S.C. §§101-115], where the courts were denied the use of injunctive powers to restrain labor disputes; Second, the Federal Tax Injunction Act, [28 U.S.C. sec. 2283], which contains a prohibition on Federal courts from enjoining state court proceedings; and third, the tax Injunction Act, [26 U.S.C. sec 7421(a)], where Federal courts were prohibited from enjoining the collection of taxes.

In fact, Congress may also limit judicial review of particular special tribunals with limited authority to grant relief. For instance, the Supreme Court in Yakus v. United States, [319 U.S. 182 (1943)], upheld the constitutionality of a special emergency court of appeals vested with exclusive authority to determine the validity of claims under the World War II Emergency Price Control Act. In more recent times, the Supreme Court, in Dames & Moore v. Reagan, [453 U.S. 654 (1981)], upheld the legality of the Iranian-United States Claims Tribunal as the exclusive forum to settle claims to Iranian assets.

Beyond which, as I have mentioned earlier, in the virtually impossible scenario where these safeguards fail, Congress can take whatever action it must to moot any case in which a risk of judicial overreaching becomes real.

Mr. President, I believe it is clear that the enforcement concerns about the balanced budget amendment do not amount to a hill of beans. The fear of the demon of judicial interference is exorcised by the reality of over a century of constitutional doctrines that prevent unelected courts from interfering with the power of the democratic branch of government and that bestow Congress with the means to protect its prerogatives.

Mr. President, it is very clear. I do not think we should amend this amendment, certainly not with the language the distinguished Senator from Louisiana has brought forth here, which will lead us to more litigation than ever before in worse ways than ever before, and a reduction in the amount of Congress' power that currently exists, especially when we can easily change it in the implementing legislation without any problems.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. JOHNSTON addressed the Chair.

Mr. HATCH. I withhold.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute, just simply to reply to the argument that somehow this language would do away with the requirement for standing.

Mr. President, all this language says is that the judicial power of the United States shall not extend to a case in controversy under this article except for section 2.

Now, I invite a comparison with the present language of the Constitution which says:

The judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made.

Now, under the language of the Constitution which says the judicial power shall extend to cases, controversies, et cetera, the court has required standing. It is the same language that we have in this amendment. Whatever requirement the court will find for standing under this amendment is the same language that inheres under the Constitution. And so, Mr. President, there is no expansion of standing under section 2 under our amendment.

Now, Mr. President, I would yield 2 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Washington.

Mr. GORTON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington.

Mr. GORTON. It seems to me the argument of my distinguished colleague from Utah comes down to a very simple set of inconsistent propositions. Proposition No. 1, courts are not going to get involved in enforcing this amendment. Proposition No. 2, we ought to have the courts involved in enforcing this amendment.

I just simply do not believe that Members can have it both ways. If, in fact, courts are going to stay out by reason of standing or other various doctrines which are not themselves contained in the Constitution, then it certainly does no harm to see to it that that is the result.

If, in fact, it is the proposition of the proponents of this constitutional amendment, some of the proponents because I am one of them, that courts should be involved, then it seems to me they are doing something in this field that almost without exception they deprecate in other fields. Judicial activism should not be invited into the process of writing budgets of the United States. That is a legislative and executive function.

The reason for the amendment is that the Senator from Louisiana, together with this Senator, wants to make certain that this remains solely a function of Congress and of the executive branch of Government. And all Members who feel that the courts may very well be too active today in many social and political issues should vote in favor of the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Arkansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I thank the Chair and I thank the Senator from Louisiana for yielding 2 minutes to me.

Mr. President, very quickly, I want to commend my friend from Louisiana, Senator JOHNSTON, for offering this amendment this afternoon. I truly believe that this is one of the most important amendments and one of the most critical decisions that we will make during the debate on the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States to have and to require a balanced budget.

Mr. President, I want to make two quick points. First, I think if the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana is defeated by this body this afternoon, two things are going to happen. I think the first thing is that this is going to be seen by the courts as an actual invitation to come forward and start implementing the balanced budget to the Constitution of the United States, assuming that two-thirds of the Senators agree and that three-fourths of the States support the balanced budget amendment.

The second thing, Mr. President, I say in all due respect, that I think is going to happen, is that the courts will look at the defeat of the Johnston amendment that we are now considering and are about to vote on, as having established legislative intent—should we defeat this amendment. And I only assume that the courts would ultimately declare that the Senate had decided, through the process of establishing legislative intent, that the courts would be the proper implementing authority to implement the balanced budget clause of the Constitution of the United States; the balanced budget amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

So I see two very bad things coming as a result, Mr. President.

If I could have 1 additional minute, Mr. President?

I thank my friend from Louisiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may proceed.

Mr. PRYOR. I see two very bad things happening if we turn down the Johnston amendment. I think the Johnston amendment is sound. I think if you could take a poll of the country today and ask the people if they want the courts to implement a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution of the United States, if they want an unelected lifetime appointed Federal district judge from wherever to raise the taxes necessary to implement a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution, or in the Constitution, most people would say no. I say that if we fail to support, this afternoon, the very fine, clarifying amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana, there could be a disastrous effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Who yields time?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, how much time remains on each side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana has 17 minutes.

The Senator from Utah has 11½ minutes.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I yield 4 minutes to the Senator from Michigan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has 4 minutes.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I commend the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Washington. These are two Senators who have different positions on the underlying amendment but who have come in very strong agreement on the need to clarify an ambiguity. Whatever side of the issue we are on, the underlying issue, we cannot in good conscience essentially leave a critical ambiguity in the Constitution as to how it is going to be enforced and whether or not the courts are going to be able to enforce this document.

The Senator from Utah, in whom I have a great deal of confidence and trust as a person of honor, says that it is very clear the courts cannot interfere with the budgetary process. And that is his intent. When he says it, as he has a number of times, I accept this as being his intent.

The difficulty is the lead sponsor of this language in the House seems to have a very different intent. So we are caught in an ambiguity. The ambiguity is not just between law professors. The ambiguity is between the language of the sponsor of this amendment that is before us in the House and the lead sponsor in the Senate, on the very important questions of standing to sue and what a court can do.

Representative SCHAEFER, in a formal answer for the RECORD—not a casual comment but a formal answer for the RECORD—he says the courts could invalidate individual appropriation or tax acts. I read this earlier this afternoon. I had it blown up so we could all see exactly what it is that he has said. “The courts could make only a limited range of decisions on a limited number of issues.”

What are they? “They could invalidate an individual appropriation or tax act. They could rule as to whether a given act of Congress or action by the executive violated the requirements of this amendment.” Perhaps he describes that as a limited range of decisions but surely that is a major intrusion in the budgetary processes of the U.S. Government.

I wish the intention were clear. I wish it were clear for the sake of a constitutional amendment which may be adopted.

For many other reasons I hope it will not be. I am one of those who opposes it for a number of reasons. But whatever side of the constitutional amendment issue we are on, it is incumbent on us to have language which is clear as to the heart of the matter, which is the enforcement of it. Over and over again we have stated the intention to balance the budget. The heart of the matter is can it be enforced and, if so, how will it be enforced? What is the mechanism to enforce it? The Johnston amendment clarifies the question of whether courts will take over legislative functions, such as individual appropriation acts or tax acts.

This is not a casual comment by one person who is voting for the amendment in the other body. This is a formal statement for the RECORD—one of many, by the way, which differs from the sponsors here—for instance on questions of standing. It is—

Mr. JOHNSTON. Will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. LEVIN. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Does it not follow, if you have the power to invalidate a tax act, that you also have a power to order a tax?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 4 minutes have expired.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I yield 2 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may proceed for 2 additional minutes.

Mr. LEVIN. I think that may well follow. But if you can invalidate an appropriation act or a tax act you are deep in the budgetary process.

Representative SCHAEFER has said that a Member of Congress, “probably would have standing to file suit.” That is a formal answer to a formal question, “probably would have standing.”

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEVIN. I will be happy to if I have time.

Mr. HATCH. Just one sentence. Congressman SCHAEFER, as sincere as he was, is not a lawyer. His life's work has been in public relations. He was simply wrong. I do not see anybody—I do not know anybody who would argue that they can invalidate individual appropriations or tax acts. He may have been very sincere making that statement. He was simply wrong.

Mr. LEVIN. I believe the Senator from Idaho put the exact same answers in the RECORD on this side, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

This is not a casual answer in a colloquy during a debate. These are formal answers, the questions and answers for the RECORD by the chief sponsor of the constitutional amendment that we are voting on. This was not something he threw off on his way to a press conference. This is formal. I am reading the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in the House, on page 8754 here, and I am reading it precisely. It is—this is a long document of questions and answers for the RECORD.

The courts could invalidate an individual appropriation or tax act.

On the question of standing, if we could get the other quote up here on the question of standing—this is what Representative SCHAEFER said.

A Member of Congress or an appropriate administration official probably would have standing to file suit.

The Senator from Utah—and I take his word. I know—it is not his intent.

When he looks me in the eye and he tells me what his intent is, no question, I accept it. I know him well. But it is very different from what Representative SCHAEFER, who is the prime sponsor of this amendment, is telling us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. LEVIN. May I have one minute? I am out of time. I do not know if the Senator from Utah wants to ask me a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who seeks time?

Mr. HATCH. If I could. I do not know Representative SCHAEFER very well. But I do know his experience in these matters is somewhat limited. The fact that somebody puts something in the RECORD, albeit as sponsor of the amendment—this amendment has been around a long time. He was cosponsor of it. That does not mean he, or anyone else, wrote it.

But let us just talk in terms of what is really involved here.

The contention, for instance, that the balanced budget amendment would allow Federal courts to offer the raising of taxes is absolutely without merit. It is based on a misunderstanding of the case of Missouri versus Jenkins, which was a 14th amendment case.

In that case the Supreme Court in essence approved, by a 5-to-4 vote, a lower court remedial order directing State or county political subdivisions to raise taxes to support a court-ordered school desegregation order. The lower court had previously found that the school district had engaged in intentional segregation, in violation of the 14th amendment's equal protection clause.

The concern that the balanced budget amendment would allow a Federal court to order Congress to raise taxes to reduce the deficit is plainly without merit. Why? Because Jenkins is a 14th amendment case. Under the 14th amendment jurisprudence, Federal courts may perhaps issue this type of remedial relief to force the equal protection clause against the States, but certainly not against Congress, a co-equal branch of Government. The 14th amendment, of course, does not apply to the Federal Government.

No. 2, separation-of-powers concerns would prohibit the judiciary from interfering with the budgetary, taxing, borrowing, and spending powers that are exclusively delegated to Congress by the Constitution.

And, three, Congress simply cannot be made a party-defendant. To order taxes to be raised, Congress would have to be named a defendant. Presumably, suits to enforce the balanced budget amendment would arise when an official or an agency of the executive branch seeks to enforce or administer a statute whose funding is in question in light of the amendment. In the case of Riegle versus Federal Open Market Committee, the court noted that "when a plaintiff alleges injury by unconstitutional actions taken pursuant to a statute, his proper defendants are those acting under the law * * * and not the legislature which enacted the statute."

So, I respect Congressman SCHAEFER, but he just simply is wrong on those statements, and the law says he is wrong.

Mr. President, let me just switch for a minute. I ask unanimous consent that Senator BIDEN be recognized to offer an amendment on capital budgeting following the disposition of Senator Johnston's amendment and Senator BYRD be recognized to offer an amendment following the disposition of Senator Biden's amendment. I also ask unanimous consent that there be a time limit on the Biden amendment prior to a motion to table as follows: 90 minutes under Senator BIDEN's control, 20 minutes under Senator HATCH's control; and, that at the conclusion or yielding of time, the majority leader or his designee be recognized to offer a motion to table the Biden amendment and that no other amendments be in order prior to the motion to table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask that it not be charged to either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania 5 minutes.

How much time do I have left?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eleven minutes 7 seconds.

The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I had asked the distinguished Senator from Louisiana to yield me time because the manager of the bill, the distinguished Senator from Utah, asked me if I could get time. I have not made up my mind yet on the matter, but I wanted to express my concerns about the pending issue's repealability and have some ideas from the manager as to where the issue stood.

While this floor debate has been in process, the Judiciary Committee has been meeting in the Antitrust Subcommittee on the baseball issue. The pending amendment makes it plain that there will not be Federal court jurisdiction, that the judicial power of the United States shall not extend in any case or controversy arising under this article except section 2 here, which may be specifically authorized in implementing legislation pursuant to this section. But I inquire of the Senator from Louisiana what the exception for section 2 refers to.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Section 2 provides that the limit on the debt of the United States held by the public shall not be increased unless three-fifths of the whole number of each House shall provide for that.

Mr. SPECTER. I thank my colleague. That is very limited exception. There is no jurisdiction. The issue of jurisdiction concerns me greatly. Earlier this year, I argued a case at the Supreme Court of the United States involving the Base Closure Commission. The issue was whether Federal courts had jurisdiction of the matter. I had the occasion to do very extensive research on the jurisdictional question. It is my view that there ought not to be jurisdiction in the Federal courts on the compliance with the constitutional amendment. This is a duty on the Congress.

There is the possibility of extensive litigation, and we ought to make our position clear on that in one way or another.

If I may have the attention of the Senator from Utah. I understand the concerns the Senator from Utah has in not wanting to have amendments added to the bill because that subjects the issue to conference, but the question I have of the managers of the measure is what is the import of the absence of this amendment? Will there be jurisdiction of the Federal courts, I first inquire of my colleague from Utah?

Mr. HATCH. Well, first of all, it is not just the concern about going to conference, it is a concern about the House wanting to pass the balanced budget again with this amendment in it. We are not sure where everybody is there. Second, if we do go to conference, we are not sure we can hold on to it. Even so, third, the amendment now, as modified, says, "The judicial power of the United States shall not extend to any case or controversy arising under this article except for section 2 hereof." That has now been put into the amendment, which worries us.

If section 2 is opened up for litigation, then the courts may take that as an implication that we will permit their lessening of the standing requirements and other requirements. So we think that makes it even worse and that would create even more litigation than the Senator is talking about.

Last but not least, we are very concerned that if you cut off litigation rights for cases, which I personally cannot conceive of at this point, but as the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania understands, with his experience in the law, there may be real rights that may have to be brought in the courts for particularized injuries to individuals. Those are the reasons.

Mr. SPECTER. I ask my colleague from Utah, if the language exception as to section 2 were removed, would the amendment be agreeable?

Mr. HATCH. No, it still would not be because of the other reasons. It still would not be agreeable because we believe it is a false issue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Does the Senator wish another minute?

Mr. SPECTER. It depends on how long Senator HATCH's answer is.

Mr. HATCH. It will be at least a minute. We do not believe that we have to fear the courts in this matter, because of the principle of standing, and the doctrines of justiciability, the political question and separation of powers.

Mr. SPECTER. Well, if I may have 30 seconds more, is it the view of my colleague from Utah, the manager of the measure, that there would be no Federal jurisdiction, no jurisdiction in the Federal courts even without this amendment?

Mr. HATCH. I am not sure I understand the question.

Mr. SPECTER. Well, if this amendment is defeated, could the U.S. courts entertain jurisdiction in a suit that is brought challenging the following or compliance with the constitutional amendment for a balanced budget?

Mr. HATCH. Only if the court is extremely activist and not willing to follow the law.

Mr. SPECTER. Only if the court is—

Mr. HATCH. There may be jurisdiction, but there will not be any standing. That is the difference. It would take a very activist judge, who I think would be slapped down very quickly.

Mr. SPECTER. If you are going to rely on standing, the vagaries of that issue, or a defense that may be advanced to stop somebody from going into court, that is very perilous ground. I think it is advisable for this body to face the jurisdictional issue squarely. I think we ought to say whether or not we wish the Federal courts to have jurisdiction over compliance with the constitutional amendment for a balanced budget.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania, who has one of the best legal minds in this body, has put his finger directly on the question. It is not clear whether there would be standing, justiciability, or whether it would be a political question. But the majority of the opinions I have seen indicate that there would be such standing. The Harvard Law Review demonstrates, however, that taxpayers probably would have standing to challenge. Professor Tribe, Judge Bork, and on and on, Mr. President. The better view is that there probably is standing that the courts would interfere, but it is not clear and it ought to be cleared up. That is what this amendment does.

Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CRAIG). The Senator from Louisiana has 4½ minutes. The Senator from Utah has 7½ minutes.

Mr. HATCH. Can I ask the date of that law review article?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Harvard Law Review, 1983.

Mr. HATCH. That preceded the Lujan case. The law review articles precede that case and are not applicable.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask that it not be charged to either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JEFFORDS). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I oppose the Johnston amendment because it is unnecessary and based on false premises. Under the constitutional balanced budget amendment before us, the Congress will have the authority to enforce the balanced budget amendment. All issues regarding the implementation and enforcement of the amendment will be resolved through implementing legislation.

A constitutional amendment necessarily is limited to general principles. It cannot spell out all issues that could arise under that amendment. Many constitutional amendments provide that Congress can enforce the provision through appropriate legislation. House Joint Resolution 1 follows in that tradition.

I agree that any litigation that might be brought under this amendment should be resolved expeditiously. But the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana is not necessary to achieve that result. Congress can set the appropriate jurisdiction of the Federal courts. Congress can pass implementing legislation that provides for Federal court actions only. And it can provide for expedited review of lower court decisions and set forth the available relief.

However, Congress cannot adopt the suggestion of the Senator from Louisiana that Congress could give the Supreme Court original jurisdiction to hear a case under the balanced budget amendment. The Supreme Court ruled in Marbury versus Madison that Congress cannot expand the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

Only litigants with standing to challenge governmental action under the amendment would be able to file a lawsuit under the requirements of article III. Some few individuals might have standing. Even these individuals, however, would not be able to require a judicial resolution of their cases if the Court concludes that the case raises a political question.

Under the political question doctrine, courts will not decide cases raising issues that appropriately fall within the authority of the other two branches.

For example, the Constitution guarantees a Republican form of government.

But the courts have refused to issue decisions in cases raising that constitutional provision because its enforcement appropriately lies within the authority of the political branches. Similarly, courts have refused to intervene in challenges to the President's authority over foreign affairs.

Many of the questions raised under this amendment would also be political ones that courts would not rule on.

All the supporters of the balanced budget amendment are concerned with the idea of courts potentially making tax and spending decisions. We intend that courts not do that. And we will pass implementing legislation to address the process by which any litigation can be brought. There is no need to preclude judicial enforcement pending the enactment of that implementing legislation.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the Johnston amendment.

I am not a lawyer, but legal and constitutional experts I trust and respect have convinced me that the supposed problem with judicial review is, at best, no problem at all; and, at worst, it is a red herring that may give some Senators an excuse to vote no on the BBA.

I start with Senator HATCH, an outstanding constitutional lawyer. If there were a risk of judicial intrusion into legislative matters, he would be the down here arguing for an amendment to restrict the power of the courts.

I am convinced that there is no risk of improper court action. Otherwise, I would be the first Senator down here supporting a limit on judicial review.

I am persuaded by the testimony of former Attorney General William Barr. To summarize what he said:

There is a remote risk of judicial micromangement; if judicial intrusion arose, Congress could correct it by statute;

The remote, correctable risk was far outweighed by the need for, and the benefits of the balanced budget amendment;

There would rarely—if ever—be standing to sue;

The Constitution, the balanced budget amendment itself, and long-established judicial and constitutional doctrines all require the courts to pay great deference to Congress' handling of legislative business, especially when Congress acts affirmatively to establish statutory processes to enforce and implement the amendment.

Former Attorney General Griffin Bell, a Democrat from the Carter administration appeared before the Judiciary Committee this year to strongly endorse the balanced budget amendment.

In a 1992 memo to Representative L.F. PAYNE on this subject, the Lincoln Legal Foundation said this:

(T)here is virtually no danger that the constitutional balanced budget amendment . . . would cede the power of the purse to a runaway judiciary. To the contrary, it would eliminate certain authorities that courts currently have to order the disbursement of federal funds without appropriations.

Last year, in testimony, attorney John C. Armor told the Judiciary Committee:

The balanced budget amendment a suitable addition to the Constitution;

Limited judicial review was appropriate;

Congress is already empowered in the Constitution to limit judicial intrusion appropriately through statute.

Finally, I refer to an excellent brief memo by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce that summarizes how judicial action will be limited appropriately.

I am tired of opponents to the balanced budget amendment citing the Missouri v. Jenkins case.

I agree that Missouri v. Jenkins was decided wrongly; but that case has nothing to do with the legal or constitutional considerations around this amendment.

That was a case of Federal preemption. That was a case of the Federal courts enforcing Federal law on a local school district.

Let us look at our Constitution:

Article I says, "All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States * * *

Raising taxes is a legislative power.

Writing budgets and setting priorities is a legislative power.

Article III says: " * * * the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction, both as to law and fact, with such exceptions, and under such regulations as the Congress shall make."

Let us look at the amendment itself:

Section 6 says Congress will enforce and implemented the BBA;

Section 6, by expressly allowing good faith reliance on reasonable estimates, allows Congress reasonable flexibility and reduces the likelihood of second-guessing by the courts;

Section 2, by subjecting Congress to 3/5 votes on the limit on debt held by the public, makes the amendment essentially self-enforcing and locates that self-enforcement squarely in Congress.

No other amendment to the Constitution removes the courts from the process of enforcement.

In fact, the very, very slight chance that some case may come before the courts is a good thing; it will motivate Congress to make sure we comply with the amendment and stay out of court. It will reassure American people that the same branches of Government that built up a $4.7 trillion debt, will at least have the legality of their actions subject to fair and impartial interpretation.

At the same time, judicial involvement will be limited to, in the words of Marbury versus Madison, "saying what the law is." They may strike down a piece of budget legislation—we may be told to go back and start over. They may rule whether an action by the President is or is not contrary to the amendment.

It does not mean the courts can write a budget or raise taxes. But interpreting the law is the job of the courts. Congress can enact reasonable limitations on judicial review. All of which is appropriate, limited, and balanced.

As Senator BROWN has pointed out, the experience of the States with that flood of lawsuits has never materialized.

Finally, as Senator SIMON has said, if we balance the budget, if we run small surpluses, if we take care to vote on the issues the amendment says to vote on, we will never be hauled into court.

I ask unanimous consent that the various documents that I have just referred to be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF WILLIAM P. BARR, SENATE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY, HEARINGS ON THE BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT, JANUARY 5, 1995

Mr. Chairman and distinguished members of the Committee: I am honored to have been invited today to testify on the Balanced Budget Amendment.

You have asked me to discuss whether judicial enforcement of the Amendment would result in undue interference by the federal courts in the budget process.

In my view, though it is always difficult to predict the course of future constitutional law development, the courts' role in enforcing the Balanced Budget Amendment will be quite limited. I see little risk that the Amendment will become the basis for judicial micromanagement or superintendence of the federal budget process. Furthermore, to the extent such judicial intrusion does arise, the Amendment itself equips Congress to correct the problem by statute. On balance, moreover, whatever remote risk there may be that courts will play an overly intrusive role in enforcing the amendment, that risk is, in my opinion, vastly outweighed by the benefits of such an Amendment.

I believe there are three basic constraints that will tend to prevent the courts from becoming unduly involved in the budgetary process: (1) the limitations on the power of federal courts contained in Article III of the Constitution—primarily the requirement of standing; (2) the deference courts would owe to Congress, both under existing constitutional doctrines, and particularly under section 6 of the amendment itself, which expressly confers enforcement responsibility on Congress; and (3) the limits on judicial remedies running against coordinate branches of government, both that the courts have imposed upon themselves and that, in appropriate circumstances, Congress may impose on the courts.

I will discuss each of these constraints in turn. Before I do, however, let me note that my remarks will focus on sections 1 and 2 of the Amendment. It is these provisions that would create new limits on Congress' power to borrow and to expend borrowed funds, and those new limits may potentially give rise to new opportunities for courts to intrude themselves into the budgetary process in ways they currently cannot. Section 4 of the Amendment, in contrast, presents no such new opportunity or risk for judicial interference in the budgetary process. Section 4 merely adds further procedural requirements for the passage of revenue bills, and courts today already may entertain claims that revenue bills (either taxes or user fees) do not comply with clear constitutional procedures.

I. ARTICLE III LIMITATIONS

Article III of the Constitution confines the jurisdiction of the federal courts to "Cases" or "Controversies." As an essential part of this case-or-controversy limitation, any plaintiff who hopes to invoke the judicial power of the federal courts must demonstrate sufficient "standing."

Although the Court has not been completely consistent in defining this doctrine, its fundamental principles remain clear. At an irreducible minimum, a plaintiff must show three things to satisfy the standing requirement: (1) "injury in fact"—that he personally has suffered some concrete and particularized injury; (2) "traceability"—that the particularized injury was caused by, and is fairly traceable to, the allegedly illegal conduct; and (3) "redressability"—that the relief sought will likely redress the plaintiff's injury. E.g., Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 2136 (1992); Valley Forge Christian College v. Americans United For Separation of Church & State, Inc., 454 U.S. 464, 482-83 (1982); Simon v. Eastern Kentucky Welfare Rights Organization, 426 U.S. 26, 38, 41 (1976).

Basically, we can anticipate two kinds of court challenges relating to sections 1 and 2 of the Balanced Budget Amendment: (1) a claim that a particular budgetary action (such as a spending or borrowing measure) violates the Amendment or its implementing statutes by "unbalancing" the budget or by exceeding the applicable debt limit, or (2) a claim that one of the implementing mechanisms enacted by Congress pursuant to section 6 of the Amendment is itself in violation of section 1 or 2. In either case, I believe, few plaintiffs would be able to establish the requisite standing to invoke federal court review.

The "injury in fact" requirement alone would be an imposing hurdle. It is fundamental that, to establish "injury in fact," a plaintiff cannot rely on generalized grievances and burdens shared by all citizens and taxpayers, but rather must be able to show a particularized injury that he has distinctively sustained. No private citizen or group would have standing to obtain judicial enforcement of the Amendment solely by virtue of their status as a citizen or taxpayer. Their supposed injury—the burden of deficit spending and increased debt—is shared by all taxpayers and is precisely the kind of "generalized grievance" to which the judicial power does not extend. As the Supreme Court recently reiterated: "As an ordinary matter, suits premised on federal taxpayer status are not cognizable in the federal courts because a taxpayer's 'interest in the moneys of the Treasury . . . is shared with millions of others, is comparatively minute and indeterminable; and the effect upon future taxation, or any payments out of the funds, so remote, fluctuating and uncertain, that no basis is afforded for [judicial intervention].'" Asarco, Inc. v. Kadish, 490 U.S. 605, 613 (1989) (quoting Frothingham v. Mellon, 262 U.S. 447, 487 (1923)).

Moreover, even in the case where a plaintiff could establish "injury in fact"—by showing, for example, that a specific budgetary action causes particularized and distinct harm to him—it would still be difficult for that plaintiff to satisfy the remaining two elements of Article III standing—the traceability and redressability requirements. Given the myriad components of any budget, most plaintiffs would be unable to show that the putatively illegal conduct—the unbalancing of the budget or the breaking of the debt ceiling—was “caused” by, and hence is fairly traceable to, the particular spending measure that has allegedly harmed them. Moreover, a plaintiff would be hard put to demonstrate redressibility because the political branches would have numerous ways to achieve compliance with the Amendment—other than by eliminating the specific measure harming the plaintiff. There would thus be no legitimate basis for a court to single out and strike down the specific spending measure to which the plaintiff objects.

I should for a moment address the case of Flast v. Cohen, 392 U.S. 83 (1968), where the Supreme Court, 27 years ago, allowed a taxpayer to mount an Establishment Clause challenge against federal aid to parochial schools. Flast is the only instance where the Court has departed from its rigorous restriction on taxpayer standing. Flast plainly has no application to the present context and would not authorize general taxpayer standing to seek judicial enforcement of the Balanced Budget Amendment. First, the Court has never identified any constitutional restriction on the powers of Congress other than the Establishment Clause that might support an exception to the general prohibition on taxpayer standing. Moreover, by its terms, Flast is limited to cases challenging congressional action taken under its tax-and-spending power (Art. I, Sec. 8, Cl. 1 of the Constitution) when the expenditure of tax revenue is made for an illicit purpose. In contrast, sections 1 and 2 of the Balanced Budget Amendment limit Congress' borrowing power (a separate power, enumerated in Art. I, Sec. 8, Cl. 2) and contains no restriction on the purposes of congressional expenditures. The Court has expressly declined to extend Flast beyond the exercise of Congress' power under Art. I, Sec. 8, Cl. 1 to other fiscal provisions. See, e.g., Valley Forge Christian College, 454 U.S. at 480. And finally, in subsequent cases, the Supreme Court has consistently reaffirmed to need for all plaintiffs to demonstrate particularized injury, thus casting doubt on the continued vitality of Flast. I cannot see the Court resurrecting and extending Flast in the context of the Balanced Budget Amendment.

There remains the question whether, by virtue of their office, Members of Congress can establish standing where a private citizen could not. The Supreme Court has never recognized congressional standing, and forceful arguments have been advanced against it. See Barnes v. Kline, 759 F.2d 21, 41-51 (D.C. Cir. 1985) (Bork, J., dissenting), vacated as moot sub nom. Burke v. Barnes, 479 U.S. 361 (1987). Those lower courts that have allowed congressional standing have limited it in ways that would greatly restrict its use in efforts to enforce the Balanced Budget Amendment. First, Members must demonstrate that they have suffered injury in fact by dilution or nullification of their congressional voting power. In addition, Members must still satisfy the other requirements of Article III standing, including the traceability and redressibility requirements. And finally, under the doctrine of “equitable discretion,” recognized by the D.C. Circuit, Members must show that substantial relief could not otherwise be obtained from fellow legislators through the enactment, repeal or amendment of a statute. See Melcher v. Federal Open Market Comm., 836 F.2d 561, 563 (D.C. Cir. 1987).

Even if the legitimacy of congressional standing, in principle, were ultimately accepted by the Supreme Court, I would expect that doctrine would have narrow application in the context of the Balanced Budget Amendment. Even if a circumstance arose where a Member could meet the first two requirements, it seems that, absent a serious and clear abuse, the equitable discretion doctrine would militate strongly against allowing congressional standing. This is not like the Pocket Veto cases where the Executive has allegedly “nullified” a Member's vote; here it is Congress itself that is taking the challenged action. If the doctrine of “equitable discretion” has any force, it should apply to limit judicial actions by individual Members who wish to challenge enforcement of the Congress' own budgetary decisions, since the real grievance of the congressional plaintiffs in such a case would be the failure to persuade their fellow legislators of the correctness of their point of view. See Moore v. United States House of Representatives, 733 F.2d 946, 956 (D.C. Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1106 (1985); Riegle v. Federal Open Market Comm., 656 F.2d 873, 881 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 1082 (1981).

It is obvious from this discussion that I view Article III's standing requirement as a principal safeguard against undue judicial activism in this area. But I would be the last to say that the standing doctrine is an ironclad shield against judicial activism. The doctrine is malleable and it has been manipulated by the courts in the past. There is a clear trend, however, toward narrowing the parameters of constitutional standing. See Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, supra; Valley Forge Christian College, supra. Furthermore, we can anticipate that the congressional budgetary process is not likely to be a field where the courts would be eager to stretch the doctrine. The federal budget and the public debt limits do not typically implicate sensitive individual rights, and thus there may be less temptation for courts to apply the standing requirements more loosely. In addition, courts are not expert at fathoming the ins and outs of budgetary arcana, and there is no reason to think they would be so inclined to enter that thicket as to manipulate standing principles to do so. Nevertheless, the possibility remains. One way to minimize the risk of such judicial activism is for Congress to take care in the wording of any particular statutes that are enacted in implementing the Amendment so as not to give rise to colorable claims of standing or private rights of action.

Before moving on, I should also point out for the Committee one area that I believe does hold some potential for mischief and that Congress may wish to address. That is the area of state court review. The constraints of Article III do not, of course, apply to state courts, which are courts of general jurisdiction. State courts are not bound by the “case or controversy” requirement or the other justiciability principles, even when deciding issues of federal law, including the interpretation of the Federal Constitution. Asarco, Inc., 490 U.S. at 617. Accordingly, it is possible that a state court could entertain a challenge to a federal statute under the Balanced Budget Amendment despite the fact that the plaintiffs would not satisfy the requirements for standing in federal court. Absent an applicable provision in federal law for exclusive jurisdiction in the federal courts, the state court in such a circumstance would have the authority to render a binding legal judgment. Ibid. The only avenue for federal review would be by certiorari to the Supreme Court, which has held that it may exercise its discretionary jurisdiction in such cases “if the judgment of the state court causes direct, specific, and concrete injury to the parties who petition for * * * review, where the requisites of a case or controversy are also met.” Id. at 623-24.

To avoid the possibility that a federal statute or the federal budgetary process itself might be entangled in such a state court challenge, I would suggest that Congress include a provision for exclusive federal jurisdiction in any implementing legislation enacted pursuant to section 6 of the Amendment. Such a provision should be carefully worded so as not to create inadvertently any implied right of judicial review in federal court and so as not to affect any of the otherwise applicable limitations on justiciability discussed in this statement.

II. JUDICIAL DEFERENCE

Let me now turn to the second factor that will constrain judicial overreaching. In those cases where standing is established and the court proceeds to review the merits of a claim under the Balanced Budget Amendment, there is no reason to believe that the court would readily second-guess decisions made by the political branches. On the contrary, following long-established doctrine, as well as the Amendment's own explicit dictates, a reviewing court is likely to accord the utmost deference to the choices made by Congress in carrying out its responsibilities under the Amendment.

This judicial deference would be strongest in cases challenging the implementing mechanisms adopted by Congress. The Balanced Budget Amendment, in essence, mandates certain results (balanced budgets and capped debt) and leaves it to Congress to put in place mechanisms to achieve those results. It is well-established that where the Constitution requires a certain “end,” Congress will be given the widest latitude in selecting “means” to achieve that end. Thus, for example, the courts have accorded broad deference to Congress in its selection of appropriate enforcement mechanisms under section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment. See Katzenbach v. Morgan, 384 U.S. 641 (1966). And in the context of the apportionment process, where the Constitution mandates in fairly precise terms that Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States “according to their respective Numbers” (Art. I, Sec. 2, Cl. 3), the Supreme Court has deferred to Congress' choice of the method for apportionment, even though a State adversely affected could demonstrate that another method might yield a more accurate result. See U.S. Dep't of Commerce v. Montana, 112 S. Ct. 1415, 1429 (1992).

The need for deference would be even more compelling in cases under the Balanced Budget Amendment, since the language of the Amendment explicitly confers on Congress, in mandatory terms, the responsibility for implementing the Amendment and specifically allows Congress in so doing to “rely on estimates of outlays and receipts” (emphasis added). Unless the implementing and enforcement provisions adopted by Congress are plainly incompatible with the Amendment, it is unlikely a court would substitute its judgment for choices made by Congress.

Even in challenges to specific budgetary actions—for example, a claim that a particular spending measure threatens to unbalance the budget—the courts would tend to defer to the judgments of the political branches, except where a constitutional violation is clear. Not only do courts start with the general presumption that Congress has acted constitutionally, see Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp. v. R.A. Gray & Co., 467 U.S. 717, 729 (1984), but that general rule of deference is substantially reinforced by the Amendment's explicit assignment of implementation responsibility to Congress in section 6, including the express recognition that Congress may rely on estimates—a process that inherently involves discretionary and expert judgments. It is precisely when reviewing these kinds of technical fiscal issues—matters uniquely within the province and expertise of the political branches—where the courts are most inclined to defer to the sound judgment of the Congress and the Executive.

In sum, then, even where the courts reach the merits of a claim under the Balanced Budget Amendment, we are far more likely to see deference to Congress than heavy-handed second-guessing by the courts. This is not to say that courts will ignore clear instances of abuse; however, it is precisely in such cases—in which the violations are not arguable but palpable—where judicial intervention is most appropriate.

II. LIMITATIONS ON JUDICIAL REMEDIES

For the reason outlined above, I am confident the courts will entertain very few suits challenging congressional actions under the Balanced Budget Amendment, and that, when and if they do, the courts will be inclined to defer to the judgments of Congress and the Executive in the budget area. Assuming, however, that a court might entertain such a suit and might declare a particular budgetary action unconstitutional as a violation of the Amendment, there are still further judicial constraints making it unlikely a court will order intrusive remedies in such a case. As I see it, these constraints fall into two categories: prudential considerations that will limit a court's exercise of its remedial powers and limitations created by section 6 of the Amendment itself.

First, courts are appropriately wary of becoming too deeply involved in superintending decisions and processes that are essentially legislative in character, and for that reason, any court—most certainly the Supreme Court—will hesitate to impose remedies that could embroil it in the supervision of the budgetary process. Indeed, in the context of the Balanced Budget Amendment, the choice of any specific remedy—for example, an order specifying a particular adjustment of expenditures to bring the federal budget back into compliance with the Amendment—would invariably require the court to displace Congress by making a policy decision that is inherently legislative and therefore inappropriate for the courts. I believe it far more likely that a court faced with a violation of the Amendment would take the less intrusive route of simply declaring the particular action at issue unconstitutional and leaving it to Congress to choose the appropriate remedy.

There are plenty of cases in which the Supreme Court has followed this route. For example, in Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 (1976), the Court declared the composition of the Federal Election Commission unconstitutional as a violation of the Appointments Clause, but stayed the Court's judgment to "afford Congress an opportunity to reconstitute the Commission by law or to adopt other valid enforcement mechanisms" that would remedy the violation. Id. at 143. And recently, in Harper v. Virginia Dept. of Taxation, 113 S. Ct. 2510 (1993), where the Court refused to order refund of the amounts improperly collected and held instead that the fashioning of an appropriate remedy was properly left to state authorities. See id. 2519-20.

Even in cases where there has been a proven violation of the Fourteenth Amendment, the Court has required the same respect for a legislature's ability to devise remedies involving the exercise of the legislature's taxing authority. In Missouri v. Jenkins, 495 U.S. 33 (1990), the Court confirmed that "the imposition of a tax increase by a federal court," even as a remedy for racial segregation by a state school district, must be "an extraordinary event." Id. at 51. "In assuming for itself the fundamental and delicate power of taxation," the Court held, "the District Court not only intruded on local authority but circumvented it altogether. Before taking such a drastic step the District Court was obliged to assure itself that no permissible alternative would have accomplished the required task." Ibid. According to the Court, "the very complexity of the problems of financing and managing a * * * public school system suggests that * * * the legislature's efforts to tackle the problems should be entitled to respect" and that "local officials should at least have the opportunity to devise their own solutions to these problems." Id. at 52 (internal quotation marks removed). The Court in Jenkins upheld the district court's power to order a local school district to levy its own taxes because such a levy was the only means by which the school district could raise funds adequate to comply with the court's desegregation order. See id. at 55-58. That could never be the case with any potential violation of the Balanced Budget Amendment, which imposes a cap on spending and the public debt, rather than an obligation to raise revenues. There will always be a myriad of policy choices available to Congress for avoiding infringement of the budget cap.

Jenkins is also readily distinguishable from the context of the Balanced Budget Amendment on the ground that Jenkins did not involve "an instance of one branch of the Federal Government invading the province of another," but instead involved a court order "that brings the weight of federal authority upon a local government and a State." Id. at 67 (Kennedy, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment). The distinction is critical because under Article I, Section 1, "[a]ll legislative Powers" granted under the Federal Constitution are vested in Congress, and the enumeration of legislative powers begins by providing that "[t]he Congress shall have Power To lay and collect Taxes" (Art. I, Sec. 8, Cl. 1). Based on these provisions, the Court has stated that "[t]axation is a legislative function, and Congress * * * is the sole organ for levying taxes." National Cable Television Ass'n v. United States, 415 U.S.C. 336, 340 (1974). See Missouri v. Jenkins, 495 U.S. at 67 (Kennedy, J.).

A second source of limitations on the courts' exercise of their remedial powers is found in the Amendment itself. Under section 6, which provides that "[t]he Congress shall enforce and implement this article by appropriate legislation," Congress will have the authority to adopt remedies for any purported violation of the Amendment. Congress, for example, could provide for correcting a threatened budget imbalance or overspending through sequestration, rescission or other devices. In addition, section 6 logically gives Congress the power to limit the types of remedies that might be ordered by a court. This power is consistent with Article III's delegation of authority to Congress to define and limit the jurisdiction of the federal courts, and would allow Congress, for example, to deny courts the ability to order injunctive relief for violations of the Amendment. Congress has adopted such limitations in other contexts. See, e.g., Norris-LaGuardia Act, 29 U.S.C. §§ 101-115 (prohibiting courts from entering injunctions in labor disputes); Federal Anti-Injunction Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2283 (prohibiting federal courts from enjoining state court proceedings); Tax Injunction Act, 26 U.S.C. § 7421(a) (prohibiting suits to restrain the assessment or collection of taxes).

These powers given to Congress will compound the courts' self-imposed prudential concerns, with the result that the courts will be even more hesitant to order intrusive remedies for ostensible violations of the Amendment. Courts regularly defer to remedies that have been crafted by Congress. This deference is shown even in cases involving the vindication of individual rights. The Supreme Court, for example, has held that Congress may adopt procedures limiting the remedies available in so-called Bivens actions, which are actions brought against federal officials for the violation of an individual's constitutional rights. See Bush v. Lucas, 462 U.S. 367, 388-90 (1983). Similarly, in devising a judge-made remedy for violations of the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination in Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436 (1966), the Court recognized that "Congress and the States are free to develop their own safeguards" to redress violations of the privilege and that such alternative remedies would be respected by the courts. See id. at 490. Moreover, even if Congress does not exercise the authority granted to it under section 6, the courts will undoubtedly be aware of Congress' ability to limit the relief that courts may grant, and this awareness in and of itself will likely check any tendency on the part of the courts to develop their own creative remedies for violation of the balanced budget requirement.

IV. THE AMENDMENT'S EFFICACY

Some have suggested that the federal courts' limited role in enforcing the Balanced Budget Amendment makes the Amendment a "paper tiger." Their premise is that, unless the courts are there to coerce compliance at every turn, the political branches will flout their constitutional responsibilities. These critics do not argue for a greater role for the courts so much as they dismiss the Amendment as a feckless exercise. In my view, this critique is mistaken: it is based on a distorted view of the Constitution and ignores the practical experience of over two centuries.

First, of course, the point is not that the courts will never be there; it is that we need not fear an avalanche of litigation, with the courts regularly reviewing fiscal decisions and effectively usurping the proper functions of the political branches. Where the judicial power can properly be invoked, it will most likely be reserved to address serious and clearcut violations.

More importantly, Members of Congress and Presidents seek to conform their actions to constitutional norms, not because of external threats of judicial coercion, but primarily because of their own fidelity to constitutional principles. After all, it is not only judges who must take an oath of allegiance to the Constitution. Just as the vast majority of citizens obey the law because they wanted to—not because they fear the police—so too those who serve in the political branches feel constrained by constitutional requirements and strive to obey them, whether backed by judicial sanction or not. Congress, for example, has dutifully provided for a census every ten years since the 1790s, as required by the Constitution, without court order. Even in an area as unreviewable and murky as the War Powers, the political branches strive to comply with constitutional norms. And the Senate has always administered responsibly its sole power to try cases of impeachment, without allowing such trials to degenerate into kangaroo courts, even though the exercise of that power is not subject to the check of judicial review. See Nixon v. United States, 113 S. Ct. 732 (1993). As Judge Williams put it in the Nixon case:

"If the Senate should ever be ready to abdicate its responsibilities to schoolchildren, or, moved by Caligula's appointment of his horse as senator, to an elephant from the National Zoo, the republic will have sunk to depths from which no court could rescue it. And if the senators try to ignore the clear requirement of a two-thirds vote for conviction, they will have to contend with public outrage that will ultimately impose its sanction at the ballot box. Absent judicial review, the Senate takes sole responsibility for its impeachment procedures as a full-fledged constitutional actor, just as the framers intended." Nixon v. United States, 938 F.2d 239, 246 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (footnote omitted), aff'd, 113 S. Ct. 732 (1993).

For over 200 years, day after day, the business of government has gone forward in prescribed channels, with judicial enforcement the exception, not the rule. The Balanced Budget Amendment will be effective without judges hovering at Congress' elbow; the Congress will carry it out and it will achieve its intended results.

Finally, we can rest assured that the Amendment will be policed through the most effective enforcement mechanism of all—the watchfulness and wrath of the American people. After all, the requirements of the Balanced Budget Amendment are not like those of the Appointments Clause or the Emoluments Clause, which could be violated with virtually no political fallout. Rather, they touch upon one of the core political concerns of the people. Does anyone seriously maintain that Congress could thumb its nose at a constitutional balanced budget requirement with impunity? Or play fast-and-loose with it and escape political retribution? It is precisely in areas like this, where the political check is so potent, that we can safely trust in its efficacy.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

STATEMENT OF GRIFFIN B. BELL, SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE, BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION, JANUARY 5, 1995

The missing element in our constitutional system is the absence of a provision requiring a balanced budget, provided reasonable safeguards are in place to protect the national defense and to assure the national interest in the event of a depression.

Almost all the states have a balanced budget requirement in their respective State Constitutions. This is the safeguard which assures State financing only for services which are within the states' abilities to pay.

The federal government completely controls the money machine in the sense that it can borrow funds without limit. There is no inherent self-discipline built into the system. The only limit on federal spending is in the collective will of the Congress and the President. The federal debt is now so high that the country is, in effect, under normal rules, in bankruptcy. But the federal government does not have to declare bankruptcy. It can continue to borrow money to pay the interest on the debt and to continue to borrow money over and above the principal amount already owed. We long ago began using Social Security taxes as a part of the general fund to support this debt load, contrary to the belief of most Americans that Social Security taxes were being put into a trust fund for their future needs.

Without a constitutional restraint, there is no hope whatever of paying off the present debt, much less for stopping the creation of additional debt. We should be thankful for today's low interest rates, else we would have a greater economic crisis on our hands.

In the famous letters between Lord McCaulay of England and Henry Stevens Randall, the first Jefferson biographer, and in particularly the letter dated May 23, 1857, Lord McCaulay expressed concerns about the lack of controls on the fisc.

He said, and I quote: "I seriously apprehend that you will, in [a] season of adversity

... do things which will prevent prosperity from returning; that you will act like people who [would], in a year of scarcity, devour all the seed corn, and thus make the next year a year, not of scarcity, but of absolute famine. There will be, I fear, spoilation. The spoilation will increase the distress. The distress will produce fresh spoilation. There is nothing to stop you. Your Constitution is all sail and no anchor."

McCaulay was correct. Without a constitutional amendment requiring a balanced budget, our Constitution truly is all sail and no anchor. The lack of an anchor has placed our country in the peril that it is now in because of our monstrous and increasing debt and ever escalating entitlements.

I have never heard anyone suggest that we begin to pay off our debt. It would not be out of reason to set the debt aside and retire it on a sinking fund basis, just as is done with state and municipal bonds at the present time. The debt could be gradually reduced once the budget is balanced by including a payment on the principal of the debt, thus reducing interest payments which make up a large part of our federal budget.

In this way, we would pay the debt of our own generation, rather than transferring it to our children and grandchildren.

The other example of lack of discipline on the part of our law makers is the cost-of-living index and its impact on the debt. The cost-of-living index is a self-fulfilling prophecy for annual inflation, particularly when the cost-of-living index seems to produce a figure which is always higher as to most people than actual inflation. The Congress can revamp the cost-of-living index to make it the same or less than the actual rate of inflation. This alone would go a long way toward bringing the budget in balance over a few years.

There is something sinister about basing entitlements of all kinds on an automatic cost-of-living index, particularly when the index is higher than the actual inflation. This is a giveaway scheme of the worst sort and exceeds any reasonable basis of governing.

Thus, a combination of a balanced budget amendment to our Constitution, with savings on interest over time and with a gradual reduction in debt principal, coupled with an adjustment of the cost-of-living index will restore fiscal sanity to our government.

We must begin to speak in plain English when referring to our debt. It will not do to speak of mere reductions in the deficits as savings.

THE LINCOLN LEGAL FOUNDATION,
Chicago, IL, June 5, 1992.

Hon. L.F. PAYNE,
House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PAYNE: On behalf of the Lincoln Legal Foundation, let me extend my thanks to you for providing this opportunity to comment on the proposed Balanced Budget Amendment outlined in H.J. Res. 290. We at the Foundation take pride in serving as advocates for the broad public interest in defending liberty, free enterprise, and the separation of powers. It is in this capacity that we have undertaken our evaluation of the proposed Amendment.

We have confined our remarks to the prospects for judicial enforcement of the Balanced Budget Amendment. Critics have charged that the Amendment will unleash an avalanche of litigation, thereby paving the way for the micro-management of budgetary policy by the federal judiciary. As defenders of the Madisonian system of checks and balances, we at the Foundation take such charges seriously and have scrutinized them in light of the relevant case law.

We begin with a brief overview of standing doctrine and its impact on the justiciability of the proposed Amendment. We then consider the political question doctrine and the barriers it creates to judicial review. We conclude with our recommendations for refining and implementing the Amendment.

I. STANDING UNDER THE BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT

Standing refers to a plaintiff's interest in the issue being litigated. Generally speaking, in order to have standing a plaintiff must have a direct, individualized interest in the outcome of the controversy at hand. Persons airing generalized grievances, common to the public at large, invariably lack standing.

Limitations on standing stem from two sources. Article III Section II of the Constitution restricts the jurisdiction of the federal judiciary to "cases" and "controversies." As a result, only plaintiffs with a personal stake in the outcome of a particular case have standing to litigate. The general prohibition against advisory opinions also can be traced to Article III.

In addition to Article III restrictions, federal courts have outlined certain "prudential" restrictions on standing, premised on non-constitutional policy judgments regarding the proper role of the judiciary. Unlike Article III restrictions on standing, prudential restrictions may be altered or overridden by Congress.

Standing requirements under the proposed Balanced Budget Amendment will vary according to the type of litigant. Potential litigants fall into three categories: (1) Members of Congress, (2) Aggrieved Persons (e.g. persons whose government benefits are reduced or eliminated by operation of the Amendment), and (3) Taxpayers.

A. Members of Congress

The federal courts by and large have denied standing to members of Congress to litigate issues relating to their role as legislators.<sup>1</sup> Only when an executive action has deprived members of their constitutional right to vote on a legislative matter has standing been granted.<sup>2</sup>

Footnotes at end of letter.

Accordingly, Members of Congress are unlikely to have standing under the proposed Balanced Budget Amendment, unless they can claim to have been disenfranchised in their legislative capacity. Assuming that Congress does not ignore the procedural requirements set forth in the Amendment, the potential for such disenfranchisement seems remote.

B. Aggrieved persons

Standing also seems doubtful for persons whose government benefits or other payments from the Treasury are affected by the Balanced Budget Amendment. In order to attain standing, such persons must meet the following Article III requirements: (1) They must have sustained an actual or threatened injury; (2) Their injury must be traceable to the governmental action in question; and (3) The federal courts must be capable of redressing the injury.<sup>3</sup>

Assuming a plaintiff could meet the first two requirements, he still must show that the federal courts are capable of dispensing a remedy. Judicial relief could take the form of either a declaratory judgment or an injunction. A declaratory judgment, stating that Congress has acted in an unconstitutional manner, would do little to redress the plaintiff's injury. On the other hand, injunctive relief could pose a serious threat to the separation of powers.

For example, an injunction ordering Congress to reinstate funding for a particular program would substantially infringe upon Congress's legislative authority. Similarly, an injunction ordering all government agencies to reduce their expenditures by a uniform percentage - would undermine the independence of the Executive Branch. It is unlikely that the present Supreme Court would uphold a remedy that so blatantly exceeds the scope of judicial authority outlined in Article III.

C. Taxpayers

Taxpayers may have a better chance of attaining standing under the proposed Balanced Budget Amendment. Traditionally, the federal courts refused to recognize taxpayer standing. However, in 1988 the Warren Court held in Flast v. Cohen that a taxpayer plaintiff does have standing to challenge Congress's taxing and spending decisions if the plaintiff can establish a logical nexus between his status as a taxpayer and his legal claim.<sup>4</sup>

The logical nexus text consists of two distinct elements. First, the plaintiff must demonstrate that the congressional action in question was taken pursuant to the Taxing and Spending Clause of Article I Section 8 of the Constitution. Second, the plaintiff must show that the statute in question violates a specific constitutional restraint on Congress's taxing and spending power.<sup>5</sup>

Taxpayers suing under the proposed Balanced Budget Amendment probably could meet both prongs of the logical nexus test.<sup>6</sup> In order to satisfy the first prong, potential litigants would have to tailor their complaint to challenge the unconstitutional enactment of a law by Congress (e.g. an appropriations bill), not the unconstitutional execution of a law by the Executive. Litigants could satisfy the second prong by demonstrating that the statute in question violates the Balanced Budget Amendment, an express restriction on Congress's taxing and spending power.

Even if a taxpayer satisfies Flast's logical nexus test, more recent opinions like Valley Forge suggest that the Supreme Court also would expect taxpayer plaintiffs to fulfill the Article III standing requirements. In other words, in order to have standing, a taxpayer would have to demonstrate that he has sustained an actual or threatened injury traceable to a specific congressional action.

In theory, a taxpayer could claim that excess spending in violation of the Balanced Budget Amendment will harm him by undermining the national economy or by increasing the national debt. However, a majority of the Supreme Court probably would find the connection between the excess spending and the alleged injuries too tenuous to grant standing. As a result, standing would be limited to taxpayers with concrete injuries, stemming directly from the congressional action in question.

II. THE AMENDMENT AND THE POLITICAL QUESTION DOCTRINE

Even if a litigant attained standing under the proposed Balanced Budget Amendment, a federal court could refuse to hear the case on the grounds that it raises a political question. The leading case with respect to political questions remains Baker v. Carr.<sup>7</sup> In Baker, the Supreme Court held that the constitutionality of a state legislative apportionment scheme did not raise a political question. In doing so, the Court identified a number of contexts in which political questions may arise.

Foremost among these are situations in which the text of the Constitution expressly commits the resolution of a particular issue to a coordinate branch of government. The Judicial Branch will refrain from adjudicating an issue in such circumstances. However, this textual constraint would not preclude judicial review of the proposed Balanced Budget Amendment, since H.J. Res. 290 does not assign responsibility for enforcing the Amendment to either the President or the Congress.

The Baker court also identified the following prudential consideration in deciding whether to invoke the political question doctrine as a bar to judicial review:<sup>8</sup>

(A) Is there a lack of discernable or manageable judicial standards for resolving the issue?

(B) Can the court resolve the issue without making an initial policy determination that falls outside the scope of judicial authority?

(C) Can the court resolve the issue without expressing a lack of respect for the coordinate branches of government?

(D) Will judicial intervention result in multifarious pronouncements on the same issue from different branches of government?

Each of these considerations creates an impediment to judicial review of the proposed Balanced Budget Amendment. In particular, courts may find the fiscal subject matter of the Amendment difficult to administer. For example, what happens if "estimated receipts" fall short of projections halfway through a fiscal year? On what data and accounting methods would the courts be expected to rely? Given the lack of concrete standards, apparently rudimentary determinations (e.g. When do "total outlays" exceed "estimated receipts"?) may prove beyond the competence of the judiciary.

Moreover, the potential judicial remedies for violations of the Amendment may undermine the separation of powers. As discussed above, various forms of injunctive relief almost certainly would infringe upon the prerogatives of Congress and the Executive Branch. Given the Supreme Court's structuralistic adherence to the separation of powers doctrine in cases like I.N.S. v. Chadha<sup>9</sup> and Bowsher v. Synar,<sup>10</sup> it is almost impossible to imagine a majority of the justices on the present, or a future, Court jumping at the opportunity to become embroiled in a partisan wrangle over the size and scope of the federal budget. Instead, one would expect the Court to make every effort to avoid such an intrusion.

III. CONCLUSIONS

The constraints imposed by standing requirements and the political question doctrine by no means preclude judicial review of the Balanced Budget Amendment. Nevertheless, they do place substantial barriers to litigation. In light of these impediments, the Foundation believes that the prospects for a flood of new litigation and the specter of budgeting by judicial fiat have been greatly exaggerated.

The Amendment proposed in H.J. Res. 290 would clearly invite judicial review of any spending or taxing legislation purportedly enacted in violation of the formal requirements (e.g. a supermajority for increasing the debt limit, a full majority on recorded for a tax increase) set forth in the text. This is no different from the status quo, for even now we would expect a court to strike down an act that was somehow enrolled on the statute books without having properly cleared the requisite legislative process of votes, presentment, and the like.

What the Amendment would not do is to confer upon the judiciary an authority to substitute its own judgment as to the accuracy of the revenue estimates, the needfulness of taxes, or the prudence of a debt limit. The courts would merely police the formal aspects of the work of the political branches: Did they enact a law devoted solely to an estimate of receipts? Are all outlays held below that estimate? Were measures passed by requisite majorities voting, when required, on the record?

Sections 2 and 4 of the proposed amendment clearly invite only limited judicial scrutiny of this kind, and then only of the process, and not of the substance, by which the political branches have acted?

Section 3 seems to be purely hortatory, and probably provides no predicate at all for judicial action. Whatever the political ramifications of a failure on the part of a President to propose a balanced budget in any given year may be, there appear to be no legal implications whatsoever. No act of law-making depends in any constitutional sense upon the President's compliance with this requirement, let alone upon the substance that any such proposal may contain.<sup>11</sup>

Section 1 is the crucial text, then, but even here the boundaries of justiciability would be tightly limited. A purported enactment might be struck down by the courts if it provided for outlays of funds in excess of the level of estimated receipts established for the year in the annual estimates law, or if it called for such an excessive outlay without having been passed on a roll-call vote by the required super-majority, or if it attempted to avoid the balanced budget limit applicable to the fiscal year of its enactment by purporting to be within the limits of receipts estimated for another year, past or future.

But there is no basis in the text of Section 1 for a court to pick and choose among congressional spending decisions on any basis. That is, the proposed amendment would confer no authority on the judiciary to choose which appropriations would be satisfied from the Treasury and which would not, but only to say that once outlays had reached the level established in the estimates law then the officials of the Treasury must cease disbursing any additional funds.

Because Section 6 of the proposed amendment would define "total outlays" to "include all outlays of the United States Government except for those for repayment of debt principal," the amendment would abolish permanent indefinite appropriations, revolving funds, and the funds, such as the Judgment Fund, from which they are disbursed.<sup>12</sup> This would decisively prevent the courts from invading the Federal fisc in the guise of damages awards against the United States Government. Upon effectuation of this amendment, damages awards against the Government in all cases (except for repayment of debt principal) would have to be part of the outlays voted each year by Congress, and the current congressional practice of waiving the sovereign immunity of the United States on a blanket basis in the adjudication of various kinds of damages against the Government would have to end.

In short, it is our view that there is virtually no danger that the constitutional balanced budget amendment contemplated by H.J. Res. 290 would cede the power of the purse to a runaway judiciary. To the contrary, it would eliminate certain authorities that courts currently have to order the disbursement of Federal funds without appropriations. If ratified and made part of the Constitution, the balanced budget amendment would return responsibility and accountability for all Federal outlays squarely to the Congress.

Sincerely yours,

JOSEPH A. MORRIS,
President and General Counsel.<sup>13</sup>

<sup>11</sup> Section 3 would confer constitutional dignity upon a practice that has evolved on an extraconstitutional basis in this century, the submission of a Presidential budget each year. The practical and political wisdom of the practice is debatable, as is the wisdom of the contents of any particular budget. But the practice, even with the constitutional sanction that H.J. Res. 290 would give it, in no way derogates from the responsibility of Congress to account for the power of the purse or from the procedural rules adopted by the Framers for safeguarding the separation of powers respecting the fisc, such as the requirement that bills for raising revenue originate in the House of Representatives. The President would now have a constitutional duty to propose an annual balanced budget, but his submission would be only a proposal, and the existing groundrules of Articles I and II would continue to define the procedures by which laws are made and the separation of powers maintained.

<sup>12</sup> It is our view that this would also abolish other permanent indefinite appropriations arrangements and revolving funds as they now stand, including those for the Social Security, Medicare, and Civil Service Retirement Systems. They all involve "outlays" within the comprehensive meaning of Section 6, and so would all require affirmative congressional action for each year's disbursements. Congress could continue to provide that outlays be made on formulaic bases (e.g., as "formula payments"), but they would be subject to the total annual ceiling on outlays and mere qualification of an individual to receive a payment would no longer automatically work to raise the spending limit.

TESTIMONY OF JOHN C. ARMOR, ESQ., BEFORE THE CONSTITUTION SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE, FEBRUARY 16, 1994

It is always a privilege to testify before a Committee of Congress, but especially so today on this subject before this Subcommittee. The reason is that after almost two decades of effort, the Balanced Budget Amendment to the Constitution now seems on the cusp of success before the Senate, and the BBA is the focus of this hearing. I am not here today on behalf of a client, but on my own.

I am John Armor, a constitutional lawyer who practices before the Supreme Court, a former Professor of Political Science, and author of several books and many articles, usually on political science or constitutional law. Most germane to today's hearing, I have testified for 17½ years now before committees of state legislatures, and occasionally before Congressional Committees, on legal aspects of the BBA.

I will address three subjects, two of them briefly because others will cover them in far more detail, and one at some length, because others are unlikely to address it and it is most important now as the Amendment seems close to passage. The subjects are: the need for the BBA, the appropriateness of constitutional provisions which are economic in nature, and the problems and solutions on the questions of judicial review under the BBA.

THE NEED FOR THE BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT

All but one of the 50 states have some form of balanced budget provisions in their laws. Forty-seven have provisions in their constitutions; two have statutory provisions (ones that they abide by, contrary to some statutory solutions which Congress has tried, beginning in 1974); and one state, Vermont, has no such provision. The exception proves the rule; Vermont is not known as a hotbed of wild spending, promoted by representatives of the tour bus and maple syrup industries.

In all the other states, the operation of their various balanced budget provisions demonstrate anew the importance of institutional restraints to guide legislative behavior. Madison, Hamilton and Jay put the issue most succinctly in The Federalist over 200 years ago in arguing for adoption of the Constitution. At that time, only the House of Representatives was popularly elected. Writing about the House, they said it would, "balance the willingness to spend against the reluctance to tax."

There is a great deal of political and constitutional wisdom in that short phrase, that Congress (no longer just the House) should "balance the willingness to spend against the reluctance to tax." That is exactly what the balanced budget amendments in the states accomplish for them. Legislators are free to vote for whatever programs they believe are in the interest of their constituents. But, at the same time, they are obligated to impose the taxes to pay for those programs.

Therefore, state legislators every year, or every two years in Kentucky, create two sets of priorities. First are priorities among spending programs—those at the bottom of the list will not be approved, even through in the abstract they might seem to be good ideas. Second are priorities among taxation plans. The ones which are the least desirable and most likely to provoke strong opposition will not be approved, even though in the abstract they could raise substantial funds for worthwhile programs.

In short, legislators become mindful of what the great French Minister, Tallyrand, is credited with saying, "The art of taxation is like plucking a goose, the object is to get the most feathers with the least amount of hissing."

This balancing act between what legislators might want to spend, and what taxes they are willing to impose, all things considered, is continuous in the states. The same balancing act used to be carried out annually by Congress. For 150 years we operated under an unwritten constitutional standard. Spending would not exceed taxes except during time of war or during national emergencies amounting to what we now call "recessions" or "depressions." Once the emergency was over, taxes would be used to pay down the public debt to zero, or close to it.

We abandoned this standard fifty years ago. The "willingness to spend" was disconnected from the "reluctance to tax" in a process that has accelerated in recent years of massive deficit spending every year, not just during wars or emergencies. There is no reason to blame any particular President or Congress. With $4 trillion in known debt, and more than that amount in unfunded, future commitments, there is ample blame for all parties concerned. Ending that process and restoring the connection between taxing and spending is the central purpose of the BBA.

A major argument advanced against the BBA is that there will be attempts to avoid or evade its provisions, no matter how carefully they are drafted. That is absolutely true. History has shown dozens of examples at the state level where creative bookkeeping has been used to bail out state governments which are strapped for funds but find necessary choices among spending on one side and taxation on the other, politically impossible. Sometimes, judicial enforcement applied at the state level.

I urge you not to confuse the question of whether the BBA will work perfectly, with the question of whether it will work substantially. Consider the magnificent guarantees in the First Amendment—freedom of religion, of speech, of the press, and of political activity. Every one of those has been repeatedly assaulted by various laws and ordinances at the federal, state and local level, right from the beginnings of the Republic. There were many individual failures. We once had laws under which newspaper editors were jailed for printing their opinions, until Jefferson became President. We once had established churches supported directly by state funds, until well into the 19th century.

I could run a long list of occasional failures of the First Amendment in all four of its areas of protection. The proper question about the First Amendment is not whether many interests, many times, on many issues, sought to violate it. It is whether the nation is much the better because it has the First Amendment. By analogy, this is also the proper question to ask about the BBA. Will it provide benefits to the nation for the foreseeable future? If you answer that question yes, then you should support it.

One last point. We have the example of another unwritten constitutional provision that we lived by for 150 years. Once it was broken, however, we wrote it into the Constitution. George Washington was responsible for the fact that no limits on Presidential terms were placed in the Constitution. But, he was also the creator of the tradition that Presidents voluntarily leave office after serving two terms. Once that tradition was abrogated by FDR, we placed it in the Constitution as the 22nd Amendment.

The same can apply to the Balanced Budget Amendment. Now that the tradition has been abrogated, it can be written into the language of the Constitution.

APPROPRIATENESS OF ECONOMIC PROVISIONS IN THE CONSTITUTION

The claim has often been made that the Constitution is intended for broad and lofty purposes, that provisions for economic programs have no place in that document. This slogan sounds like it might have merit; it has superficial appeal. However, as soon as one delves into the Constitution, it is clear the Framers included "economic" provisions, whenever and wherever they considered them appropriate as a matter of public policy.

Article I, Section 2, chose to forbid taxes other than per capita. We chose to reverse that decision by the 16th Amendment which permitted income taxes. Article I, Section 8, contains many "economic" clauses: the Commerce Clause, gives Congress the power to regulate interstate commerce and bars the states from taxing or regulating it. (This clause created the first "common market" among sovereign entities in the history of the world. It was magnificently successful.) Clauses 1 and 4, provide the right to borrow money and the regulation of the value of money, with a prohibition against the states minting their own money. (Many states were printing their own money, prior to the adoption of the Constitution. Some just ran the presses and devalued their currency exactly as Congress did with paper money during the American Revolution, giving rise to the phrase, "not worth a Continental.")

Article VI, clause 1, is also economic, providing that all debts contracted under the Confederation would remain "valid against the United States." Preserving the nation's reputation as well as its financial stability were reasons for this clause, which was hotly debated at the Philadelphia Convention of 1787.

My favorite clause to demonstrate the point is the one invented by Dr. Benjamin Franklin as a result of his experiences in Europe, given to James Madison, and inserted in the Constitution with almost no discussion. Franklin had observed that inventions and books were freely copied in Europe, thereby denying those who had created them both the benefits of their labors and the incentives to create more. To solve that problem, Franklin invented clause 7, to secure "for limited Times to Authors and Inventors exclusive Right to their respective Writings and Discoveries."

There is no question that this is an "economic" provision. Given the two century experience of the United States leading the world in discoveries, inventions and intellectual property, there is little doubt this clause in the Constitution lies at the heart of the American economic success story.

So, I suggest that whenever anyone claims that economic provisions do not belong in the Constitution, the reply should be to cite these and other provisions and reject that claim out of hand. The question is not whether economic provisions belong in the Constitution; it is whether the Balanced Budget Amendment is a wise policy at this time in our history, to be written into the Constitution.

JUDICIAL REVIEW OF THE BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT

The subject of judicial review of the BBA has hardly been addressed in the continuing public debate over the BBA. When there was little chance that the Amendment would be adopted any time soon, there was little reason to discuss this particular consequence. The situation having changed, it is now time to address this in detail.

Where the Constitution and applicable statutes are silent about judicial review, it is left to the Supreme Court to decide whether judicial review exists, and if so, what remedies may the courts apply for any violations. Not only can the Court set its own standards, it is also free to reverse them. Witness Baker v. Carr, 369 US 186 (1962). Until that case, the courts had refused to take up the "political questions" of mal-apportioned state legislatures. In Baker, it reversed itself, the consequence was 30 years and counting of court orders that legislatures, city and county councils reapportion themselves.

You could bet either, or both, of these results, if you remain silent on the subject of judicial review of the BBA.

This discussion is based on five assumptions about the results that this Committee, the whole Senate, and the whole Congress may have in mind about judicial review of the BBA. If any of my assumptions are incorrect, I trust I will promptly stand corrected. The assumptions are:

1. There should be judicial review of the Balanced Budget Amendment.
2. It should be brought about by a single set of responsible parties.
3. Enforcement should be extremely swift.
4. Courts should not be involved in choosing between different government programs in enforcing the Amendment. All such policy judgments should be left to Congress.
5. Courts should be prohibited from enforcing the BBA by judicial imposition of new taxes.

Under both Article III, Section I, and under the enabling clause that has been added to the BBA. Congress has the power by legislation to remove, create, or shape the Supreme Court's jurisdiction for review of the BBA. This is a process well known to this Subcommittee; its heritage traces back to the Judiciary Act of 1789. Only the original jurisdiction of the Court as declared in Article III, clause 2 is outside this statutory authority of Congress.

So, you can pass a statute which states what the judicial review of the BBA shall be, and what remedies can be applied. By making those exclusive, you can rule out any other forms of judicial review or remedies. The process of judicial review of the BBA and remedies applied will then be exactly what you say it should be—no more, no less.

To assure only one case, brought by responsible parties, you could provide that any six Senators, or any 25 Representatives, or any three Governors, could bring an action in the Supreme Court if they felt that the BBA had been violated, or was about to be violated if no budget was passed by the first day of the new fiscal year. On the filing of the case, all other Senators, Representatives and Governors would be informed and would be welcome to join the case on either side as they deemed fit.

You do not want thousands of citizens represented by thousands of tin horn lawyers, rushing into courts across the nation to bring their disparate cases to enforce the BBA. By this mechanism you can prevent that. The minimum numbers of Senators, Representatives or Governors to bring the action should be a significant number but a minority, similar to provisions in the Rules of both Houses that protect the interests of minorities, but not necessarily minorities of one.

Placing the case in the Supreme Court, plus providing that the Court must hear the case in 30 days and issue its decision not more than 15 days thereafter, would assure expeditious consideration. The Court would be free, as it has in many of the previous 200 original jurisdiction cases, to appoint Special Masters for fact-finding purposes, with their conclusions subject to challenge before the whole Court.

In order to prevent either judicially-ordered taxes or Court selection between competing programs and public policies, the remedies from the Court could be restricted as follows: (A) The Court could determine only that the budget was, or was not, in balance, and (B) the exact dollar amount of the projected year's income, assuming there is no declaration of war, and Congress has not acted by the supra-majority to remove the budget from the scope of the Amendment. (C) The Court could then order only an across-the-board cut in all programs without exception in the percentage required. In other words, if the Court found that the budget was out of balance by 3.4%, its only remedy would be to order a 3.4% cut in all programs.

This point is extremely important. Having spent 17 years talking with Members of Congress and with members of state legislatures on the subject of the BBA, I believe there is an overwhelming feeling that the Supreme Court should not be involved in choosing between closing down an Air Force base or cutting Aunt Tilly's social security check. That sort of policy judgment should always be made by elected representatives of the people in each level of government.

Once the Court had ordered an across-the-board cut, Congress would then have 20 days to act by statute to adjust the cuts on a policy basis, making greater cuts in some programs, less in others, by staying within the total dollar amount declared by the Court. If Congress fails to act, or if it acts but violates the Amendment a second time, then the Court-ordered across-the-board cuts would be final for that fiscal year.

Congress should have one bite at the apple to make those policy judgments between competing programs, after a declaration of violation of the BBA. But, it should be only one bite, otherwise, every budget could be wrapped up in eternal litigation, every year.

Lastly, what happens if Congress fails to pass a budget by the first day of the fiscal year? Then the Court should have the power to examine the taxes then in effect, and determine the dollar amount that those taxes would raise in the coming year. The amount would be the cap. All programs would be presumed to continue at their current levels of funding (exactly what Congress itself does in Continuing Resolutions). The Court would determine whether that did, or did not, result in balance. Again, Congress would have 20 days to make policy-based adjustments.

I am deliberately not trying to write or offer precise language. You and your staff are far better able to do that. However, approaches such as those outlined could accomplish all the basic purposes that are covered in the assumptions, stated above.

One last point about when such statutory provisions should be passed. Most of my time on this subject over the last 17 years has been spent with state legislators, both in hearings and often in far-reaching, challenging conversations about ramifications of the BBA. If you intend to establish by statute the parameters of judicial review and remedies, you should pass that statute at the same time you pass the BBA and send it out for ratification.

Some of the more far-sighted state legislators are engaging in the same process you are, asking themselves what might the Supreme Court do, or not do, to enforce the BBA. They are especially concerned with two areas—judicially-imposed taxes, and judicially-made choices between different policies and programs. If you pass the statute now, or very soon after you promulgate the BBA for ratification, you will satisfy state legislators, first, that judicial review will occur, and second, that judicial enforcement will not get into either of these areas of grave concern.

If you do not pass such a statute within a few months of promulgating the Amendment, you will engender serious concerns among the state legislators about whether you will ultimately do that, and if so, what provisions you will choose to include. Recalling that ratification requires the approval of 38 state legislatures, or ratifying conventions elected in 38 states under the other Article V method, you will endanger the ratification of the BBA if you do not provide review statute so state legislators can read it side by side with the text of your BBA.

There may be other aspects of enabling legislation that you may want, but do not choose to address until and unless the states ratify the Balanced Budget Amendment. Your own considerations and reflections, together with the responses of the states as they ratify, might be valuable in writing that legislation. However, on judicial review itself, I strongly urge you to consider, write and pass that legislation as soon as possible, once you decide to pass the BBA itself.

CONCLUSION

You have 200 years of history at the state and local level about the importance of making the tough decisions about taxing and spending, about "balancing the willingness to spend against the reluctance to tax." You also have 150 years of experience here in Congress on the same point. If that satisfies you that the nation needs the BBA in the Constitution, now is the time to act.

You should not be reluctant to act on the grounds that this is an "economic" provision. The Constitution has many other provisions intended to effect the economy of the United States, ones which in the fullness of world history have been proven to be basic in the organization of any competent national economy. Consider the fact that Dr. Franklin's invention of the Patents and Trademark clause has become regional through NAFTA, and may shortly become global through GATT. Economic provisions belong in our Constitution, provided they are the right ones for the nation at the right time in our history—whether the year is 1787 or 1994.

Lastly, you should be concerned with judicial enforcement of the Balanced Budget Amendment. If it is correct to place the Amendment in the Constitution, it is also correct to guarantee both that it will be enforced, and to prevent forms of enforcement that would undercut the essential purposes of Congress, namely decisions on taxation and on competing public policies. Fortunately, the Constitution gives Congress the power to shape judicial enforcement to accomplish both purposes.

I welcome your questions on this complex subject with complex ramifications.

BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT: THE ROLE OF THE COURTS

Some lawmakers and commentators have raised questions about the enforcement of a Balanced Budget Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. A primary concern is that Congressional efforts to meet the balanced budget requirement would be challenged in the courts, and the judiciary would be thrust into a non-judicial role of weighing policy demands, slashing programs and increasing taxes.

On the other hand, there is a legitimate and necessary role for the courts in ensuring compliance with the amendment. Congress could potentially circumvent balanced budget requirements through unrealistic revenue estimates, emergency designations, off-budget accounts, unfunded mandates, and other gimmickry. Certainly, the track record of the institution under the spending targets of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings and other statutory provisions is no cause for optimism.

It is our view that the need to proscribe judicial policymaking can be reconciled with a constructive role for the courts in maintaining the integrity of the balanced budget requirement. Congress is expected to address technical issues such as accounting standards, budget procedures and judicial enforcement in followup implementing legislation. By drawing on the existing legal principles of "mootness," "standing" and "non-judiciability," implementing legislation can define an appropriate role for the courts in making the amendment work. The net effect can be to prevent judicial assumption of legislative functions such as selecting program cuts, while allowing the courts to police a framework of accounting standards and budget procedures.

TRADITIONAL LIMITS ON JUDICIAL INTERVENTION

In general, the courts have shown an unwillingness to interject themselves into the fray of budgetary politics. The New Jersey Superior Court observed that "it is a rare case . . . in which the judiciary has any proper constitutional role in making budget allocation decisions."<sup>1</sup> The judiciary has remained clear of most budget controversies through the principles of "mootness" and "standing," as well as the "political question" doctrine.

A case is considered moot, and can be rejected by the court, if the matter in controversy is no longer current. In Bishop v. Governor, 281 Md. 521 (1977), taxpayers and Maryland legislators claimed that the governor's proposed budget violated the state's balanced budget law, because $95 million was contingent upon enactment of separate federal and state legislation. The Maryland Court of Appeals dismissed the case as moot because by that time the separate legislation had been approved, and the relevant fiscal year had elapsed. Mootness will be a factor in many potential challenges to Congressional action under a federal Balanced Budget Amendment, particularly those based on unplanned expenditures or flawed revenue estimates which become apparent near the end of the fiscal year.

The doctrine of standing limits judicial access to parties who can show a direct injury over and above that incurred by the general public. The logic is that the grievances of the public (or substantial segments thereof) are the proper domain of the legislature.<sup>2</sup> The U.S. Supreme Court has generally held that status as a taxpayer does not confer standing to a challenge federal actions<sup>3</sup>, and has barred taxpayer challenges of budget and revenue policies in the absence of special injuries to the plaintiffs.<sup>4</sup> A state cannot sue the federal government on behalf of its citizens,<sup>5</sup> and it is doubtful that Members of Congress have standing to challenge federal actions in court.<sup>6</sup>

The political question doctrine is a related principle that the courts should remain out of such matters which the Constitution has committed to another branch of government. The U.S. Supreme Court has held that a "political question" exists when a case would require "nonjudicial discretion."<sup>7</sup> This would be the case with many budgetary controversies, such as the choice to cut particular programs, which by their nature require ideological choices and the balancing of competing needs. In theory, at least, Congress brings to this task a "full knowledge of political, social and economic conditions..." as well as the legitimacy of elected representation.<sup>8</sup> The New Jersey Supreme Court recognized this in a case where local governments challenged funding decisions made by the governor and legislature, holding that the allocation of state funds among competing constituent groups was a political question, to be decided by the legislature and not the judiciary.<sup>9</sup> The Michigan Supreme Court has likewise held that program cutting decisions are a non-judicial function.<sup>10</sup>

A ROLE FOR THE COURTS

The courts have asserted jurisdiction over politically tinged controversies where they find "discoverable and manageable standards" for resolving them. In Baker v. Carr, the U.S. Supreme Court reasoned that objective criteria guide judicial decisionmaking and limit the opportunity for overreaching. In the balanced budget context, the "discoverable and manageable standards" principle can help demarcate lines between impermissible judicial policymaking, and the needed enforcement of accounting rules and budget procedures.

In all likelihood, a strong framework of accounting guidelines will emerge from implementing legislation. The Senate Judiciary Committee has interpreted Section 6 of the bill to impose "a positive obligation on the part of Congress to enact appropriate legislation" regarding this complex issue.<sup>11</sup> Judiciary Committee staff on both the House and Senate side have indicated their intention that implementing legislation embrace stringent accounting standards that will minimize the potential for litigation. Should legitimate questions arise concerning the methods by which Congress "balances" the budget, these standards will also provide objective criteria which meet constitutional standards for judicial intervention.

The implementing package is also likely to establish guidelines for judicial involvement defining what issues are judicable and which parties have standing to challenge Congressional decisions. Where Congress has defined standing within the relevant statute, the courts have generally deferred to this request for judicial input, and entertained suitable cases.<sup>12</sup> This approach has the advantage of defining appropriate controversies and plaintiffs more precisely. In the Balanced Budget context, the right to raise particular arguments could be delegated to specific public officials. State budget officers, for example, could be given standing to contest unfunded federal mandates.

We are satisfied that such enforcement procedures, coupled with budget process and accounting guidelines, will operate against a backdrop of traditional legal principles to rationally limit judicial action. The effect should be to prevent judicial overreaching into legislative functions while providing a check on Congressional attempts to evade the requirements of the BBA through procedural and numerical gimmickry.

The decision implied that citizen suit provisions must be carefully articulated and supported by clear legislative goals.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I am going to vote against the motion to table the Johnston amendment.

Mr. President, in my view, courts should not be allowed to enforce the balanced budget amendment by raising taxes, cutting benefits, or otherwise involving themselves in Federal budgetary policy. We live in a democracy. And the power to tax and spend should be granted only to those who are accountable to the public.

Our Nation was founded on the principle of no taxation without representation. It is not time to turn back now.

Unfortunately, Mr. President, unless amended, the balanced budget amendment to the Constitution that is before us today threatens to give the courts unlimited power to raise taxes and cut spending when necessary to ensure a balanced budget. The Johnston amendment would ensure that this power could be exercised only if explicitly authorized by the Congress.

Frankly, Mr. President, I do not even think that Congress should be allowed to give courts the power to increase taxes as a means of enforcing this constitutional amendment. Decisions about taxing and spending should be made by elected officials, and those officials should not be allowed to avoid accountability for those decisions by delegating that power to the judiciary.

So, Mr. President, I seriously considered voting to table the Johnston amendment because it does not go far enough to limit judicial power, and I suspect that some of my colleagues will vote to table the Johnston amendment on that basis. However, I have decided to vote against the motion to table since, although the Johnston amendment does not go far enough, it at least would put some limits on the judiciary's taxing and spending powers under the proposed constitutional amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I believe I am prepared to summarize in 1 minute and I will yield back the balance. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. President, this amendment as worked out with the distinguished Senator from Washington [Mr. GORTON] and the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. BROWN] deprives the courts of judicial power to raise taxes, to cut budgets, to be involved in fiscal affairs of this Congress except to the extent that the Congress specifically authorizes that in authorizing legislation.

It is the duty of Congress to implement and enforce this article by authorizing legislation. Section 6 so states, and there is also an exemption made for section 2. That is, the judicial power of the courts can extend to the enforcement of section 2 which in return requires 60 votes to raise the debt of the United States.

Mr. President, this is exactly what the sponsors of this constitutional amendment have said the amendment does. They have stated that the courts may not enforce this amendment. This makes it clear that the courts may not enforce the amendment except in the case of section 2 or unless the Congress specifically authorizes them to do so.

Mr. President, it is unthinkable to have the kind of ambiguity in the Constitution of the United States that is inherent in this amendment unless the Johnston amendment is agreed to.

I urge my colleagues to adopt this amendment.

I believe we are ready to yield back the balance of our time.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the balance of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to table the Johnston amendment, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to lay on the table the amendment (No. 272), as modified, of the Senator from Louisiana.

The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk called the roll.

Mr. LOTT. I announce that the Senator from Kansas [Mrs. KASSEBAUM] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMPSON). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 52, nays 47, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 71 Leg.]

NOT VOTING—1

Kassebaum

So the motion to lay on the table the amendment (No. 272), as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. HATCH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BUMPERS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

IWO JIMA

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, could we have order?

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to proceed for 5 minutes to deliver a eulogy honoring those men who died and who were wounded and who participated in the battle of Iwo Jima, 50 years ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mrs. BOXER. The Senate is not in order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, 50 years ago, I was stationed at Marine Corps Air Station, Cherry Point, NC, while serving as a radio operator having achieved the rank of sergeant. That was on February 19, 1945. I listened with rapt attention, along with my fellow marines, to radio reports of a massive marine assault on an obscure Pacific island called Iwo Jima. Though at that time, I doubt whether any one of us could pinpoint that island on a map—

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

The Senator may proceed.

Mr. BUMPERS. The name Iwo Jima would soon take its place along such hallowed names as Bunker Hill, Gettysburg, Belleau Wood, Normandy, and Tarawa Atoll. As a vast naval armada moved closer to the shores of Iwo Jima, the commanders who would soon send their young marines into battle prepared messages to be read shortly before H-hour on board all ships of the invasion fleet. Maj. Gen. Clifton B. Cates, commanding the 4th Marine Division, reminded his marines of their recent victory on Tinian in the Mariana Islands, where the division's "perfectly executed amphibious operation" resulted in the capture of the island in 9 days, "with a minimum of casualties to our unit, and with heavy losses to the enemy." Similarly, Maj. Gen. Keller E. Rockey, commanding the 5th Marine Division, searched for the proper words to exhort his men. Unable to draw upon past glories, as his division would fight together as a unit for the first time on Iwo Jima, Rockey reminded his men that the "time has now come for us to take our place in the battle line." Noting that "the hopes and prayers of our people go with us," he assured his marines that "we will not fail." The upcoming 36-day battle on Iwo Jima would fully justify the confidence which Generals Cates and Rockey placed in their marines.

One of the most visible and poignant memorials in this city commemorates the flag raising on Mt. Suribachi, the Iwo Jima Memorial, 4 days after the landing, but the battle would rage for 32 more days.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, the Senate is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

The Senator from Arkansas may proceed.

Mr. BUMPERS. The Iwo Jima Memorial is a fitting tribute to the 5,391 men killed, 17,370 men wounded, and the 60,000 men in that total force. But it is a tragedy that there cannot be a statue for every single brave marine who participated in that bloody battle.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent I be permitted to proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I cannot tell you how contemptuous I am of the fact that we could not get order in the Senate to deliver this tribute. Some of our own colleagues were heroes during World War II. Senator JOHN GLENN, a brave marine, is on the Senate floor now. Nobody in this body fought longer and harder than he. And in one of the bloodiest battles of all, the battle of Guadalcanal, was Senator JOHN CHAFEE of Rhode Island.

I was asked by the Marine Corps to deliver this memorial, and I was happy to do it. I was not at Iwo Jima. I was just a young marine getting ready to be shipped out to invade Japan.

Mr. President, many people in this body remember very little about World War II and nothing about Iwo Jima. We wanted that island so we could bomb Japan from the islands of Tinian, Guam, and Saipan. We needed Iwo Jima so that disabled planes that could not make it back to Tinian from Japan would have a relatively safe haven on which to land. It is estimated that the landing strip at Iwo Jima saved the lives of 25,000 airmen who would have had to ditch at sea and probably would have been lost if it had not been for those brave, almost 6,000, men who gave their lives there.

I do not intend to criticize my colleagues, but it is tragic that sometimes people do not show more respect for those who provided the liberties for this Nation so we could stand here and debate these issues as free men and women. It is disappointing.

Last night I went to bed, turned on the television set because that is a good way to go to sleep, and just happened to turn to PBS, the station so many people want to get rid of. I started watching a documentary on Iwo Jima, one of the most gut-wrenching documentaries I have ever witnessed. Men who had never talked about that battle, even to their wives and children, poured out their souls and their hearts to those interviewers. One man said that he killed a Japanese and when he went over to him—I do not know whether he killed him or whether he came upon him—and he said he had a wallet sticking out of his top pocket. He reached over and took it out. He was going to take it. He opened it up, and there was a picture of this young Japanese soldier's mother and father and of his wife and child. And he put it back. He said, "I knew that that man was doing exactly what he had been forced to do, what he had been told to do—try to kill me. And I had" been programmed to try to kill him. And he said, "What a terrible way to resolve our differences."

One other man said the Japanese were famous for having gold teeth.

"So," he said, "I went around taking gold teeth out of Japanese soldiers' mouths. Got a bag full." He said, "I can hardly stand to tell you that, it is so barbaric. But war is barbaric. I was just young. It is a terrible, shameful thing to admit that today. At the time I thought it was OK."

Another man said there was a man in his company who said he went around cutting off the ears of Japanese soldiers—barbaric. Somebody told the company commander. This man, who had gathered a whole sack full of ears, was required by his company commander to dig a hole 6 feet deep and bury them and cover them.

But of all those men of my age and a little older who spoke last night, virtually every one of them said, "I did not hate the Japanese. I knew they were doing what they had to do, just as I was doing what I had to do."

I am honored to have been a Marine, honored to have served in the same war, in the same service, with men like JOHN GLENN, HOWELL HEFLIN and JOHN CHAFEE, and especially honored to be asked by the Marine Corps to deliver this short eulogy to those 6,000 men who died and the 17,000 who were wounded and all of the 60,000 who participated.

One man said last night that he felt almost guilty, after seeing what he had seen, coming home alive. I can sort of relate to that.

Mr. President, I know everybody in this body joins me in paying tribute to these very brave men.

I yield the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I just want to personally express my regard for the senior Senator from Arkansas, for the eloquent way he has paid tribute to those who died for us, to those who were wounded for us, and to those who fought for us, including himself and others in this body. As someone who lost his only brother in the Second World War after his 10th commission, I have to say that I was really moved by what the distinguished Senator had to say.

Mr. SIMON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I served after the opening of World War II, but I can remember Iwo Jima vividly. My political mentor was Paul Douglas, who served in this body, was a great U.S. Senator, was a marine, and proud to be a marine in spirit. I wish I could hear Paul Douglas give a talk today. He was 50 years old when he volunteered to be a marine, went over and was wounded in Okinawa and Iwo Jima.

But I think of people like DALE BUMPERS and JOHN GLENN when we talk about courage. You look about, and HOWELL HEFLIN, he was in the Marines, too. We can be very, very proud of those who served our country. But I think of JOHN GLENN and that little thing that he got into when he was shot into space. It was incredible. I see our colleague, CHUCK ROBB, who was in the Marines, and JOHN CHAFEE, and probably some others here who were in the Marines.

As one who was not in the Marines, who was not in the service during that period—I was in from 1951 to 1953—I just want to say we are very proud of those who served in the Marines, those who served in that Pacific war. It was a war where we were fighting people who were forced, as Senator BUMPERS said, to do the things that we were forced to do. It was a war where there was clear aggression, where we stood up for what we should stand for.

I am proud, as an American who was too young to fight in World War II, of those who did.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I would like to express my thanks and appreciation to the senior Senator from Arkansas for the very eloquent remarks he made—and it is so fitting that he did so for this body and for all of us—about what took place in Iwo Jima. I was not at Iwo Jima. I do not know if anybody in this Chamber was in the Battle of Iwo Jima. There is no question that there were fierce battles in the Pacific in World War II.

I think Senator BUMPERS has portrayed it so eloquently—the values, why the whole thing took place. It took place exactly as he said—so that those bombers which were going from Tinian, from Guam, to Japan would have a place, if they were shot up, as they were, to seek a harbor of refuge, as it were.

I can remember. I was a young marine at the time on Guam. For the bombers on Guam, they built two parallel strips for those B-29's to take off. And they would take off on the minute on one runway and on the half minute on the other runway. They assembled some 500 of them on these trips to Japan. It was between a 16- and 18-hour round trip for those bombers. Then, of course, when they completed their mission over Japan, after flying up there, a 7- to 8-hour trip up there with those great loads, then they would start back, many of them badly shot up, and their goal was to get to Iwo Jima.

The time I am talking about was some months after we had secured Iwo Jima. I had a friend in one of those B-29's. He was the pilot. He radioed ahead to Iwo Jima that he was in a condition 3. As I recall, that was a term for the really desperate to land, and that gave him priority. You set your own conditions based upon the number of engines out and the amount of gas you had left. They said to him, "How much fuel do you have? How long can you circle?" He said for 4 minutes. They said, "Circle for 3 minutes. Your priority is set." So he made it safely. But that shows you the congestion that was at Iwo Jima and the value of that.

So, as Senator BUMPERS so eloquently pointed out, 6,000 men were lost, and it was a terrible thing. It was a case where they gave their lives for somebody else. I did not know the figures. But Senator BUMPERS indicated some 25,000—I can well believe that figure—airmen were saved. So it was a dramatic period, when the very best came out in our country and those who were there.

I am so glad Senator BUMPERS called our attention to it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I am in the process of preparing remarks, and have worked on them today, dealing with the Battle of Iwo Jima. I have some remarks that were prepared to deliver tomorrow, probably in morning business.

But I am moved by the eloquence of Senator BUMPERS. It brought back to me a lot of personal feelings that were heightened by his remarks. My division, the 3rd division, was in reserve in the landing on Iwo Jima. The 4th and the 5th Marine Divisions landed on D-Day, and they moved inland basically uncontested for awhile. But then the Japanese guns came forth from their pill boxes and from their fortifications that they had worked on for months and months, and complete devastation took place on the beaches of Iwo Jima.

It was decided that the 3rd Marine Division, which was being held in reserve, would be committed, and the 3rd division was committed. I had been a member of A company, 1st battalion, 9th Marines. That is 9th regiment in Bougainville and Guam. I was wounded in Guam and came back to the United States, and was in a hospital on the day of D-Day that they landed.

I later talked to the survivors of A company. They told me that A company, 1st battalion, 9th Marines, 3d Marine Division, suffered more than 200 percent casualties on Iwo Jima. They sent in replacements at various stages before the island was finally captured. I lost many a friend in that battle. The raising of the flag on Mount Suribachi is symbolic of the battle in the Pacific, where we really, by great military strategy, went through a campaign of island hopping, by which they would select an island that was in a very strategic position and bypass most of the well-fortified islands that the Japanese thought we would be attacking first. This island-hopping strategy reduced the casualties tremendously. But Iwo Jima lay in a position 660 miles off of the coast of Japan. The Japanese had built two airstrips and were in the process of building a third airstrip, primarily to place on that island. Most of their fighter pilot planes were left with the idea of intercepting our bombers as they came through from Guam, or Tinian, or Saipan to Japan. As Senator BUMPERS and Senator CHAFEE have pointed out, the planes that came back, many of them damaged by anti-aircraft and fighter pilots of the Japanese, landed in an emergency on land. But it also was very important in our victory against the Japanese in that it destroyed a potential fighter pilot baseline that could have caused tremendous problems relative to that.

But I look back in memory of my friends that I lost, and I would have been on Iwo Jima with my outfit if I had not been back in the United States at that particular time. The words that stick in my mind are the words of Admiral Nimitz following the Battle of Iwo Jima when he said: "Uncommon valor was a common virtue." The Marines that participated in that, and the Navy that was involved, and the Air Force, everybody concerned, really were great heroes, and we will be honoring the 50th commemoration of that battle in the near future. I believe Sunday there is a ceremony at the Iwo Jima monument. So I pay tribute to those that lost their lives, to those that were wounded, and to those that helped in that very important battle to bring about V-J Day.

IWO JIMA

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I associate myself with the remarks of Senator BUMPERS and the others that have spoken so eloquently about Iwo here today. I was in World War II and in the Pacific but not in the Battle of Iwo Jima. After the war, we were assigned to China. I was stationed for 6 months in Beijing; it was called Peking then. Our squadron flew out later on and landed at Iwo, and this was after the war. We had a chance to walk those same black sand beaches that they came in on during the battle of Iwo.

It is hard to see how anybody could ever make it up those beaches, which were the only landing areas on the island, because the cliffs above that area were all honeycombed with caves back in the rocks. Guns would come out and fire. Machine guns would go out and fire and go back into the hole again. Unless the naval gunfire that supported them there made a direct hit on the tiny openings, they kept coming out and mowing people down, down below them. We walked in those caves and looked down as the Japanese gunners were able to look down on the beach at that time, and how anybody ever got ashore there with that kind of withering fire looking right down their throats is something that is hard to fathom. It was so impressive that I remember it very, very vividly to this very day.

The reasons for the sacrifices have been spoken about here this afternoon. Senator HEFLIN has mentioned the motto that is on the Iwo statue at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue on the edge of Arlington Cemetery: "Uncommon valor was a common virtue." Indeed it was. It is hard to look at Iwo and to be there on Mount Suribachi, or to go down and be in those caves and look down on the black sand beaches and imagine how anyone could come across those beaches, where the soft rolling sand underfoot—literally, where we tried to walk you would take almost two steps forward and one back, that type of situation. That loose, pebbly type sand was so difficult to even get tracks on. It was hard for them to move at that time. Uncommon valor was indeed a common virtue.

One of my most prized possessions at home is a statue of Iwo. It is a smaller version of the Iwo statue that is over on the edge of Arlington Cemetery. It is not just a curiosity stand type statue you would buy from one of the souvenir stands here in Washington. When I had been on a space flight many years later, Felix de Weldon, the sculptor who designed the Iwo statue—it was his concept—was doing a bust of me later on and we became friends. He had one of his first working models that he had, from which he designed the Iwo statue. It is a one-tenth scale model, exact. If you took a picture of it at the right angle, I doubt that you could tell the difference between that and the big Iwo statue. It is a one-tenth scale model. Because I had been in the Marine Corps, he wanted me to have that. I did not want to take it. I thought it should go to the Smithsonian or Marine Headquarters or someplace. He wanted me to have it, so I finally took it. It is one of my most prized possessions at home. I am sure 1 day it will wind up exactly there, in the Smithsonian or Marine Headquarters. Every time I see that statue at home, I am reminded of that visit to Iwo and what it must have been like to be there that day when uncommon valor was such a common virtue.

Mr. ROBB addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, I had not planned to speak this afternoon at all. As a matter of fact, I was just about to part from this Chamber when the senior Senator from Arkansas asked for the floor. I knew he was going to recite a few words that had been prepared officially by the Marine Corps, and it was my privilege to deliver another as a part of that series earlier this week.

I would like to join with all of the colleagues here on the floor, and the many who have been fortunate to be in this Chamber at this particular moment, and say thank you, Marine DALE BUMPERS, for reminding us for a few minutes what is important in life.

I could not help but be drawn back into my own experience. I was, at the time of Iwo Jima, a young boy starting school. But I suspect, if I am honest, I would acknowledge that Iwo Jima probably had a lot to do with my decision to join the Marine Corps. I certainly, like many others, benefited from the heroism that was demonstrated in that particular battle along that tiny eight-square-mile island. And even DALE BUMPERS' description of having talked to those who had examined the photographs and other remains of the enemy that they had taken during the course of the battle rings very true to me in a different conflict later on. But it still happens and you still have that very personal gut-wrenching feeling that there are human beings on both sides of those equations that are not necessarily involved in the political struggles that are involved.

I simply join in saying thank you to my fellow marines here and elsewhere for the legacy that they left to all of us who served later. Those immortal words ring through to all of us. As my friend, JOHN GLENN, talked about his statue, I have a much smaller and much less prestigious copy that sits on the front of my desk in my office to which I will return shortly, which but reminds me of a time when something very important in our history occurred, just 50 years ago.

And for those of you who were fortunate enough to be present in the Chamber today, something important in this Chamber occurred, and it is all too rare that we have a feeling where we have been truly moved by a few words. I would have to say that our distinguished friend from Arkansas has a disproportionate number of those moments to his credit.

In any event, may I join colleagues who are here celebrating that uncommon valor that occurred some 50 years ago and ask others around the country to stop for just a minute or two to think about the consequence of the risks and the sacrifices they made in terms of the quality of life that remains today.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. FORD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I have been sitting here and listening, and I think the distinguished Senator from Virginia has hit the same note that I have been feeling—a little bit emotional; rightly so; beautiful—because I could hear the “Star Spangled Banner” in every voice. I could hear the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag in every voice. I could hear and feel the tide, why this country is so great and what this institution is.

And I could hear the roll being called here in the Senate—Senator CHAFEE, Senator BUMPERS, Senator GLENN, Senator HEFLIN, Senator ROBB—you go on through. They may have different opinions about the issues on the Senate floor, but none—none—of those would take a step back from the defense of this country and the attempt to do what is right. And it goes across the aisle.

So I do not know. I hope there are a lot of people watching tonight so they could have heard my long and good friend from Arkansas, Senator BUMPERS, and listen to JOHN GLENN and to feel it, and listen to HOWELL HEFLIN.

Why was he back in the States? He was wounded.

And they said those who have experienced war, as some of us in this Chamber have, are those most opposed to it.

And so, I thank all of you. I hope I can get a tape of this. I want my grandkids to see it, because it has been now 50-some-odd years. I was 19. I guess you were about the same age. We were all about the same age. And we were called on.

Oh, you may fuss and fume at me about my political stance. You may fuss and fume at the others about their political stance, but do not doubt their courage or their loyalty to this country.

So this occasion was very beautiful. I am pleased that Senator BUMPERS, my good and loyal friend, was able to get up tonight and remind us and shake us back to the very essence and roots of why we are in this Chamber and why we try our best to do what is good for the children.

I yield the floor.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, if nobody else wishes to speak, let me just follow up on what Senator FORD has said and perhaps we can get back on the matter we are supposed to be debating. This has nothing to do with the Marine Corps. It has to do with another point I want to make.

Several of us went to Europe on June 6. We went to Anzio in Italy before we went to Utah and Omaha Beaches. And I was really not prepared for the experience. Anzio, a battle I remembered well was memorialized by roughly 10,000 white crosses and Stars of David in the cemetery there. We were there on June 4.

We went then to Utah Beach and Omaha Beach on June 6th. And behind each beach there were roughly 10,000 graves, Stars of David and crosses. Each one of those represented a knock on the door. “We regret to inform you your son, your husband, your brother has been killed in action.” That was one of the most traumatic things I ever experienced.

President Clinton, in one of the cemeteries was talking to a man. The man said, “This man who lies under this cross saved my life. He went out on a patrol that I was supposed to go on. I had been doing it every night. He said, ‘No, you stay. I’m going tonight.’”

“And I let him go.”

That same man asked the President, “Do you know Clayton Little?”

And President Clinton said, “Know him? I should say so. He served in the legislature, both when Senator BUMPERS was Governor of Arkansas and when I was Governor of Arkansas. He was one of the finest men I ever knew.”

The man said, “He was one of the best friends I ever had. He was by my side during the entire battle at Anzio.”

But like this moment, I say to the people of this body that we ought to do this more often—stop and reflect on what is really important in our lives and in this country.

I looked at all those graves, and I thought of the unbelievable trauma so many families had experienced as a result of each one of them. And I began to think about the things we say and talk about in this Chamber. And so much of it is not very important. And when you get caught up in the experience I had, you begin to get your priorities a little straighter. It is like a cancer diagnosis. You begin to realize what is important and what is not.

But the point I want to close on, Mr. President, as Senator FORD has said very well, nobody should ever question the loyalty or the patriotism of anybody. I deplore that. We are all loyal Americans. We are here debating because we have serious policy disagreements, but we really agree on a lot more than we disagree on.

Somebody came up to me and said, “You know, today’s generation would never bare their chest to those German machine guns on those beaches. They’d never get them out of those landing craft to walk up a beach, unprotected, baring their chest to German machine guns.”

And I said, “Of course they would.”

They thought the same thing about our generation. And I believe that today’s generation, if our liberties were at stake, would do the same thing we did.

I yield the floor.

Mr. BIDEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, this is not a very propitious time for me to send an amendment to the desk.

Let me, while Senator BUMPERS is still here, say one thing to Senator BUMPERS.

I was with Senator BUMPERS and others on the 50th anniversary of D-Day on those beaches, including down in Italy in Anzio.

I was 2 years old when the people of DALE’s generation, although I do not feel like he is a different generation than me—and I mean that sincerely, and I do not—until I stood on those beaches.

I came home and said something to my father that I never said before. My father was not on any one of those beaches. As I stood there and watched Senator HEFLIN, Senator BUMPERS, Senator HOLLINGS and Senator GLENN and others with whom I was attending these ceremonies, and the thousands of veterans who were there, I marveled at one thing.

Being a U.S. Senator for 22 years, I have been to a lot of veterans’ events. I did not see one bit of revelry. I only saw reverence. I watched these men and their counterparts—civilians—walk out on those beaches—which seemed to be 20 miles wide—in solitude. There were 10,000 individuals there, all lost in their own memories.

It impressed me in a strange way. I say to my friend from Arkansas. Here is what I told my dad. I came back with such a sense of awe. As a student of history, thinking I was a pretty smart, well-educated guy, until you stand on those beaches. Now I understand why they all came in at midtide. I am assuming it was equally as bad or worse at Iwo Jima, and I have never been there.

I not only had a sense of awe and pride in my father’s generation and a renewed respect for that generation, but I had an incredible sense of envy, almost a feeling of anger. JOHN KERRY is a veteran. John was a decorated veteran in Vietnam. My generation went to war in Vietnam without the benefit that your generation had.

When you stood there on the beaches of Iwo Jima, or deciding whether or not to get out of the landing craft on Omaha Beach, you knew, had you failed, all of humanity would have suffered. There was no question that the fate of mankind hung in the balance. Had you not prevailed, your wives, mothers, and children would have lived under an oppression unlike anything that had been seen in the previous two centuries.

When JOHN KERRY rode down some god-awful river in Vietnam, he did not know who the hell he was after, was not quite sure why he was there, did not have any idea anymore than my friend from Virginia had as to who might be shooting at him, and I suspect never had the absolute certainty that what they were doing, as difficult as it was, was something that, beyond question, had to be done.

I understand my dad's generation better, having been there, because now I understand why guys like my dad—and God, it seems ridiculous to talk to you as if you were my dad's age because I have worked with you all my professional life—why you have such an incredible sense of optimism. Why on either side of the aisle, whether it is you or JOHN CHAFEE or whomever it is, have this unabating notion that we can, in fact, get things done.

I look at my generation and those who are younger, and I am not nearly as surprised as to why they are as confused as they are about the ability, and not even thinking about it in your generation, why they wonder whether or not this institution makes any sense, whether or not the system works.

It seems to me you not only did something incredibly courageous—and I see DAN INOUE, and nobody in this whole body have I ever felt closer to than DAN INOUE, and he knows I am not just saying that. Here is a guy, he goes and loses his arm. He should have gotten the Medal of Honor, in my view, if you read about his exploits. And he acts like he was born with a silver spoon in his mouth. He acts like not a single thing ever happened to him in his life that was difficult. He acts like the world is just a cupcake, and we can make it great for everybody.

It is an incredible, incredible thing that your generation has passed on. I do not know how it gets renewed. But I know one thing: More people should hear you talk about it. More people should go and stand on Omaha Beach or go to Iwo Jima or go up into the hills in Italy where these guys—BOB DOLE and others—got stopped.

I know it sounds corny, but I defy anybody of any generation to have been there on D-Day and not walk away with a deeper understanding of why your generation has done so much for this country and why other generations have been so uncertain about what they can do. The biggest thing it does, it seems to me, is hopefully remind people in this era of bitter politics, of political invective, of the mindless things that are being said on the left and the right, of the personal characterization of political motivation of whatever anybody does, of the era of 30-second personal attacks on anybody that disagrees with you, you must be un-American or must be less dedicated than whomever it is they are arguing with.

I hope they understand that, as corny as it sounds, the women and men who served in this body—and I have been here for 22 years—I have not met a one, I have not met a one in either political party when they walk out of here and get in their car at night or go down to the train station like I do and look in the rear view mirror, they see that Capitol dome, do not still get a chill.

I noticed people when we were over there on D-Day, DALE, there was not anybody watching us. Everybody was the same. I watch people when they play the "Star Spangled Banner." There was not any hometown crowd. I watched peoples' eyes mist and people got goosebumps. I know it is not in vogue to say those things, and probably an editorial will say how corny we were today—or I know I was.

The best thing that can happen in this sick political atmosphere we find ourselves in, is for more people to understand, whether it is the Rush Limbaughs of the world or a left-wing version of Rush Limbaugh on the air who makes everything personal about what people do, there is so much more that we agree on in this Chamber than we disagree on. There is so much more that your generation did for this Nation than you understand and appreciate, if I can say so, so much more.

But you had something that I think we are all still searching for, and that is the absolute certainty that what we were undertaking needed to be done, was noble, was moral, was necessary, and was right. I think that is what everybody is searching for. You paid a horrible price for having found it in your generation, but having found it and survived it, you made this country something that it never had been, because of the growth and the optimism and the absolute enthusiasm you all brought back from having done what you did and literally saved the world for democracy.

I want to tell you I had not planned on speaking on it at all, but my respect for my father has always been great. My respect for his generation and my mother's, as well.

I end with one little story. I was with you, and we split up after the President spoke. I went up to the cemetery. I was walking around the cemetery, just kind of in a daze. My wife and I—my wife was not even born during any portion of World War II—were looking at the crosses, just wandering through, and this guy was being pushed in a wheelchair by his two sons. And I am looking at a grave marker. I did not even see him. And he said, "Is that you, Senator BIDEN?" And I turned around. I did not know the fellow. He was from Indiana. I turned to him and I was like most of us were, somewhat emotional about what we just observed. And I said, "Thank you for what you did." And he said, "Don't thank me, thank my wife." And I turned around, and his wife was not with him. And I said, "Thank your wife?" I said, "Why, sir?"

He said, "My wife did as much to make sure I could get on that landing craft and get here because she made it. She made it at home. She produced the reason we were able to win, because of the industrial might of the people we left behind to produce and outproduce the Germans."

But it was typical. Here is a guy going through a graveyard where his friends are buried. I compliment him and he tells me to thank his deceased wife who made the landing craft.

I sure as heck hope there is some way we can rekindle that kind of notion of sense of duty, sense of responsibility, sense of shared glory that seems to be missing so much in this country today. And I hope in God's name we can do without another war. But I want to compliment you all.

BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION

AMENDMENT NO. 278

(Purpose: To provide for a capital budget)

Mr. BIDEN. Madam President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN], for himself, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. DORGAN, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. FEINGOLD, and Mr. KERRY, proposes an amendment numbered 278.

Mr. BIDEN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 3, strike lines 4 through 8, and insert the following:

"SEC. 7. Total outlays shall include all outlays of the United States Government except for those for repayment of debt principal and those dedicated to a capital budget. The capital budget shall include only major public physical capital investments. For each fiscal year, outlays dedicated to the capital budget shall not exceed an amount equal to 10 percent of the total outlays for that year, which amount shall not be counted for purposes of section 2. Three-fifths of each House may provide by law for capital budget outlays in excess of 10 percent for a fiscal year.

"Total receipts shall include all receipts of the United States Government except those derived from borrowing and the disposition of major public physical capital assets."

Mr. BIDEN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator KERRY be added as an original cosponsor of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BIDEN. Madam President, I rise today on behalf of myself, Senator BILL BRADLEY of New Jersey, Senators DASCHLE, DORGAN, and LAUTENBERG.

The amendment we have sent to the desk—some have suggested, why are we continuing to do this; it looks like the train has left the station and no one is going to listen anymore to the argumentation for any change in this balanced budget amendment. It seems that somehow it was like the tablet that was handed down, chiseled in stone; even though privately Members who are inclined to vote for this amendment but think it is flawed now will say, "Well, why don't you agree to this change?" And they will look at us and say, "Oh, it makes sense, but we can't change it; this is the best we can do."

I do not think it is the best we can do and my colleagues who cosponsor this do not think this present balanced budget amendment is the best we can do. That is why we continue to talk about how we can improve it to make it workable.

I wanted to make the case today that while it would be useful to establish a capital budget under the current budget rules and practices, it will be even more important if the balanced budget amendment is ratified and becomes part of the Constitution.

The main reason budget experts advocate a way of designating specific capital budgets is to assure that we weigh the immediate benefits of spending for current operations against the long-term benefits of investments that pay over the years. They are the hard choices the distinguished Senator from Maine has had to make, as a Congresswoman and now as a Senator. We all make them. And that is, there are tens of thousands of needs out there.

But what we tend not to look at closely enough, in my view, and will not be permitted to look at, as a practical matter, closely enough, is the distinction between short-term investment and long-term investment when we are dealing with limited dollars. Roads, bridges, dams, water, sewer systems, potentially even electronic infrastructures and, yes, even those major defense assets that assure the protection of our private economy and public works, all of these return benefits over more than the single fiscal year that the balanced budget amendment focuses on.

We decide to focus on an immediate need of whether or not we are going to hire 10 more FBI agents. That is an immediate question. That is an operating budget. We are going to pay their salaries, an important consideration. And that focuses legitimately on what we do year to year. But there are others you focus on that have life expectancies and needs that go well beyond a year's time.

Even under current budget rules without this balanced budget amendment passing, many observers believe our budget provides for too few of these long-term investments. We get much pressure on it from our constituents at home, as we should, to deal with the immediate needs that they have. It is a whole lot harder to convince them that maybe we should use some of that money to make a longer-term investment for which they will not see immediate benefit but will, in fact, have much greater benefit for them and their children than the short-term investment.

So under our current budget system, we face this difficulty. In recent reports, the General Accounting Office, which has been quoted numerous times by people who are for the balanced budget amendment, against the balanced budget amendment, and not sure of their position on the balanced budget amendment, the GAO report has repeatedly emphasized the need for a budget process that forces clear decisions between our short- and our long-term needs.

In fact, in the 1992 report on the dire consequences of our current deficit policies, the GAO declared, and I quote:

A higher level of national savings is essential to the achievement of a higher rate of economic growth. But by itself, it is not sufficient to assure that result. . . . In addition . . . , economic growth depends upon an efficient public infrastructure, an educated work force and an expanding base of knowledge, and a continuing infusion of innovations. The composition of Federal spending, as well as the overall fiscal policy, can affect long-term economic growth in significant ways.

Let me repeat the part that they emphasize: The composition of our spending, how we spend it, has as much impact upon our future growth as what we spend in the aggregate.

The composition of Federal spending that was the concern of the GAO report, Madam President, was the mix between operating expenses and capital investment.

Let me wrap up this extended citation of where the GAO comes down on this issue with the conclusion of the report's chapter on long-term priorities, and I quote:

The recent approach to budgeting, focusing on each year's choices in isolation, has not served the Nation's needs. Only if we change the framework of the debate to emphasize the long-term consequences of both fiscal policy and relative priorities within the budget can we hope to develop a national consensus on the potentially discomfiting actions needed to achieve the future we want for ourselves and for the next generation.

How much truer will these words be, Madam President, after the balanced budget amendment passes, if it does, a balanced budget amendment that raises each year's fiscal balance to the level of a constitutional mandate?

Madam President, you and I do not know each other well but we have served together in different bodies for a long time. How many times have we heard, in both political parties, all these experts who have come down and talked to us over the last 10, 12, 15 years, saying things like: "You know, corporate America is shortsighted. The Japanese are farsighted. Corporate Japan is farsighted. They make long-term investments, they forgo short-term gains; they work on long-term profits, not short-term profits."

And how many times have we heard managers from the Harvard business schools and the Wharton School at the University of Pennsylvania and the other great business schools of America tell us the same thing?

That is all we are saying here; that is all the GAO is saying here. As American corporations have begun to retool and not think of what the next quarter's profits will be but think about what the next 4 years' situation will be, and 8 years and 10 years, corporate America has gotten strong. We now, to take one anecdotal example, we now build better cars than Japan; they are higher quality. We are gaining a larger share of the market. We are doing better because the corporate executives stopped thinking about getting the price of the stock up to a certain price by the time they retired so their retirement benefits related to the value of the stock at the time.

All I am suggesting, and others, and GAO is we have to do the same thing as we make this fateful step, which I think we should make, to having a balanced budget amendment. How much more difficult will it be for us to make these long-term decisions when we are operating under the constraint of requiring an absolute balance every year, every time we present a national budget?

Will not our current incentives—what we all agree is a callous disregard for the burden of debt on our children—will not those current incentives just shift to a new incentive?

Right now, rather than make the hard choice of cutting spending or raising taxes, we have an incentive to push off the burden of the debt we are accumulating onto my sons and daughter, onto your children, our children, the next generation.

That is the incentive. That is why we say we need a balanced budget amendment.

Once we pass the amendment, and I hope we do—I hope we pass a balanced budget amendment—once we pass it, the incentive shifts. We may no longer push debt onto our children, but we may well neglect the things we need to do in order to sustain our infrastructure and to raise the level of potential growth in our economy.

Mark my words; when there is a short-term need to deal with an immediate problem when we have to balance the budget, and someone says but if we do not deal with the infrastructure of the country, the highway system or the port system or the sewer system or whatever it may be, or investing in long-term technology in a major growth requirement in the Defense Department, star wars, whatever you want to pick, you know what we are going to do? We are going to make sure we take care of the immediate need because we are going to go back home for election, and we do not want to tell anybody, by the way, the reason I did not vote to continue to fund this or that program is because I believe that if we invest more money in our ports, it will put us in a position to compete better with the Germans and the Japanese in the next generation. And that is why I cut your program and why I invested it in a long-term investment.

Fat chance. Fat chance. If we have an incentive now to push off debt to our children, I think the incentive to neglect future investment under the balanced budget amendment will be even stronger.

Madam President, it would be wrong to shift to a new incentive to balance each year's budget without adequate consideration for investments that are equally important to future generations.

I believe that without a capital budget provision the balanced budget amendment will replace our current shortsighted budget perspectives with another potentially harmful perspective that only rewards current cash-flow balances without regard for the investments that are our generation's responsibility to the next generation.

Madam President, we have heard repeatedly here on the Senate floor that virtually every State in our land has some form of balanced budget requirement in its constitution. We have one in Delaware, one that we added to our Constitution in the year 1980, and it has worked well. But all of the States, including my State, also use their bonding authority to pay for capital projects.

Madam President, as a prudent way of living within the constraints of a constitutional restriction, without neglecting our future, I do not know how we can do anything other than what States do.

I have heard, until I have had it up to here, the States and Governors telling us how they balance their budgets. Let me tell you they do not. They do not balance their budgets. I do not know of a single State that balances its budget, not a single one that I can think of.

I am prepared to state for the RECORD—if any Senator can come to the floor and tell me otherwise, I will apologize—they do not balance their budgets. They balance their operating budgets, their operating budgets. I also hear my friends, who support this amendment a little more stridently than I do, say the following: why can we not balance our budget like the folks back home balance their budgets?

Well, unless you hang out with a really wealthy crowd, I doubt whether you know anybody at home who balances their budget. I will bet you there is not a single person sitting in the gallery here who balances his budget like this amendment will require the Federal Government to do.

I wonder how many people walk out and pay cash for their new house? I wonder how many people who have purchased a house within the last 2, 5, 10, 12 years own the house outright and are not paying a mortgage?

My dad used to be in the automobile business. There were not a whole lot of people who walked in and plunked down cash or a check for a brand new car. If they did, he wondered whether they were drug dealers most of the time. Who comes in and does that? Some people have the money to do it and some people have the discipline to do it, but most people buy their cars on time.

A lot of us, myself included, have to borrow money to send our kids to college—take out loans, second mortgages on our homes.

As long as we pay the mortgage payment, as long as we pay the principal and interest on the college loan, as long as we pay the car payment, we will assume we are balancing our budget. But if we passed a law saying no household in America could operate other than on a balanced budget, as we are about to pass here, there would be an awful lot of people in apartments. There would not be any new homes being built.

I think we should be honest with the American people about what we are doing here.

Now, there are some arguments which I will respond to—I am sure they will come up—about why the Federal Government does not need a capital budget. I respectfully suggest that is not the case. If the example set by the States is an appropriate one, Madam President, as we have heard so often over the years in regards to a balanced budget amendment, then certainly we should learn from the States' universal determination to borrow for those projects that they deem worthy of long-term funding. That is how they do it. The amendment I am offering with my colleagues today will put that lesson into effect.

Madam President, I have here an editorial from the Wall Street Journal, not viewed as a liberal paper. Probably the news portion of that paper, if not the best, is one of the best in America. The editorial page, like many editorial pages, is often very strongly slanted. No one has ever suggested that the editorial writers of the Wall Street Journal are a bunch of liberal big spenders and taxers.

Let me read what they say in an editorial dated November 11 of last year right after the election. The editorial board expressed concern that Congress might move precipitously on a balanced budget amendment.

Let me read a passage from that editorial:

To understand the economics—

Says the Wall Street Journal.

If all American households were required to balance their budgets every year, no one would ever buy a house. Of course, households don't think about their budgets that way. They figure balance means meeting the mortgage payment. Similarly, State and local governments with balanced budget requirements can still borrow money for capital improvements. . . .

This amendment offers a simple mechanism to address the lack of a Federal capital budget in the proposed balanced budget amendment.

It introduces the concept of capital investment and says that the Federal Government is not bound to pay for such investments out of operating expenses up to a total of 10 percent of the operating outlays each year. So, to make it simple, let us assume that there is a $100 billion budget—it is more than that, but let us make it easy, a $100 billion Federal budget. No more than $10 billion could be added on to that budget in terms of a capital budget.

We can decide to build the bridges and highways out of operating expenses if we are flush. But we can also decide it makes sense to borrow the money, like we do in States with bonds, essentially saying we will pay it off in 2 years or 5 years or 10 years. And we must balance it, in the sense that States do in that we pay the yearly payment it costs to pay that off—the mortgage payment on the new airport, the new highway, the new exotic aircraft we have to build, the new whatever capital investment we decide upon.

In other words, it permits borrowing, the issuing of bonds for such investments just like the States, up to a maximum of 10 percent of each year's operating expenditures. We would be able to issue bonds without the three-fifths supermajority requirement needed for an excess in outlays over revenues in 1 year.

So, to borrow the money to do that, that is to make a capital investment, it would be a simple majority vote. Yet if we wanted to in effect borrow money, or go in debt in our operating budget, we need a three-fifths vote. And the rationale for that is simple, and that is we should encourage long-term investment and discourage short-term investment, given limited dollars.

Above that 10 percent amount, you could not borrow without a supermajority with 60 votes—just like you have to have now in this amendment to borrow money or increase the debt.

As the Wall Street Journal and many others who have commented on the balanced budget amendment proposal before us here today pointed out—“Borrowing for investments with long-term payoff is the practice of individuals, the practice of cities, the practice of State governments, and the practice of businesses. And it exists in all other advanced economies.”

And it ought to be our practice, too. It is sound economic practice.

The 10-percent cap on the investment budget is a rough average of what we have been spending on a restrictive definition of capital investment every year since 1980. I must say, many analysts believe that our investment budget has been inadequate to meet the needs of the future. They say we should be investing a lot more than 10 percent of our operating budget in long-term investment. That may be. But I am not willing to allow more of that to occur with a simple majority vote. If we want to do more than that, then it has to compete on the same basis that an operating deficit would compete.

I think the capital budget should have to compete the same way, once it is beyond 10 percent. But a 10-percent cap on borrowing, without a supermajority needed for extension of the national debt, provides a reasonable minimum above which the approval of three-fifths of both Houses would be required.

So we could have a larger capital budget in the future if we need it. But either borrowing more under the three-fifths requirement, or if we decided to, by putting some big investments in our operating budget, would be the only way we could do it.

By accepting this capital budget amendment we will have established the formal procedure, with constitutional authority, for considering those projects which will have long-term payoffs and that, therefore, merit long-term finance. The capital budget includes only major physical capital assets, the kinds of purchases that individuals, businesses, and our State and local governments make by borrowing. It does not include research or education that many of us may argue are long-term and needed capital—investments in our future. They are important investments but they are more properly handled on a year-to-year basis, in the opinion of the authors of this amendment.

Madam President, let me make it clear again that what constitutes a capital investment will be defined in the amendment. But we do not have to fund a capital investment through borrowing. We can fund a capital investment, if we decide to, through the operating budget. It will take a majority of Senators even to conclude that we should treat it as a capital investment.

So the point is there are several hurdles you would have to cross here. This is not a giant loophole to allow us to continue deficit spending. You would have to meet the definition of a capital expenditure, you would have to get the Senate and House both to agree it was a capital expenditure, and then you would have to get them to agree to the fact it was worth borrowing money to in fact make that capital investment. And if the capital investment that was about to be made would exceed the 10 percent limit on what could be made, it would require a three-fifths vote in both the House and the Senate to do it. But at least the mechanism that is available to every State would be available to the Government.

It can be argued, and accurately, I think, that the balanced budget amendment as currently written permits borrowing and, therefore, future Congress's could engage in a form of capital budgeting. By that same logic, of course, our Constitution now permits us to balance the budget. The point of a balanced budget amendment is not to correct the defect in the Constitution but to correct a defect in our behavior—not the Constitution. We do not need this amendment to balance the budget. There is no amendment now that says you cannot balance the budget. We just do not do it. So many of us think we need an amendment to say we must do it.

I would argue the same rationale applies to those who say with the budget amendment we have up here, JOE, you could have borrowing if you get a three-fifths vote and you can call it whatever you want, capital budget or anything else. That is true. But it begs the question.

It is in that spirit that we offer this amendment. Not because some form of capital budget is impossible under the present amendment, but because we need to provide an explicit mechanism by which we can distinguish between projects that merit long-term financing and those that should be funded year to year.

One more point before I close, Madam President. My colleagues will know that we have provided that any revenue from the sale of public assets will and can be only used to fund capital budgets. So, for example, if we decide in order to raise money we are going to sell off Yellowstone National Park—and no one is suggesting that, that is why I pick it—instead of that money going into the general fund that money would go to reduce the debt that has been accumulated on the capital budget and pay off the mortgage quicker. That is what it would do. This provision removes an incentive to sell off our assets in the name of short-term budget balances.

Again, I want to protect our kids, not only from accumulation of debt and the interest they will pay on it, I want to protect them from the shortsightedness and the incentive to shift away from them the long-term investments they need. So, in order to satisfy our immediate need to balance the budget I do not want them selling off Cape Henlopen State Park, which is supposed to be there for posterity, in order that they not fire people who are on the Federal payroll to meet the balanced budget amendment.

So, Madam President, without an explicit capital provision, our incentive will be to focus only on those spending priorities that have short-term payoffs, economically and politically.

Madam President, I see the minority leader, the Democratic leader is here. I can refrain because I know he is on a very difficult schedule—refrain from delivering the rest of my statement at this point.

I will be happy, with the permission of my friend from Utah, to yield to him to speak on this or any other item he wishes to speak to.

Madam President, this amendment is a genuine improvement, in my view, designed to protect our children just as the overall balanced budget is designed to protect them.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the distinguished minority leader of the Senate, the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, first let me congratulate the Senator from Delaware for his eloquent presentation and the leadership he has shown once again on this very important issue. No one in the Senate has become more of an expert on this particular question than the junior Senator from Delaware. I applaud him and thank him for offering the amendment.

We all know the purpose of a balanced budget amendment. The purpose, of course, is to free ourselves from our overwhelming debt burden and to promote economic expansion and growth for ourselves and our children. We are here to find a more certain path by which to accomplish that very purpose.

A constitutional requirement to balance the budget is one means to attain that goal of a budgetary balance. But the point of the whole exercise is economic productivity and growth. That is what we seek. We want to be able to tell business and we want to be able to tell families that Government policies will create more of an opportunity to have more economic growth and activity than we have now.

But if we are to ensure future economic growth, we certainly need to craft a balanced budget amendment carefully in a way that meets the objective of strengthening the economy.

I support the idea of forcing the Federal Government to adopt budgetary discipline under which most families and businesses and States must live. As we all know, our current budget rules do not function that way, and we need to correct them.

Today we have an amendment that would address that situation and force the Federal Government to live by the same budget, by the same rules and the same standards that every American family, every American business, and nearly every American in every State is required to live by.

The Biden amendment would establish, for the first time at the Federal budget level, the principle that there is a distinction between capital costs and operating costs. We actually would, for the first time make the distinction between capital costs and operating costs. This is absolutely necessary to allow us to balance the budget and at the same time invest in limited long-term priorities that fall outside the scope of annual operating expenses.

We have to come to the same conclusion that businesses and families and State governments already have: that there are different types of spending. On the one hand we have investments that can generate the economic growth in this country, in this business, or in this family. On the other hand, we have the operating expenses that daily, monthly or annually we have to pay the bills for, to do the work of government or business.

That really is a principle that every family and every successful business has recognized. When a family buys a house or car, or a farmer buys a better tractor, they do not pay cash. If a business expands to a new location or upgrades its computer system or purchases modern machinery, it does not pay cash. People and businesses borrow for long-term investments.

So the Biden amendment suggests that we draw the same distinction, economically and fiscally, between investment and operating expense.

That is really what the vast majority of States do today. States do not finance road construction or new school buildings or State courthouses or prisons solely out of a single year's revenues. They issue State-backed bonds and pay them off over the useful life of these investments. That makes good, common business sense.

So I support the idea of a constitutional budget amendment because I believe its goal is to strengthen our economy. But we do not strengthen the economy simply by writing new words into the Constitution. We strengthen the economy when we focus on the elements that make the economy strong, and shape the constitutional amendment to reflect those elements. We strengthen the economy by concentrating Federal spending on investments that promote long-term economic development, just as business do.

So I have cosponsored the pending amendment because I believe it is a practical way to promote economic growth. The amendment would put the Federal budget on the same footing, and subject the Federal Government to the same requirements that govern most States, businesses, and family budgets today. It would establish a clear distinction between capital costs and operating costs.

The amendment is tightly drawn, as the Senator from Delaware has pointed out, to prevent the Federal Government from sinking deeply into debt to finance capital investments. The capital budget would be limited to no more than 10 percent of the total outlays for each fiscal year.

It would operate under the pay-as-you-go discipline imposed by the requirements of the balanced budget amendment itself. So would the operating budget. Depreciation and debt servicing costs would be assessed to the operating budget, so debt incurred for public investments would have to be repaid within a balanced operating budget.

Just as any family must keep monthly car and mortgage payments affordable, the Government would not be able to take on more debt without cutting spending or increasing revenues in the operating budget.

So the amendment would ensure that the Constitution preserves the ability of the Federal Government to do what it needs to do, to invest in our economic future in a meaningful way. Put simply, it would create a capital budget to clearly distinguish tax dollars used for public investments from tax dollars used for immediate consumption.

It would create a powerful incentive to balance the operating budget—the consumption side—and it would offer an equally powerful incentive to subject all proposed investments to heightened scrutiny.

We hear repeatedly that the States balance their budgets, so why does not the Federal Government do so? It is a good question. But it is a question that compares apples and oranges.

Most States' balanced budgets requirements apply only to their operating budgets. They borrow for long-term investments and pay back the loans. They balance their books, they do not balance their budgets.

The amendment before us provides for a way to make this an apples-to-apples comparison. It would place the Federal budget on the same plane as most State budgets that exist today.

Again, the current Federal budget makes no distinction between operating and capital costs. We treat a highway that lasts 40 years precisely as we treat a traveling bureaucrat's lunch that is eaten and forgotten in 15 minutes. That is a prescription for short-changing investment.

A family does not treat a monthly mortgage payment the same as it treats a night at the movies. When the budget is tight, we clamp down on nights out. But we still pay the mortgage.

So it is time to abandon the idea that we can operate in today's economy out of a cash drawer as we could two centuries ago. For too long, that attitude has forced the Federal Government into costly and senseless solutions that are short term and, frankly, shortsighted. For example, in the mid-1980's, when President Reagan was anxious to avoid the appearance of higher deficits, the General Services Administration spent hundreds of millions of dollars on rental leases around the country, although it would have made more sense to build and own the buildings outright. In some cases, taxpayers are still paying on some of those leases today.

The argument that Government should operate on a more business-like basis is really what this amendment is all about. Every wise business borrows money to make investments that will increase profits. Smart businesses do not have to guess how much of their borrowed capital, how much of their revenue, how much of their future capital is going to be sunk into wages instead of a new warehouse. They know how their money is allocated because they have capital budgets, and they have operating budgets. It is the instinctive response of any normal household to draw the distinction. But, under current law, the Federal Government cannot do what families or businesses do today.

Madam President, a group of 435 leading economists recently called upon Congress and the President to increase public investment now and for the 21st century. They included six Nobel laureates, and their call reflects their professional judgment, not a political one.

They said:

"There is a danger in the current antigovernment tone of our national political discourse that we as a nation will forget the essential economic contribution made by public investment in our people and in our infrastructure. * * * The cost of infrastructure decay, urban squalor, and social polarization is too high."

Nearly every economist agrees that the United States is not investing enough in public infrastructure. Our public capital—roads, bridges, rails, and airports, our water systems, schools, and libraries—are all investments made in the past that support our present standard of living.

Our ability to compete, our ability to improve the quality of life for ourselves, and our ability to prepare for the 21st century depends upon our willingness to make these kinds of investments. But our present budget structure, unchanged, guarantees that we will not be able to do so.

The distinctive mark of American economic growth throughout its history has been productivity. Ours is an economy and a system that has given free rein to the investments, public and private, needed to sustain the productivity growth that we witnessed now for so long. We cannot, we should not, continue to live off our seed corn. We should be planting for our own futures, certainly not eating the very product that has produced the kind of economic vitality that we now enjoy.

The reason these economists and other Americans had to call attention to infrastructure is that investment is not treated by our budget as a distinct budgetary cost separate from consumption, and I daresay that most of the people in the Chamber today would privately agree that it should be. The Biden amendment at long last would achieve just that.

Polls show that Americans want much of what Government provides. They want to eliminate waste, of course. So do all of us. But they also want a strong national infrastructure with safer highways, with safe dams, with safe bridges, and good schools.

Indeed, most of our arguments over Government are not over the investment end of it; they are over the operational costs. Such issues relating to welfare and some of the consumption questions certainly will come up in the coming weeks and months on this very floor. I have not heard much anger, frankly, over capital investments that past generations have made in this country. That is not what this debate is about. We all recognize that public investment continues to decline. We all recognize that someday the bill will come due. We all recognize that if we do not address it now, this problem is going to continue to become more complicated. It will compound and become even more expensive.

The amendment before us is neither radical nor complicated. It is a coming of age for the Federal Government. It would give us the tools that every other competitive trading nation in the world already has.

Twenty years ago, the first Budget Act was passed. Frankly, I think it was regarded as revolutionary. For the first time, Congress would know how much money was being spent, and on what, before it was spent, not afterward.

By now, Congress has done practically everything possible to the Budget Act except to repeal it. But still we do not have a handle on spending.

We cannot agree, between 1990 and today, whether the trust funds allocated to future Social Security benefits should be counted against current deficit spending. We took Social Security off budget 5 years ago. This week, we nullified that decision. No wonder there is budgetary confusion.

It is time for another revolution, similar in scope to the one that brought the Budget Act into being. It is the single step that would give us the tools needed to change business as usual in Washington.

The Biden amendment would make that revolutionary, commonsense change. It would allow us to balance the budget and at the same time promote the long-term investment that we all want, the long-term investment that would give us a real level of confidence that, indeed, we can look to the future in the belief that we can, indeed, improve our productivity and strengthen our economy.

I yield the floor.

Mr. BRADLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRADLEY] is recognized.

Mr. BRADLEY. Madam President, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Delaware and as an original cosponsor. I think this is one of the most important amendments that we will consider in this entire debate on a balanced budget amendment. It goes to the question of truth in budgeting.

I read in the paper constantly how the proponents of the balanced budget amendment say, why can we not balance the budget? Our average citizen in New Jersey has to balance his or her budget, and so does the citizen in Maine or South Dakota or Utah. In fact, I have heard people say, if the factory worker can do it, why can we not do it? If the insurance salesman can do it, why can we not balance our budget?

Madam President, I suggest that average people out there in the country today, by a surprising margin, do not balance their own budgets, in the way we would have to under this balanced budget amendment. I think there is a very important distinction to be made between people who spend money for consumption and people who spend money for investment.

The average person today, assuming that he has a credit card, spends money by using that credit card and piles up debt. This type of spending is primarily for consumption. At the same time, my guess is that there are millions of Americans who have mortgages on their homes. Madam President, under the rules established by this balanced budget amendment, any American who has a mortgage on his or her home would not have a balanced budget. Under the balanced budget amendment, all capital expenditures have to be funded currently, which means that if you were going to buy a home under the balanced budget amendment, you could not get a mortgage; you would have to pay for the whole house in 1 year. How many people in this country do that? Not very many. They go to the bank and they get a mortgage, and as a result of this mortgage, they pay the house off over many years as they use it, and as the benefit of the asset accrues to them. They also pay the interest charges every year.

Madam President, let me suggest that there is a great difference between a mortgage and credit card debt. Similarly, there is a great difference at the Federal level between operating expenses and capital expenditures. Operating expenses fund consumption, the day-to-day costs of running the Government, including everything from veterans' programs to the FBI to employees' salaries. The benefits of this type of spending are used up almost immediately. However, when the Federal Government makes a capital expenditure, meaning an investment in a physical asset such as a building, a highway, or a port, the benefit from that asset does not accrue to the country in that first year. It accrues over time. Yet, the balanced budget amendment, as it currently stands, would require us to put the whole cost in the budget up front, unlike the average citizen.

Therefore, Madam President, the first point I want to make is that there is a real distinction between financing day-to-day expenses and financing long-term investment. American families know that distinction. That is why they have credit cards and mortgages—one to pay for day-to-day expenses; the other, to finance long-term investments. The Federal Government should operate the same way American families do. We should have a Federal budget that balances our operating expenses. We should not have a Federal budget that requires short-term balance on long-term investments.

So that is the first point I would like to make. Under this amendment, capital expenditures are listed in a separate budget from the operating expenditures. And while a three-fifths vote would be needed to allow borrowing for the operating budget, if you want to borrow on the capital budget, it would take only a majority.

The other argument we have heard in this debate, is that States balance their budgets, so why can the Federal Government not balance its budget?

Madam President, States do not balance their budgets as the Federal Government would be required to balance its budget under the terms of this amendment. We all live in different States. Let us take my State of New Jersey. We have a balanced budget requirement in New Jersey. The State must balance the budget. That is what it says. However, we also realize the importance of making long-term investments for our State's future. Therefore, notwithstanding the balanced budget requirement, the State has the authority to borrow to finance capital investments. In addition to general obligation bonds issued directly by the State of New Jersey, we have a number of State authorities that are authorized to borrow to finance long-term investment projects. These authorities include the New Jersey Economic Development Authority, which as of November 1994 had $3.6 billion in debt outstanding; the New Jersey Turnpike Authority, $2.8 billion; the New Jersey Educational Facilities Finance Authority, $1 billion; the New Jersey Sports and Exposition Authority, $900 million; the New Jersey Building Authority, $700 million; the New Jersey Highway Authority, $640 million; the New Jersey Waste Water Treatment Trust, $620 million; the South Jersey Transportation Authority, $590 million; the New Jersey Water Supply Authority, $150 million; and the South Jersey Port Corp., $40 million.

In total, Madam President, New Jersey had 19.8 billion dollars' worth of debt in 1992 which was used to finance capital projects. The total annual New Jersey State budget is around $16 or $17 billion. If New Jersey had to balance its budget as the Federal budget would have to balance its budget under the balanced budget amendment, New Jersey would have to spend more in annual debt payments than it now spends.

Madam President, despite the importance of investing for our Nation's future, the balanced budget amendment does not distinguish between operating and capital expenditures. Instead, the amendment, unlike the balanced budget requirements in New Jersey and 42 other States, lumps both of these categories together by limiting the Federal Government from borrowing to finance long-term investment. The balanced budget amendment would require that the full cost of each investment project be paid immediately regardless of the term of the investment's life. In other words, in New Jersey, $19 billion would be due next year because that is how much New Jersey is in debt with the so-called balanced budget amendment at the State level. If this rule were applied to families, they would be forced to pay off their entire mortgage immediately and they could never again borrow to buy a home, pay for college, or finance any other long-term investment.

Do we really want to hamstring the Federal Government in this manner? I think not. American families do not do it; our States do not do it. What is good for families and States should be good for the Federal Government.

We ought to have a separate capital budget. Therefore, the capital budget amendment that the distinguished Senator from Delaware has offered would do nothing American families, businesses, and States do not already do.

By allowing the Federal Government to borrow to finance long-term investments, this amendment would allow the Federal Government to manage its finances in the same way that most States, families, and businesses manage theirs. That is what this amendment is all about.

Why treat the Federal Government differently? Who would argue that families in this country should be prevented from taking out mortgages? Why should we say to New Jersey taxpayers, "Pony up for the whole State budget plus the total for all State borrowing, all $19 billion worth, to pay that debt off?" Why should we say to businesses that borrow to finance capital investments in plant and equipment, "Nope, you can't do that. You have to pay it all off in the same year you buy it."

The reason that we do not do that, of course, with regard to families, businesses, and State governments, is that we recognize the connection between long-term investment, economic growth, and job creation.

The more investment you have, the more jobs you have. The more long-term investment you have, the broader your foundation for economic growth is over time.

How often do we hear about the balanced budget amendment, "We need to reduce the deficit. We need to eliminate the debt. We need the balanced budget amendment because it is through debt passed on to subsequent generations of taxpayers that the ultimate unfairness comes in."

However, these same concerns about intergenerational cost shifting do not seem to come into play when we discuss the possibility of issuing debt to finance long-term capital projects that provide benefits over a number of years. Why pay for the benefits of a bridge in 1 year when those benefits are going to flow over 50 years? Why pay for the benefits of your home in 1 year when the benefits are going to flow over 50 years? American homeowners do not pay for all those benefits in 1 year. They pay over 10, 20, 30 years.

Why should the Federal Government be different? In short, it should not.

But there is a bigger point here and the bigger point is that capital investment, whether you are running a company or a government, is enormously important because it is through investment that we increase productivity which provides a foundation for long-term economic growth. That increased productivity is critical if we wish to enhance long-term job opportunities, improve our standard of living, and keep our Nation competitive in an increasingly international marketplace.

Capital investments are investments in the long-term productivity of our economy and in the living standards of our citizens. However, because these advantages do not become apparent until several years after the funds have been invested, they are often underfunded, particularly when funds are tight, as they are now. Budget decisions tend to focus on immediate, operating needs. As a result, long-term investments get shortchanged.

By separating capital expenditures from operating expenditures, we ensure that these long-term investments are not overlooked in the budget process. By allowing them to be financed through debt, we can ensure that the long-term economic vitality of our country will be preserved.

The threat of insufficient capital investment is very real. Recently, a group of 435 economists signed a statement that warned:

There is a danger in the current antigovernment tone of our national discourse that we as a Nation will forget the essential economic contribution made by public investment in our people and in our infrastructure.

"Public investment." Ask anybody who lives on the east coast, west coast, or gulf coast of the United States how important ports are. Those are big capital investments.

Ask anybody that lives anywhere in the United States how important highways are. Ask anybody who lives in a larger metropolitan area how important mass transit is. Ask anybody in the West how important dams are. Ask anybody in the dry West, beyond the 100th meridian, how important irrigation is. Ask anybody beyond the 100th meridian in the West how important public investment in power are.

Ask anybody, and they will tell you that it is on the strength of investment, both public and private, that long-term economic growth is based.

Madam President, I would simply suggest that if we look at the public investments in the 19th century. The distinguished Senator from Idaho is here. He knows how important the dams are in the West. He knows how important the irrigation systems are in the West. Madam President, if we could not finance those systems with debt, we would have to account for it all in the first year. We would have to pay the entire cost upfront. Most of those projects would not have been built had it not been for the Federal Government's ability to borrow and, in the future, many projects such as these will not be built.

We need to liberate capital spending from these requirements. We can do so by having a separate capital budget, a capital budget that would be capped at 10 percent of the total operating budget outlays. If we were able to do that, I believe that we would all benefit—our country would benefit and our children would benefit.

Madam President, I would like to close by emphasizing that the problem we are seeking to resolve by creating a separate capital budget is a real one with significant repercussions for our children and grandchildren. Like those economists said, if we do not make those investments, then our future will not be secure. How we choose to finance long-term public investments will have enormous consequences on the economic well-being of future generations. It is just as irresponsible to leave children and grandchildren with an enormous debt burden as it is to leave them without the infrastructure necessary for them to build their future.

I believe it is this concern about the impact of our decisions on future generations that is really driving the balanced budget amendment. If we are truly concerned about our children and their economic well-being, then it is clear that the time has arrived for a capital budget.

I yield the floor.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, I now yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. I thank my colleague. If I may have the attention of my friend from New Jersey and tell him that I agree completely on the need for long-term investment. But I believe the case is not there for carving out this exception for the balanced budget amendment.

It is very interesting that you mention the interstate highway system. President Eisenhower, to his great credit, proposed the interstate highway system. And he suggested that we issue bonds for it. And a U.S. Senator by the name of Albert Gore, Sr., stood up and said we should not issue bonds, we should have a gasoline tax to pay for them. And as of about a year or maybe a year and a half ago, the estimate was we saved $750 billion in interest.

The largest project we have now is a nuclear carrier. $7 billion or so is paid over 5 years. We can do that on a pay-as-you-go basis.

GAO has said we ought to separate investment from consumption in our budget. I agree with them. But they also warn we have no necessity for a capital budget as a local unit of government may have.

It is also interesting, as we look at the history of our budget, as our deficits have grown, our capital investment has diminished so that, if we are interested in capital investment, what we ought to be doing is getting the deficit down and, in fact, we will have more capital investment.

Now, I happen to favor, for example, moving ahead in a massive way for mass transit. I think we could say to the Chicago Transit Authority and the others, "We are going to set aside 2 cents of our gasoline, $2.4 billion, for your capital investment," and then if they want to—because they do not have the ability to do anything—if they want to issue bonds, they can do that.

I would finally point out that this balanced budget amendment, believe it or not, does not prohibit capital investment, in a way that I happen to think is not the desirable thing. The Judicial Building right next to Union Station was a project designed by our colleague, Senator PAT MOYNIHAN. Architecturally, it is one of the most attractive buildings in the Capitol area today. Without my knowledge—because I would have voted against this method of financing—we are leasing that for 20 years, and at the end of 20 years we will own that building. I do not favor that, but I mention that simply to suggest there is flexibility within this amendment.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, if I could respond to my distinguished colleague from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. I know we are limited to 20 minutes. If you can respond on the time of Senator BIDEN.

Mr. BRADLEY. Anyway the Senator from Illinois would like—I would like to accommodate him because I think he raises a couple of good points.

He raises the issue of the U.S. highway being built. Why do you need debt? I wonder if the Illinois Turnpike Authority is financed the same way. The New Jersey Turnpike is not financed the same way. We float bonds.

I note that in the 1950's there were a couple of years in which the Federal Government ran a surplus on a current year basis. We had no gigantic national debt, a very minuscule national debt, we ran a surplus. This allowed us the freedom to finance major capital projects on a pay-as-you-go basis.

However, I would say there is a great difference between our situation today and the situation that faced young Senator Albert Gore, Sr. when he proposed his amendment. The difference is about $4.3 trillion worth of debt.

As we try to balance the budget, we will be forced to make dramatic spending cuts. The capital budget amendment would simply cause us to weigh an investment's long-term benefits against its long-term costs. If the benefits outweigh the costs, we should be able to finance the project over its projected lifetime. Without this amendment we will be forced to budget for the entire cost of a capital investment in its first year and compare this cost to the many competing, and frequently legitimate, demands for current consumption spending.

The Senator makes a second point which is that as the deficit has grown, capital investment has dropped, to which I would say, "And the sun comes up in the morning." Of course, as deficits grow, capital investments drop. Capital investments drop because the public sector crowds out the capital markets. Instead, the money goes to finance public sector consumption. As a result, there is relatively little available for private sector investment.

But that is not the point. The point here is the public budget. Unless we act, public investment will continue to drop as we attempt to reduce the deficit. Ask yourself, you are a practicing politician, are you going to respond to the guy that comes in and says you know what we need is a new highway system. What we need is a new dam. Or what we need is a new power plant. Or are you going to say, I will give you the power plants, the bridge, the highway, but all you senior citizens, all you middle-class taxpayers, all you others out there who want to eat into a shrinking amount of available public funding, I will say no to you so I can make this long-term investment? This never happens. It has not happened in the past and is not likely to happen in the future. That is precisely why we need a capital budget.

Now the Senator made one last point about how the balanced budget should be flexible. I agree and would simply ask the question: Why is what is good for the American family not good for the Federal Government? Why is it that American families, when they buy a long-term asset, their home, get a mortgage and pay it off as they benefit from it each year in terms of interest payments? Why is that okay for the American family but not okay for the Federal Government? Why is it that Governors across this country say they have a balanced budget but still assume debt to finance long-term projects?

In my State alone, the State budget is $16 to $17 billion; the amount of amassed debt is $19.8 billion. Why is what is good for the Governors is not good for the U.S. Government? Why is what is good for the American families is not good for the U.S. Government?

So I would simply say, I think the Senator has raised a number of interesting questions, to which there are answers, and I have done my best to try to answer him.

(Mr. DeWINE assumed the chair.)

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator will yield for a question. I am going to support the amendment that is on the floor because I think it makes a lot of sense, but I am always interested in this notion of families versus Governors. The major difference here is every American family who has debt is required not only to pay interest on the debt but to pay down the principal payment after payment after payment.

The difference is, the Federal debt keeps increasing because we pay interest and increase the principal year after year after year. That is a very fundamental difference between families and Governors.

Mr. BRADLEY. If I could respond to the Senator, I take his point. At the same time, no family is going to put the full price of the house out. No family is going to be required, as we would be under the balanced budget amendment, to pay this full amount upfront. I think there is a significant difference. I take his point on the narrower issue. On the broader issue, I do not think anybody wants to say to American families, "You can't buy your home with a mortgage, you have to pay for it all up front."

I think that is what we are saying under this balanced budget amendment, that you cannot finance long-term investment out of debt and that, in my view, will be counterproductive; it will lead to lower economic growth and fewer jobs.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 1 minute.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, first of all, I think Senator DORGAN makes a very good point. I will add, that family does not mortgage itself because they want to but that is the only way they can acquire the thing. When you have a $1.6 trillion budget and the biggest capital item is $8 billion, less than 1 percent of that budget, then you do it on a pay-as-you-go basis.

Second, the point that was made for States, I happen to know a little bit about the Illinois toll road. I was in the State legislature. I voted against it. I wanted to do it on a pay-as-you-go basis. We could have done it, and no one in Illinois would be paying tolls today if we had been prudent.

The reality is, we have the lowest gasoline tax of any country outside of Saudi Arabia. If we want to do something in mass transit or highways, we can do it on a pay-as-you-go basis.

Finally, I urge that everyone listen to what the General Accounting Office suggests and that is we ought to divide our budget into investment and consumption but not have a separate capital budget as an excuse for a deficit.

Mr. BRADLEY. If the Senator will yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. BIDEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. How much time remains in control of the proponents of the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Twenty-three minutes and ten seconds.

Mr. BIDEN. I yield time to my friend from New Jersey.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished colleague. I simply would like to make the point again, the Senator said people would not be able to buy homes if they could not get mortgages. Right, that is true. Why did we decide we would allow them to have mortgages? So they would buy homes, employ people and, at the same time, make an investment that lasts a long time, precisely because it is in the interest of this country to have investments in homes that last a long time.

Mr. BIDEN. If the Senator will yield, why did we allow them to deduct the interest they pay on their mortgage? To further encourage them to buy.

Mr. BRADLEY. Why do we build the roads that got them to the homes in the subdivisions? Same reason. But there is a difference between that and sending somebody a check that they spend tomorrow. That is the operating budget. Send people a check and they spend it tomorrow. You can do debt like that, too.

You can have a credit card as an individual, you can go out and spend, consume, go to the movies, buy your wife dinner, buy some new clothes and put it on the credit card. That is consumption. That is the operating budget. In general, we should not borrow to finance such types of spending. However, when you buy a house, you have a longer-term investment so you do not want to pay $100,000 or $200,000 for that house in 1 year, you want to spread it over time because you are going to derive the benefits of that house over a longer period of time, year by year by year.

All we are saying is treat the American Government the same way that we treat American families. Treat the Federal Government the same way that we treat State governments.

The distinguished Senator from Delaware was not on the floor when I pointed out that in my State of New Jersey, we have public indebtedness—State government and authorities—of $19.8 billion and, yet, the Governor—and every Governor who has been Governor of the State of New Jersey—asserts we have a balanced budget. We balance the operating budget, we do not balance the capital budget. The capital budget is debt for long-term projects that help the economy grow and prosper. It is nonsensical to say, "Well, we don't need that. We are prohibiting it in the balanced budget amendment."

Instead, look what happens when you gain control over spending by balancing the operating budget and capping the capital budget. Under this proposal, the capital budget would be capped at 10 percent of the overall budget over time and the payoff in jobs, investment, economic productivity is immensely greater than that investment. I agree with the Senator from Illinois, it will not be made in the amounts that are available under a capital budget because all those demands of people who want to consume money we send them through the mail will be greater than those people who will be farsighted enough to say, "Build this dam, build that highway or build mass transit."

Mr. BIDEN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BRADLEY. I will be pleased to yield for a question.

Mr. BIDEN. One of the reasons why, as I understand it, some of us—myself, I know the Senator from Illinois feels this way and I suspect the Senator from Idaho—feel we need a balanced budget amendment is because now the incentive is to thrust off onto our children the obligation of paying for what we are unwilling to make tough decisions. When the President put his deficit reduction package down, the three of us voted for it but we could not get anybody else to vote for it because we did not dare to say we were raising taxes on the very wealthy among us, we did not dare to go back and say we were going to cap spending for social programs, et cetera. So it was easier to let the debt accumulate and the incentive was to shunt it off to our children.

My question is this: Will we not just be supplanting that incentive to shove off onto our children debt that we do not want to meet and instead shove off on our children the lack of the infrastructure they are going to need to be able to compete?

How many people in here are going to go home and say in New Jersey, Delaware, Illinois, Maine, wherever, "By the way, the reason why I voted against providing more money for education is because we think that the Port of Wilmington and the Port of Camden need an investment of 12 new cranes which are going to cost a half-a-billion dollars, because in order for us to be able to compete with the Germans, we have to be able to export more to Europe of the automobiles that we are building."

How many people are going to find that their town meeting folks are going to say, "Now let me get this straight, you mean to tell me my kid is not going to have as much money for school this year or for a college loan program this year or for tuition this year because you are telling me you invested so my grandkid will be able to compete with the Germans 10 years from now?"

Has anything in the political experience of the Senator from New Jersey led him to believe that will be the norm for American politicians?

Mr. BRADLEY. I will reply to the distinguished Senator from Delaware, there is one simple answer: Those investments will not be made.

Mr. BIDEN. Bingo.

Mr. BRADLEY. There are not profiles in courage enough for people to take longer-term decisions, witness this deficit and debt. The Senator is exactly right.

He points out that we will have a balanced budget amendment that will simply reduce the chances for better jobs, more jobs, higher incomes for our children because we will not be building the kind of infrastructure and the kind of investments that most every State in the Union finance by borrowing.

In my State, the New Jersey Turnpike Authority has financed through borrowing what is probably the best known investment. I guess there is not a Member of this body who has not ridden on the New Jersey Turnpike. That would not have been built if it had not been debt financed. I do not know if anybody has gone to Giant Stadium or to the racetrack built under the auspices of the the Sports & Exposition Authority. They would not have been built if they had not been debt financed. I do not know if many people know about the incredible dams in the west that would not have been built.

Mr. CRAIG. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BIDEN. I will be happy to yield on the Senator's time.

Mr. CRAIG. Specifically to the point of New Jersey, if you take the capital investment bonded by the State of New Jersey and the surpluses invested in the employment trust funds and you put them into a unified budget with the operating budget of the State of New Jersey, that is, the General Accounting Office report, October 1983, as we do at the Federal level in a unified budget, guess what you have in the State of New Jersey? You have a balanced budget based on revenue, based on the value of the trust funds, based on the capital investment from bonding, and that is why you have the rating you do in the bond system.

Now, what the Senator is saying is true, but we must tell the whole story. And the whole story is the net assets versus the expenditures of the State of New Jersey.

DICK GEPHARDT over in the House asked for that report, and in almost all cases with all States, if you look at it through the eyes of a unified budget, which the Senator is not arguing at this moment—

Mr. BRADLEY. Absolutely.

Mr. CRAIG. But the Federal Government does look at it in the eyes of a unified budget, because that is how we treat Social Security—and that has been argued here in the Chamber—then, I say to my friend, the rest of the story is that when you put it all together, the State of New Jersey, being as fiscally responsible as they are, is balancing capital, capital reserves in the trust funds of the retirement system versus the investment of the bonds they floated and the obligation they get as an A or a AAA rating and their operating fund and they have a near balanced budget. That is the reality of the report.

Mr. BRADLEY. I would say to the distinguished Senator that they might have a AAA rating, but it does not equal the rating of the U.S. Government. And the reason it does not equal the rating of the U.S. Government is because we can print the money. State borrowing is not as secure. There might be a Governor in New Jersey that might make some bad economic decisions. This might result in a bigger deficit than investors had imagined. Lenders might believe that the State is not making a good investment. At some point they might not be funding the pension funds as they should be funding the pension funds. In fact, right now that is the debate. And indeed that might affect their rating.

But we are talking about the Federal Government. I would say to the distinguished Senator as well, look, I voted to take the Social Security trust funds out. Let us have the trust funds as a separate part of the budget. Let us have an operating budget and then let us have the capital budget. Let us organize it clearly and tell the American people, as the Senator points out, just like the State of New Jersey, so that we can then say we have a balanced budget if we balance the operating expenditures.

Mr. BIDEN. Will the Senator yield for a moment for me to respond?

Mr. CRAIG. I would yield only on the Senator's time.

Mr. BIDEN. Yes, on my time.

As I understand what the Senator just said, put another way, if New Jersey wanted to pay off its bonds, it would have to take all the money it has in its pension funds. Bingo, that is a great idea, is it not? What does that do? I mean look, this is not real complicated.

The Senator from Idaho just laid it out. He said, look, if you take the money that is in here for the pension funds, all that money that is saved up, and you take the revenues that are coming in on a yearly basis and you look at the money that is being paid out and the indebtedness, you are almost balanced. That is almost balanced if you empty the bank account, the bank account being the pension funds, which means those people do not get paid their pensions. What are we talking about here?

Mr. CRAIG. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BIDEN. Sure, on the Senator's time.

Mr. CRAIG. The Senator knows he is not talking about that. The Senator is talking about an annual payment on the bond, not emptying out the trust funds. We are not emptying out Social Security. The bottom line is that GAO agrees with me against the Senator on the concept of a unified budget. Now, the Senator can play the rhetorical games but the reality is States cannot print money. They must borrow.

Mr. BRADLEY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CRAIG. No, I will not. They keep their rating by their fiscal responsibility. That is exactly what they do. Interestingly enough, when you put it all together State by State, while we do not have a capital budget—and we know we do not have it, and the reason we do not have it is because we like the pay-as-you-go basis; it controls our ability to spend and we know we cannot control our ability to spend—then States are not in a bad shape. States have been offered this financing mechanism simply because they do not have the ability to print money, because they are a part of the whole.

Now, we know that. Senators know that. And it comes down to the reality of fiscal solvency. States do not borrow beyond their ability to pay.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, on my own time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. Let me talk like a good old-fashioned Republican here. Let us talk about how people back home do it.

Now, let us just look at what the Senator said. He said States have debt. Well, they have debt. We are just saying we should not have any debt. But he is saying—let us get this straight—we are going to collect in taxes in New Jersey as we collect in taxes federally from the FICA tax for Social Security and the income tax and excise tax and all the other taxes, the State of New Jersey, the State of Delaware, the State of Illinois, the State of Utah, we are going to collect this money. Now, under the system that they are setting up, the total amount of money we collect cannot be less than the money we pay out. Right? OK, so far so good. New Jersey does the same thing. But what we are doing in our unified budget is we are spending the Social Security pensioners' money.

Mr. BRADLEY. If the Senator will yield at that point.

Mr. BIDEN. Surely.

Mr. BRADLEY. And by the logic of the argument of the Senator from Idaho, he thinks we should continue to raid the Social Security trust funds in order to balance the budget.

Mr. BIDEN. Precisely. If I can say to my friend, and he also thinks the State of New Jersey—I do not know that what they do is different than Delaware; I do not know what New Jersey does, but in most States they do not take that money and spend it to pay for roads. Some States do. Most do not. They have it segregated, their pension funds.

Mr. BRADLEY. Will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. BIDEN. Surely.

Mr. BRADLEY. New Jersey is the exception in that as well because New Jersey—I do not know what the date of the Senator's economic report is, but in the recent New Jersey budget, the State borrowed $3 billion from the pension funds to fund the deficit.

Mr. BIDEN. Right. Now, let us get it like the homeowner does. Let us say a homeowner decides, I want to retire, and I am just going to leave the State of Delaware or the State of New Jersey. I want to sell all my assets and pay all my debts. OK. Well, what he or she has to do is sell the house, sell everything they own. They take everything, all their income, that year. They pay everything off. And whatever they have left means they are either in debt as they leave town on borrowed money for an Amtrak ticket or they have money in their pocket.

Now, how about if you put the State of New Jersey or any other State, or the Federal Government in the same situation.

What happens now? In order for the State of New Jersey to pay off all that it owes, that is, its bond indebtedness, in 1 year, and all that it costs to operate the State for 1 year, it has to go and take money out of the pension fund. They could, if they took all the money out, settle all their debts. But now there is no money left for my uncle when he retires.

Now, I do not call that solvency. It may be that technically it is solvent, but it sure puts a lot of people in jeopardy.

I do not want to carry this too far except to say, look, there is nothing sacrosanct about the way this amendment is written—this main amendment is written. It makes sense to make sure we do not shift the incentive from accumulating debt on our children's backs so they have to pay interest on the debt, to denying them the ability to have any infrastructure left where they can make this country competitive.

Mr. BRADLEY. Will the Senator yield for one last point?

Mr. BIDEN. I will be delighted to.

Mr. BRADLEY. Again, back to the New Jersey example, the State budget is roughly $16.9 billion, the indebtedness is $19.8 billion. Imagine what would happen to taxes if you had to fund New Jersey investment the way this amendment would require us to fund Federal investment.

Mr. BIDEN. In 1 year.

Mr. BRADLEY. In 1 year.

Mr. BIDEN. Without being able to raid the retirement fund.

Mr. BRADLEY. Right, while protecting the pensions.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, we talked about State total indebtedness. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD this survey of State and local governments by the U.S. Bureau of the Census. It is in current dollars. Just going back to 1983, the total indebtedness was $167,289,000,000 for the States. In 1993, 10 years later, it is $387,680,000,000 indebtedness.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

State government total indebtedness

[In millions of dollars]

Fiscal year:	Amount
1993 .....	387,680
1992 .....	371,901
1991 .....	348,769
1990 .....	318,254
1989 .....	295,500
1988 .....	276,786
1983 .....	167,289

1978 .....	102,568
1973 .....	59,374
1968 .....	35,666
1963 .....	23,176
1958 .....	15,394
1953 .....	7,824
1948 .....	3,676

Note.—Amounts are in current dollars. Total indebtedness amounts include both long- and short-term debt. Long-term debt includes full-faith and credit (general obligation) and revenue debt. State government debt total excludes debt obligations of local governments; in fiscal year 1992 local government debt amounted to $598 billion compared with $372 billion for State governments.

Mr. BIDEN. Let us just hope everybody does not think we know what we are doing here and decide to pass in every State a balanced budget amendment like we have here, because we will be in chaos. Why, everybody who stood up—the distinguished Senator from Utah, the manager of the bill is here. His Governor, a really solid guy, a guy who is a fiscal conservative I assume, a guy who is straight as an arrow, and I asked him, “Do you balance your budget?”

He said, “No, we have a capital budget.”

I said, “Should we have one federally?”

He said, “Well, it is something you should look it. It seems like a pretty good idea to me.”

Did anybody go out there and survey the Governors, whom we all think somehow God invested them with some new knowledge now? Governors are in. That is great. Ask them do any of them object to us having a capital budget? This is silly, refusing to do this.

I see my friend from New Jersey is on the floor. Would he like some time yielded?

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I would.

Mr. BIDEN. Please, go ahead. I have 8 minutes left. Is 5 minutes sufficient?

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I will talk fast.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Delaware for his courtesy. I also want to commend my senior colleague from New Jersey because, though our arguments are going to be essentially the same, I thought he did his very well.

I want to talk about this, the notion of separating the Federal budget into capital and operating budgets, and only requiring that the operating budget be balanced, which is what I hear being said here. I come out of the business community. I served as CEO of a major American corporation and got my financial experience there. So as I approach this problem, I see it, perhaps, from a moderately different perspective than some.

Mr. President, I strongly support cutting wasteful spending and reducing the deficit, but I have serious concerns about putting rigid rules for fiscal policy into the Constitution. The balanced budget amendment to the Constitution should be defeated. However, if we are to have such a constitutional requirement, it should at least establish rules that recognize simple and practical realities.

House Joint Resolution 1, unfortunately, does not do this. By continuing commingling of capital and operating budgets, it would incorporate budgetary procedures in our Constitution—the permanent law of the land—that no aware businessperson would ever think about adopting for their business. It flies in the face of common sense and standard business practice.

Mr. President, how many times have we heard the same argument: If ordinary Americans can balance their family budgets, if State governments can balance their budgets, and if businesses can balance their budgets, why can not the Federal Government?

It sounds good, Mr. President. And the real answer is that, yes, families, States and businesses balance their budgets, principally because they are able to borrow for long-term investments and spread that investment over a period of time so it is accounted for in relation to the life of the asset as it is used. Families borrow money to buy a house or a car. For most families the achievement of an asset base is almost exclusively because they are able to mortgage a piece of property, pay it off over a period of time, and accumulate some capital.

States borrow for capital projects that will provide long-term benefits, like roads and bridges. And, every day, businesses borrow to invest in plant and equipment to make them more competitive. If they did not, most would have no future, especially in today's increasingly technological age. They know they need to make investments in the future. That is why they do not balance all receipts and expenditures—they balance only their operating budgets.

By contrast, Mr. President, House Joint Resolution 1 in its current form lumps the capital and operating budgets together, and makes no distinction between investments and operational expenses. As a former CEO of a major cooperation, I can attest that this approach violates the most basic principles of budgeting in the private sector. Virtually no major business in America commingles their capital and operating budgets. Nor do State governments, and for good reason.

Mr. President, too much borrowing is a dangerous thing, that is clear. But borrowing per se is not an evil thing. In fact, it is often the most appropriate way to finance long-term investments.

To illustrate the point, let us consider a town that is trying to attract investment by high technology companies, but which lacks the schools needed to support such companies.

If the town cannot afford to build new schools, its only option would be to borrow. By doing so, and building those schools, the town would promote economic growth, improve the quality of life for years, and spread the costs among all the generations who would benefit. In other words, it would be a win-win situation for everybody.

But now let us assume that this town must live under House Joint Resolution 1. What would happen? The answer is: absolutely nothing. The town could not afford the new schools. It would not attract high technology investment. Jobs would be lost. And the town's long-term future could be threatened. All in all, it would be a lose-lose situation for everybody.

Well, Mr. President, the fate of that town is really a metaphor for what could happen to our country under a balanced budget amendment. Any item that cannot be paid for by today's taxpayers will never be built—even if any borrowed funds would be repaid many times over, and even if the economy would benefit substantially by the investment.

Mr. President, such a constitutional bias against long-term investment is especially troubling since our nation has long underinvested in our infrastructure.

History has shown that investment in infrastructure is directly related to productivity. That is an economic reality that our competitors well understand, but which we have been ignoring. In fact, of the G-7 nations, the United States ranks at the bottom for infrastructure investment as a percentage of GNP.

Japan spends three times more on infrastructure investment than the United States. The Japanese recognize that to stay competitive they need an efficient transportation system. To match Japan's investment level for just 1 year, we would need to invest over $250 billion in infrastructure.

Mr. President, as we meet here today, almost one-fourth of America's highways are in poor or mediocre condition. Another 36 percent are rated only fair. One in five of the Nation's bridges are structurally deficient, meaning that weight restrictions have been set to limit truck traffic. There are unacceptable flight delays at 23 of the Nation's major airports. If no capacity improvements are made, 33 of the Nation's major airports will experience unacceptable delays by the year 2002. The effects of poor roads and limited air traffic capacity cost our economy $45 billion annually.

As we move into the 21st century, which will demand substantial infrastructure investment, we are laying the groundwork for economic disaster.

Mr. President, many of my colleagues have been arguing recently that we ought to shift power from Washington, and rely more on State governments to set policy. So it's instructive to see how State governments budget their resources. And the answer is: They borrow to invest.

Take my State of New Jersey. Some of our Governors have pointed to our State's balanced budget requirement, and said the Federal Government should adopt a similar limitation. But

New Jersey's balanced budget requirement applies to our operating budget. It does not prohibit borrowing for investments. In fact, between 1960 and 1992, State debt increased from $914 million to almost $20 billion. That works out to over $2,500 for each State resident.

Mr. President, balanced budget requirements in other States contain similar provisions for capital budgeting. So those of my colleagues who routinely proclaim the superior wisdom of the States should not have to think twice about voting for this amendment. It is entirely consistent with State practices.

Mr. President, investments in our infrastructure are critical to our ability to compete in the global economy and to maintain our country's standard of living. But that investment would be impossible under this balanced budget amendment, which requires today's taxpayers to pay for benefits that only future generations will receive.

That does not make sense. And to put this kind of misguided policy into the Constitution, where it would handcuff our economy in perpetuity, would be irresponsible.

Mr. President, we are talking about the long-term future of our economy. We are talking about the future of our children and grandchildren. I am thinking of my new granddaughter, Mollie, who was born just a couple of weeks ago—and all the children born in New Jersey this year. I want them to have as good a life as they possibly can. And I want our Nation to make the investments necessary to make that happen.

That is not going to be possible if the Constitution establishes budget rules that create a bias against long-term investment and fly in the face of common sense, established business practices, and State budgetary practices.

Mr. President, capital budgeting works for America's businesses. It works for America's families. It works for State governments. It should be incorporated into this balanced budget amendment.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, this proposed exemption for a so-called capital budget, in our opinion, could help evade the purpose of the balanced budget amendment. So I urge its defeat for five reasons.

No. 1, this provision opens up a loophole in the balanced budget rule. There would be a powerful incentive for Congress and the President to help balance the budget by placing more programs in the capital budget created by this amendment. An abused or gimmick capital budget exemption could actually endanger capital investments, as falsely styled capital items crowd out real capital investment.

It may also be that with a segregated capital budget Congress may limit itself to spending on capital investment only in the capital budget rather than spending more than 10 percent in the general budget.

But my primary concern is this—that this provision can be used as an escape valve for at least 10 percent of the budget each and every year. Under President Clinton's proposed budget for fiscal year 1996 that would mean that we could have yearly deficits of $160 billion per year, adding to the debt we already have, and growing. That means we would not be improving things very much from the deficit levels currently projected by the President. That is my first objection to this amendment.

No. 2, the loophole problem is aggravated by the fact that there is no standard definition of what a capital budget really is. In President Clinton's proposed fiscal year 1996 budget, the Office of Management and Budget admits this. OMB lists a number of broad categories of programs that may or may not be considered capital expenditures. They include research and development, education and training, and other such categories—very broad categories. Even within these broad categories there are questions about what programs should or should not be included. The amendment's attempt to cure the definitional problem only raises new definitional problems. The definition given is somewhat circular. Just what does "major public physical capital investment" mean? Each term is subject to substantial debate. This is a constitutional amendment. OMB's categories include a subdivision for major public physical capital investment, the same language used in the Biden amendment. This subdivision is broken into so-called direct nondefense and defense investments and grants to States and local governments.

All of this suggests that the capital budget would be easy to manipulate, or as OMB says malleable. This amendment would, in fact, create an incentive to manipulate it. As the President's own budget analysis admits,—this is on page 113 of the Analytical Perspectives Volume of the Budget of the U.S. Government, Fiscal Year 1996, just submitted: It says, "[t]hese and other definitional questions are hard to resolve." It goes on to say [t]he process of reaching an answer [to the definitional questions] with the capital budget would open the door to manipulation because there would be an incentive to make the operating expenses and deficit look smaller. By classifying outlays as investment and using low depreciation rates this would justify more spending by the program or the Government overall.

It is particularly inappropriate to place capital budgeting in the Constitution when there is no agreement on what constitutes a capital budget.

The third reason for my urging the defeat of this amendment is that the Constitution is not the place to set budget priorities. The balanced budget amendment seeks to create a process in which programs compete for a limited pool of resources. A constitutional amendment should be timeless and reflect a broad consensus—not make narrow policy decisions.

This exemption creates in the founding document a new constitutional budget subdivision with a percentage cap on it. We should not place technical language or budget programs into the Constitution which undercut its simplicity and universality.

My fourth reason for urging defeat of this amendment is that a capital budget exemption is unnecessary. Total Federal spending has generally been above 20 percent of GDP, and less than 4 percent of Federal outlays are for nondefense physical investment, one of the possible definitions of capital investment.

In President Clinton's fiscal 1996 budget, direct nondefense major public physical capital investment is projected to be only 1.21 percent of total spending. Federal grants to State and local governments is projected to be 2.44 percent of total spending. So, if we add the nondefense capital spending to grants, the total capital investment is only 3.65 percent of projected Federal spending.

Direct major public physical capital investment for national defense is projected to be 3.23 percent of total spending. If you added in the defense category, the total capital investment would be 6.98 percent of the total budget.

Given the relatively small and constant share that such capital expenditures—as usually understood—have in a very large Federal budget, there is no need to remove capital expenditures from the general budget.

One example might illustrate the lack of need for a capital budget. Although President Eisenhower initially proposed that the Federal Interstate Highway System be financed through borrowing, Congress decided to keep it on budget and finance it through a gas tax at the suggestion of Senator Albert Gore, Sr. We are unlikely to have a capital expenditure of this magnitude again. But, if we do, there is no reason to create a standing exemption for such investment.

If Congress decides to borrow for a particular large investment, this avenue is available under the balanced budget amendment as now drafted, and to the extent that the three-fifths vote provision in this amendment for additional capital investments replicates the general provisions of the balanced budget amendment, this amendment of my friend and colleague from Delaware simply is pointless. Under the balanced budget amendment, Congress can borrow to finance any such investments if three-fifths of each House vote to do so. This provision of this amendment is simply duplicative of the underlying amendment's provisions.

The fifth reason I urge my colleagues to vote against this amendment is that capital spending should compete in the budget like all other spending. The balanced budget amendment seeks to foster an atmosphere in which Congress prioritizes spending options within the revenues available. House Joint Resolution 1 does prevent the creation of separate operating and capital accounts to show where federal money is being spent. Any implementing legislation which creates such separate accounts, however, must leave the total budget in balance, since implementing legislation cannot subvert the clear mandate of this amendment. But, Mr. President, accounting techniques should not subvert the prioritizing function of the amendment.

The proposed exemption allows the entire budget to be used for noncapital investment like simple transfer payments, and then allows a 10-percent increase in Federal spending—and the debt to fund it—for capital investments. The General Accounting Office saw the fallacy implicit in this exemption when it said, "The choice between spending for investment and spending for consumption should be seen as setting priorities within an overall fiscal constraint, not as a reason for relaxing that constraint and permitting a larger deficit." GAO, Budget Policy: Prompt Action Required to Avert Long-Term Harm to the Economy, June 1992, p. 79.

The GAO further said, "The creation of explicit categories for Government capital and developmental investment expenditures should not be viewed as a license to run deficits to finance these categories." Id.

Each Congress should make its own decisions about spending priorities each year, but within a rule of fiscal discipline as the balanced budget amendment would require. This is particularly true where this proffered exemption for a so-called capital budget is so large that it nearly maintains the status quo of deficits above $160 billion a each year. Under the provisions of this amendment, we could continue to roll up debt almost as fast as we do now, maybe even faster as time goes on. This amendment creates an exception that nearly swallows the rule.

Mr. President, I would also note that the revenue portion of this amendment unduly hamstring the Federal Government with respect to the sale of assets. If the Government decides to sell off some outdated or unneeded assets, there is no reason not to count the revenue resulting from the sale as revenue to the Federal Government. This provision might even create a disincentive to get fair value from assets we sell because the revenues would not count as revenues, and to me this makes no fiscal or business sense.

Finally, there is a flaw in the analogy to States and private entities that the proponents of this amendment have made. Besides the fact that the Federal Government does not need capital budgeting as much as smaller entities, the analogy to capital budgeting by businesses or States is flawed because the Federal Government is not subject to the same checks as either private businesses or State and local governments. Private businesses are disciplined by markets. State and local governments' capital budgeting is subject to State bond ratings. These checks on the abuse of capital budgets would not exist under a Federal capital budget making it far more likely that a Federal capital budget could be abused.

Mr. President, so that we can move quickly here this evening, or at least adequate speed, I ask unanimous consent that following the disposition of the Biden amendment Senator FEINGOLD be recognized to make a motion to refer, and that time prior to a motion to table be divided in the following fashion: That no amendments be in order prior to the motion to table, 20 minutes under the control of Senator FEINGOLD, 10 minutes under the control of Senator HATCH.

I further ask unanimous consent that following the conclusion or yielding back of time on the Feingold motion the majority leader, or his designee, be recognized to make a motion to table the Feingold motion.

I have been asked to announce by the majority leader that this is not necessarily the final vote.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I want to express my support for the concept of a capital budget embodied in this amendment offered by Senator BIDEN and Minority Leader DASCHLE.

This amendment would establish a separate capital budget for the Federal Government, which would be distinct from the general operating budget. It would provide the mechanism to make major physical investments that are necessary to remain internally strong and able to compete with other nations for the jobs and opportunities our citizens deserve.

I think we all realize the benefits and importance of long-term investments in our Nation's infrastructure. In creating a separate capital budget, we would recognize the difference between the government spending that responds to immediate needs and the spending that serves as an investment in America over generations.

Families are familiar with this concept. Millions of households borrow to make very specific investments in their own futures, such as the mortgage required to buy a home. They do this because they realize the long-term benefits of home ownership. They recognize that many of the things they buy will last beyond the time they are done making payments on them. My highly respected friend, the senior Senator from West Virginia, has described how he went into debt to purchase a bedroom set when he and his wife were younger. This very frugal, wise person made a sensible investment to increase his family's standard of living.

The fundamental purpose for a capital budget is to ensure that America's citizens of today are targeting certain resources into our collective needs over future needs. When states issue bonds to pay for things like drinking water purification systems, they are recognizing that the benefits of that new system will go to many people over the course of 25 years or so.

If a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution passes, it should be constructed to treat a one-time, one-year tax break differently than the long-term investments in the necessary pillars of a strong nation. I think of the facilities needed to keep water pure and safe. Airports, highways and roads are that are the lifeblood of our economy, and are the only way for rural areas to have real opportunities for jobs and industries.

Many of those in favor of a balanced budget amendment point out that 49 states work within a balanced budget requirement. However, most of those requirements allow for state borrowing to fund capital investments.

In West Virginia, while we do not have a formal capital budget process, our state is permitted to borrow to fund long-term investments. The state is allowed to repay these debts over time from general revenues provided that there is a statewide vote granting the authority to do so. The state may also incur debt without this vote if the repayment is something other than general revenues.

In November, the voters in West Virginia held one of these statewide votes and passed what was called amendment 3. It was designed to fund water and sewer projects—an investment they felt will give them and their families benefits over a number of years. Amendment 3 specifically authorized the state legislature to issue and sell up to $300 million in state bonds to be paid for over a period of 30 years.

Mr. President, as a former Governor, I am more than familiar with the difference between operating budgets and capital investments that cannot be neglected. I know the cost all too well of neglecting infrastructure, health and safety facilities, transportation—when I became Governor, I faced those costs and fought to catch up so our state could compete for the jobs and opportunities that we saw other states win as a result of their superior roads and other assets.

I am afraid that if we pass this balanced budget amendment without allowing for a capital budgeting process, we will make a bad mistake even worse. The idea of using the Constitution to set economic policy is bad enough. Passing such an amendment without allowing for a separate capital budget that recognizes the difference between long and short term investments is short-sighted and could be very costly to future generations.

Mr. President, all of my colleagues should vote for this amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, all I can say is I understand what my dear friend and colleague is trying to do. I just disagree, and I think the Senate should disagree because it would be a tremendous loophole. These five reasons that I have listed are reasons why I think and why I believe that this amendment should be defeated.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, in a minute and 20 seconds I will give five reasons why the Senator is wrong, in my view. One, he makes conclusory statements. Two, major physical assets is defined in the amendment, and it is amazing how inventive he is about redefining what is in the amendment. He accurately read everything the GAO said, but that is not what we say in amendment. Four, we want competition to be skewed between long-term investment so we do not have our children paying the same price they are paying for the accumulated debt we have here. And five, nobody else does it the way my friend from Utah wants it done. I think it is time we ask ourselves, "I wonder why."

I urge those of us in this body who agree with the need for a capital budget to vote against tabling.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BIDEN. Yes.

Mr. SARBANES. When the Senator says "nobody else does it the way the Senator from Utah is suggesting," the Senator is referring not only to State and local governments, which borrow in order to fund a capital budget; he is talking about businesses which borrow and about individuals who borrow in order to fund a capital asset; he is talking about all of the other countries in the world. He is absolutely correct.

Mr. BIDEN. Maybe we can be different, but I hope we are not.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 32 seconds remaining.

Mr. HATCH. I will just say this. I have made the case that borrowing by State and local governments and by businesses is completely different from the borrowing for capital budgets by the Federal Government. I do not think you can make the analogy as simple as has been made by some of my colleagues.

I yield back whatever time remains.

Mr. BIDEN. On behalf of the minority leader, I ask unanimous consent that a list of some of those in support of the amendment be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUPPORT THE BIDEN-BRADLEY AMENDMENT TO THE BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT

DEAR SENATOR: As currently drafted, the Balanced Budget Amendment (BBA) would create a political straight jacket that could push Congress to sell off our nation's treasured public lands such as national parks, forests and wildlife refuges. To help prevent this consequence, we urge you to support an amendment Senators Biden and Bradley are expected to offer this week to the BBA. The Biden-Bradley amendment would establish a capital budget to assure continued federal investments in major public assets from being counted toward reductions in the operating budget deficit.

Some policy groups have voiced support for selling off public lands as a means of lowering the federal deficit, most recently at a January hearing before the House Interior Appropriations Subcommittee. While such a proposal seems unthinkable to most Americans, the BBA could push Congress in this direction. This possibility is not merely academic. After a previous administration initiated wide-spread sales of public assets to reach deficit reduction targets, Congress approved the Budget Enforcement Act of 1990 (contained in Public Law 101-508), which prohibits the Congressional Budget Office from counting the sale of public assets toward deficit reduction.

The reason for such a prohibition is obvious. While sales of federal assets may help reduce the deficit during the year in which they occur, the resulting one-time revenues do nothing to reduce the persistent spending problems that cause continued federal deficits. Far from reducing spending, selling public lands only results in the exchange of one public asset—say a national park—for another, cash. As such, it amounts to budgetary gimmickry in the name of deficit elimination.

Circumstances may well arise in which it is appropriate for Congress to consider the sale of individual federal land holdings. The Biden-Bradley amendment does nothing to inhibit that. But the Biden-Bradley amendment does assure that the balanced budget amendment does not provide a perverse incentive to sell off large portions of the public estate to produce phony deficit results.

We urge you to support the Biden-Bradley amendment.

Sincerely,

Rodger Schlickeisen, President, Defenders of Wildlife; Brent Blackwelder, President Friends of the Earth; Paul Pritchard, President, National Parks & Conservation Association; John Adams, President, Natural Resources Defense Council; Beth Millemann, Executive Director, Coast Alliance; Carl Pope, Executive Director, Sierra Club; Peter A. Berle, President, National Audubon Society; Victor M. Sher, President, Sierra Club Legal Defense Fund; Julia A. Moore, Executive Director, Physicians For Social Responsibility; Mike Matz, Executive Director, Southern Utah Wilderness Alliance.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to table the amendment and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question occurs on a motion to table amendment No. 278 offered by the Senator from Delaware.

The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. LOTT. I announce that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOND], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS], and the Senator from Kansas [Mrs. KASSEBAUM] are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS] would vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ABRAHAM). Are there are other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 59, nays 38, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 72 Leg.]

------	-------	-----------

So the motion to lay on the table the amendment (No. 278) was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order the Senator from Wisconsin is recognized.

MOTION TO REFER

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I send a motion to refer to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the motion.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. FEINGOLD] moves to refer H.J. Res. 1 to the Judiciary Committee with instructions to report back forthwith H.J. Res. 1 in status quo and at the earliest date possible to issue a report, the text of which shall be the following: It is a Sense of the Committee that the language of the report to accompany S.J. Res. 1, Senate report 104-5, which appears on page 19, and states, "Among the Federal programs that would not be covered by S.J. Res. 1 is the Electric Power Program of the Tennessee Valley Authority which will be deemed null and void and have no effect as the legislative history in interpretation of H.J. Res. 1."

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, the purpose of this motion is pretty straightforward.

The Judiciary Committee report accompanying Senate Joint Resolution 1 has the most extraordinary passage which flatly says that the Electric Power Program of the Tennessee Valley Authority is not—repeating this now—is not covered by the balanced budget amendment, on the grounds that this program is paid for by the Electric Power Program.

Not another single agency in our Government is singled out in the committee report in this manner. Only the Tennessee Valley Authority is exempted. That is right. Not Social Security, that is not exempted. But the Tennessee Valley Authority is exempted.

Mr. President, we have heard of appropriations pork. Now I think we have a new creature—constitutional pork. We are making constitutional history here, and at the same time we are creating a far more sophisticated pork than we have ever had in this institution. We are putting it right into the Constitution.

Not only, then, Mr. President, are the advocates of the balanced budget amendment saying they will not lay out a plan and say what they are going to cut, they are doing it better. They are actually protecting one particular program over all the other programs by writing in committee report language. It is an incredible provision for a committee report.

To put it another way, Mr. President, this is an attempt to put the equivalent of an earmark into a Constitution for a program that is of a concern to particular Members of Congress. Do not let anyone be kidded. The U.S. Supreme Court has to interpret the language of the Constitution. They will be looking at that committee report to get a sense of what was intended. They will see that the most important program apparently in all of our Government, of everything that this Government has ever done or ever will do is one program: The Tennessee Valley Authority. The only one the Judiciary Committee thought should be treated in a special way.

Let me raise just two reasons why I think this language is totally inappropriate. First, the proponents of this language argue that the TVA's Electric Power Program should not be covered by the balanced budget amendment because the financing of that program has been the sole responsibility of its own electric ratepayers, not the U.S. Treasury and the Nation's taxpayers, since 1959.

Now, Mr. President, that is an argument but it is certainly a debatable one. The Congressional Budget Office in its annual report on options on reducing the deficit, has this to say about the TVA Electric Power Program. It says:

Because many TVA stewardship activities are necessary to maintain its power system, their cost would more appropriately be borne by the users of the power. Direct cost to the Federal Government could be reduced by about $70 million annually if TVA were to increase power rates or fees to cover costs of all stewardship.

Mr. President, CBO thus says that the Federal taxpayers are, in fact, subsidizing the electric power user. It is not just being paid for by the folks in that area of the country.

So, Mr. President, that is not a dispute we need to settle here or now. That is what the advocates will say every time, "We do not have to decide this now."

But the point is that the backers of this language have attempted to tilt the argument on their side by placing this language in the committee report that will be used to interpret the meaning of this amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

So what proposition does this stand for? Apparently, so all agencies are not equal under the balanced budget amendment. Some—in fact, one—just one program gets special treatment.

We will take a look at some of the other quasi-public agencies that could make a pretty good claim as the same status as the TVA. Looking at the U.S. Postal Service—and here is a routine letter I received from the Postal Service in December 1994—that depends exclusively on postage and fees rather than taxpayers' revenue for operations, and has done this since 1982. Each class of mail by law must cover its cost and we must break even over time.

So the argument, Mr. President, that the Postal Service should receive special status under the balanced budget amendment would seem to be very much the same as the argument used to exempt the TVA. Why was the Postal Service not mentioned in the committee report as being exempted from the balanced budget amendment?

Now, if you do not like the Post Office, and a lot of people do not, there are a number of other Federal programs that are operated entirely on revenues produced by users.

For example, the Department of Agriculture's Marketing Service provides grading services on a user-fee basis for meat, poultry, eggs, dairy products, fruits, vegetables, cotton, and tobacco. Should these activities be exempted from any impact of the balanced budget amendment since they are entirely funded by the users and not the Federal taxpayers?

Let us try the Farm Credit Administration. This is an independent agency in the executive branch of the U.S. Government which is responsible for the regulation of the examination of banks and associations and related entities that collectively comprise our farm credit system. The expenses of the Farm Credit Administration are paid through assessments against institutions under its jurisdiction. So, again, here is another one—not the TVA—but another program that operates at no direct cost to the taxpayer.

So I ask again, is the Farm Credit Administration exempt like TVA from the impacts of the balanced budget amendment? If so, why was it not also cited in the constitutional history reported out of the Judiciary Committee's report in the same manner?

What about the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, another quasi-Government corporation established in 1933? FDIC does not operate on funds appropriated by Congress but on assessments on deposits held by insured banks and from interest on the required investment of its surplus funds in Government securities. Is FDIC covered or not, and if not, why was it not cited by the Judiciary Committee?

I will tell you why, Mr. President. The answer is clear. The Tennessee Valley Authority was singled out in the committee report because those concerned about its future do not want any budget cuts imposed upon this entity. It is not surprising in light of this whole balanced budget amendment, nobody wants to get cut.

Guess what? The folks who support the TVA are fearful of the Federal budget knife hitting one of the programs they support in part, I suspect, because there have actually been a number of bills introduced in Government to cut off the subsidies to the TVA.

I introduced on the first day of this Congress S. 43 which would terminate several current TVA programs and provide for a report on what remaining functions should be separated from the Federal Government. My Republican colleague from Wisconsin, Representative SCOTT KLUG, has proposed legislation along similar lines in the other body.

TVA supporters know that TVA is on the short list of most deficit reduction advocates, and that is why they want to provide it with special protection that no other program of any kind in the Federal Government is getting.

Mr. President, it is not just the CBO that cited TVA programs as needing reform. Citizens Against Government Waste include TVA in their prime cuts list for 1994. Reducing funding for TVA was also part of the Kerrey-Brown deficit reduction package, which I cosponsored. The deficit reduction package of a group of Senators led by Senator JOHN KERRY, which I also cosponsored, included it, and also the so-called famous Penny-Kasich plan also listed the TVA. There is no reason why we should allow this program to gain special protection as a result of the language that was put in the committee report.

In fact, Mr. President, I am afraid that this attempt in the committee report begins to make this whole balanced budget process look a little bit like a $3 bill. My motion will not disturb the balanced budget amendment in any way. It simply says that the committee report language that singled this agency out for special protection is null and void and cannot be used for legislative history purposes when we finally get around to achieving a balanced budget.

So to conclude, it is a simple proposition. We just need to ask the committee to come up with an additional report to change this. Otherwise, we will have enshrined a new tradition, something that no Democrat or Republican has ever achieved before, we have created constitutional pork.

I hope that every Senator rejects this attempt to exempt one program while all the others have to be on the chopping table for potential cuts.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. HATCH. I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I was unaware that this motion would be made. It caught me by surprise. I would like to go into great detail, and I did not know that there would be a time limitation until it had already occurred in regard to it. I would like to go into detail, which I will later, hoping that this is defeated and then we would have an opportunity to explain the history and the background and the reason why the TVA is a self-operating agency of the Government and, therefore, because of its uniqueness, different than any other agency or body, should be exempt in the balanced budget amendment.

This involves the electrical power program of the TVA, just the electrical power program. Certainly, the electrical power program of the TVA ought to be paid by the power users, by the ratepayers and not by the Government. And the intention of this report language is to guarantee and ensure that the Government does not have to pay for the electrical power system of the Tennessee Valley Authority. That is the purpose it was put in there.

They have variances that occur all the time, and they have to act immediately. They may have a tornado, they may have a downed situation pertaining to the transmission of electrical current and they may have to move. They may have to spend money immediately relative to those matters.

The ratepayers ought to be the ones to pay for it. That is the reason it was put in there. It was put in there for the protection of the taxpayers of the United States. It is put in there to protect the taxpayers so they do not have to pay for the electricity rates of the people in Tennessee and Alabama and Georgia, Mississippi, Kentucky, and the other places.

We have a limited time. Senator FORD, as I understand it, wants to make some remarks. I yield to him at this time.

Mr. FORD. Will the Senator give me 1 minute?

Mr. HATCH. I yield 1 minute to the distinguished Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, let me associate my remarks with the distinguished Senator from Alabama. TVA is important. TVA rests on its own bottom. TVA serves the ratepayers. The ratepayers pay TVA. It is good for the valley; it is good for economic development. It is a program that works.

I am opposed to using Social Security money. That is fine, we lost that one, but we should not lose this one. This is an amendment that is out of order, in my opinion, as it relates to the budget. And the income to TVA is important.

So, Mr. President, let me just say, this is quick. We did not have an opportunity. We have 10 minutes. It does not give us much time. I just hope that our colleagues will vote against this amendment; that we will have an opportunity then, if it is brought up again, to explain it in more detail.

I yield the floor.

Mr. FEINGOLD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ten minutes fifty-two seconds.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I yield myself such time as is necessary.

Mr. President, I definitely believe the TVA should be given the fair consideration, indeed, that all programs should be given when it comes time to balance the budget. I am willing to look at the arguments as to what aspects of TVA should be continued and what aspects should not—all the arguments.

But it is a little difficult for me to hear Senators from that area of the country get up and talk about how wonderful TVA has been to that part of the country. I recognize the Depression, New Deal, and the history of TVA. I have similar feelings with regard to aspects of our dairy programs and those programs that have helped keep our dairy farmers going all these years. But I have not sought through the committee report or any other mechanism to write a special protection for the dairy program or even some of the other programs that affect our State, such as the Farm Credit Administration, another quasi-public agency that does not rely on taxpayer dollars directly. We do not have an exemption for that.

If there is to be any meaning to the notion that everything has to be on the table and that this is not the time to make the preliminary decisions, it must mean that the TVA cannot be exempt while all these other worthy programs that mean so much to people around the country are not exempt.

All this is—let me be clear, this is not an attack on the TVA—this is just saying there should not be any language in a committee report that is going to be used by the courts and everyone else in the future to interpret the balanced budget amendment that exempts one program.

That is all. It is a very simple proposition. I am sure much later we will get to the merits of the TVA. So I would suggest this is a very mild suggestion that we not mess around with the future of the balanced budget issue by writing in exemptions in a committee report that relate directly to the constitutional provision.

I yield the floor and reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. THOMPSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. HATCH. I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. THOMPSON. I thank you, Mr. President.

I agree that it may not be an attack on the TVA. It is an attack on the balanced budget amendment. I think the language of the committee speaks for itself. The financing of the TVA power program has been the sole responsibility of its electric ratepayers, not the U.S. Treasury and the Nation's taxpayers.

That says it all, Mr. President. It is not an annual expenditure. It is not a would-be pork barrel project. It is not the nonpower program which is on the table along with everything else. It has to do with a power program that is self-financing. And of course, all this is another attempt by those who would defeat the balanced budget amendment to raise a red herring. We have seen time and time again those who would offer amendments, amendment after amendment after amendment, while at the same time stating that if their amendments, or all of their amendments in their totality were adopted they would still oppose the balanced budget amendment.

So I suggest that we analyze this for what it is. It is another attempt to encumber and somehow obfuscate the issue as far as the balanced budget amendment is concerned.

The committee considered this situation. It analyzed the power program of the Tennessee Valley Authority and stated the clear fact. It is not whether or not we want it on budget or we want it off budget or whether it ought to be on or whether it ought to be off. We can debate that at the proper time. But it simply stated the fact that since 1959, the financing of that program has been the sole responsibility of its own electric ratepayers.

So I would urge that we defeat this amendment and not go against the language that was well considered before the committee and we move on with what we are supposed to be here about, and that is bankrupting the next generation. I think we get too balled up in some of these collateral issues sometimes. We forget sometimes what we are about.

Mr. President, with the enactment of the 1959 Self-Financing Act, the TVA Board was given the authority to make power system decisions. In turn, the power system became the sole financial responsibility of TVA ratepayers, not the Treasury or U.S. taxpayers. Since 1959, the power system has not received appropriations and has been funded exclusively with power revenues and proceeds from the sale of bonds which, by law, are not obligations of or guaranteed by the United States.

All taxpayer funds originally invested in the power system, designated as the appropriation investment, are treated on the power system's balance sheet as the Government's equity. Since 1959, TVA has made annual payments to the Treasury—currently $20 million per year—to reduce that investment's balance. TVA also makes an annual return payment on that balance, which is calculated at the Treasury's current interest rate. This covers the Treasury's cost of money and keeps the taxpayers whole.

Since the receipts and outlays of the power system are its alone, it is incorrect and misleading to regard them as receipts and outlays of the United States. This view was shared by Senator Howard Baker while a member of the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee, TVA's jurisdictional committee.

In reporting legislation in both 1975 and 1979 which increased the TVA bond ceiling, the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee expressly agreed that "the obligations represented by bond issues under the increased ceiling will not result in any outlay involving 'Government funds'" and that TVA power funds "are not, however, generated through the general treasury and do not affect Federal fiscal policy." In both the 1975 and 1979 reports, the committee also found that there would be "no cost" to the Government "in implementing this legislation."

Mr. President, there are those of us who think we are bankrupting the next generation, that we need to do some things fundamentally—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 2 minutes have expired.

Mr. THOMPSON. Will the Senator yield another minute?

Mr. FEINGOLD addressed the Chair.

Mr. HATCH. I yield one more minute.

Mr. THOMPSON. That we need to do some fundamental things to change the direction of this country. There are those of us who are concerned about the investment rate, which is now one of the lowest in the industrial world; there are some of us concerned about the savings rate, which is the lowest in the industrialized world. We are concerned about the growth. That is what we are supposed to be discussing here with regard to the balanced budget amendment, not singling out some self-financing program by folks who would basically love to defeat the balanced budget amendment in its entirety.

So I would urge that we keep that in mind, and we do defeat this amendment.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. FEINGOLD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I yield myself such time as I need.

Mr. President, I am kind of amazed at the comments of the Senator from Tennessee. He is suggesting that this amendment is an attempt to derail the balanced budget amendment. But I think everyone should know that I could be here delaying debate—I have the floor. I could be reading the entire history of the TVA to the Senate, if that is what I wanted to do—just open it up and read and read. That is permitted under the rules as we know.

That is not what I did. I entered into a very brief time agreement, 20 minutes for my side. It is because I am not, Mr. President, trying to hold up the balanced budget amendment. In fact, this will take 2 seconds. All we have to do is vote in a few minutes to strike this ridiculous language from the committee report that tries to protect one program out of all the programs in the Federal budget.

So I want everyone to know who is listening, it is completely false that this is an attempt to delay the balanced budget amendment. It is just 20 minutes, 20 minutes to say why should one program of all the programs in the United States in our budget get special treatment and all the rest, including Social Security, which the Senator from California worked so hard on—

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. FEINGOLD. I yield to the Senator from California for a question.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. My question is, is the Senator aware that not only TVA is excluded but also the Bonneville Authority, and I believe others as well?

Mr. FEINGOLD. There is only one entity that we are aware of that has been specifically named. If there are others that should be named, I think that should be the subject of similar amendments. And I am very glad to see the senior Senator from California asked that question because she knows very well how hard she fought to try to get an exemption for a program that really probably does deserve the exemption, and that is the contract with the American people in the form of Social Security. But that is not the one that got protected.

Mr. President, this suggestion that this is a delay tactic is very troubling to me. I think it is not fair. In fact, I find it astonishing that the Senator from the very State that gets protected by this thing more than any other State, Tennessee, stands up and says this is a delay tactic.

I am just calling it what it is. It is a great deal for Tennessee. I would love to be able to exempt all the programs in Wisconsin up front in the committee language and then pass a balanced budget amendment. I would get a lot of pats on the back back home for that one. But I did not do it. I would not try to do it because I know very well that is a denial of the very meaning of the balanced budget amendment.

All the folks on the other side talked about the glidepath, about the right to know; we cannot make those decisions now. If we lay out what is going to be cut and is not cut, what happens is that the process falls apart.

I suggest this committee language, if it is not struck, is the beginning of the end of any serious attempt to balance the budget because there would be a tremendous outcry across the country that this and only this program is important enough to be protected and that every other program did not count.

So, Mr. President, I think this is a very, very clear amendment that should not even be controversial. That language should not be in the report. We all know it. And I would certainly hope TVA has to fight the same battle that everybody else does as the coming months go on.

I yield the floor and reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I yield one minute to the distinguished Senator from Illinois.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, the language of the report is among the Federal programs, and among the Federal programs where we guarantee bonds are REA's in Wisconsin and Illinois and Minnesota, and other States. We guaranteed Lockheed bonds in California. We guaranteed bonds for New York City, for Chrysler. Only when there is an outlay by the Federal Government is that subject to the balanced budget amendment. That is what the report language says. It is good language, and the amendment should be defeated.

Mr. FEINGOLD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I yield myself sufficient time.

Let us take a look at the language. It is true, as the Senator from Illinois says, "Among the Federal programs that would not be covered by Senate Joint Resolution 1 is the electric power program of the Tennessee Valley Authority."

But that is all that is mentioned. It is a real valuable thing for a program to be the only program out of the entire U.S. budget that gets exempted specifically. In other words, all the others will have to argue somehow that they are within that language. Maybe they will have to go to court, if they are allowed to go to court. We are not even sure about that.

One program gets named, one program is on this pedestal and even though the Senator from Illinois, Mr. President, intends that others be mentioned, they ought to be mentioned. If we have to do that, let us have the committee issue a new report and list all the programs that are exempt. I am sure it would be as comfortable to the people who support those programs as this language is comforting to those who support the TVA. This is about the sweetest deal you can get, a constitutional exemption for your program while everyone else has to get into the field and has to fight each other for scarce Federal dollars.

Mr. President, I cannot accept this argument of the Senator from Illinois. If it was intended the other programs be mentioned, they should have been mentioned. Only one is mentioned, and that program should not get that kind of special treatment.

I yield the floor and reserve my time.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I yield the final time I have to the distinguished member of the Judiciary Committee, Senator HEFLIN, from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 2 minutes, 22 seconds.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, as I mentioned before in my opening argument, I reiterate it because it has not been answered: Really, the purpose of this is to protect the taxpayers. It is to say, and to have in report language—it is not in the language of the constitutional amendment, but in the report language—its purpose is to protect the taxpayers from where the taxpayers might have to pay or subsidize the power program of the Tennessee Valley Authority. It is put there with the idea of protecting the taxpayers, and that is what it has been.

The TVA program has been that the entire power program shall not be subject to appropriations and it is not subject to other types of revenues that come in. The revenues that operate in regard to this are strictly the ratepayers'. They get a bill. The ratepayers get a bill just like every other utility user gets a bill, and they pay it every month. Those revenues do not go into the Treasury of the United States. It is there for the protection of the taxpayers. It is report language and it is different from the language that is in the constitutional amendment. It is not mentioned in there. It is just report language to give some guidance, to show that the taxpayers are not to have to pay in regard to the rates of the utility users.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

MOTION TO RECONSIDER—ROLL CALL VOTE 72

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the last vote.

Mr. CRAIG. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 17 seconds remaining. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. I yield the remainder of the time.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry; is there any time remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin controls 3 minutes and 53 seconds.

The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, just to conclude, this is really a very mild thing to ask. I am just asking that this process be a little bit honest and that we not mention in the committee report that will be used to interpret the constitutional amendment one program. There are many quasi-public agencies. This notion that the TVA is a self-supporting program is just an argument—debatable. It is nothing better than that. The CBO says it is not.

We are going to accept here as a part of the constitutional process we are engaged in this absurd notion that simply because an argument is made by the supporters of the program, it is not going to be on the table? I cannot accept that.

I suggest again, if we are going to go forward with this constitutional pork, it will become the symbol of the lack of seriousness of the balanced budget amendment, the ultimate proof that, when given an opportunity, special interests will be protected even with a balanced budget amendment, the principle being enshrined in the United States Constitution.

I implore my colleague, take a minute or two to strike this language. It has no other consequence. I implore you to get this out of there so the process of balancing the budget can be an honest one, when we finally get to it.

Mr. President, I yield the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, as I understand it, we will be unable to find any additional amendments to be offered this evening. The Senator from West Virginia plans to lay down an amendment, as I understand it, tomorrow morning?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. DOLE. I would like to have another amendment or two tonight. I cannot force Members to offer amendments, so this will be the last vote of the day.

I am not certain how long we will be in session tomorrow, but probably most of the day. I am still prepared, as I have indicated before, if we can get some agreement to bring this to a conclusion, to go out Friday and all next week. We await some response from the Democratic leader, Senator DASCHLE.

So we are prepared to entertain an agreement that might bring this to a conclusion. There will be a cloture vote tomorrow. I will file two cloture motions tonight, so there will be two cloture votes when we return on next Wednesday. So Members will know that there will be votes on Wednesday—probably a goodly number of votes Wednesday.

It is my understanding there are 30-some amendments filed at the desk. I do not know how many of those Members intend to call up. I thought the other day I was informed it would only be three major amendments. Then we were told maybe it will be 8 or 10. Now we are told it is 36. That would mean we have still a long, long time on this balanced budget amendment.

I understand how important it is. I understand you do not amend the Constitution lightly. I think we have now exceeded by a couple of days the longest time we have spent on this issue. I think we passed the balanced budget amendment—in the 97th Congress we passed a balanced budget amendment after 11 days of floor action. There were 31 amendments offered. The resolution passed the Senate by a vote of 69 to 31.

We have not been able to repeat that performance so far on the number of days or the number of amendments. But, hopefully, on the number of votes. And we would settle for that.

This will be the last vote today.

Mr. President, I move to table the motion.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question occurs on the motion to lay on the table the motion offered by the Senator from Wisconsin. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk called the roll.

Mr. LOTT. I announce that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GREGG], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS], and the Senator from Kansas [Mrs. KASSEBAUM] are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS] would vote "yea."

Mr. FORD. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUE], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], and the Senator from Maryland [Ms. MIKULSKI], are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRIST). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 61, nays 33, as follows:

NOT VOTING—6

Gregg	Inouye	Kennedy
Helms	Kassebaum	Mikulski

So the motion to lay on the table the motion was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. FORD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. President, I rise today to speak on behalf of future generations. Our national deficit for fiscal year 1994 stood at $203 billion. Gross interest on the national debt is now the second largest expenditure in the entire budget—higher than Defense spending. The Federal Government, this year alone, will spend an estimated $295 billion in interest on the national debt, which is a 400-percent increase since 1980 and an amount equal to 57 percent of all personal income taxes collected. Our total accumulated Federal debt stands at $4.65 trillion—$18,000 for every man, woman, and child in America. Like every family and business in America, when the Government borrows money it must pay interest on its debts. Given these grim statistics, I believe that we in Congress must amend the Constitution of the United States and pass the balanced budget amendment.

Dr. Robert Reischauer, Director of the Congressional Budget Office, in his cost estimate to the Committee on the Judiciary stated:

Over the entire 1996-2002 period, the savings in CBO's illustrative path that result directly from policy changes would total more than $1 trillion—in relation to a baseline that includes an inflation adjustment for discretionary spending after 1998.

Amending the Constitution, which represents the very core of American life, a governing principle born of a revolutionary war, withstanding a civil war, two world wars, the war for equality throughout the Nation and endless conflicts, both social and global, is not something to be taken lightly. That said—I believe our current conflict to conquer and eliminate our public debt—a war that we fight against ourselves here in Congress—calls for drastic measures, a call to arms, which the budget amendment answers.

The amendment, House Joint Resolution 1, will set forth in the Nation's governing document the basic principle that the Federal Government must not spend beyond its means.

As Thomas Jefferson said:

We should consider ourselves unauthorized to saddle posterity with our debts, and morally bound to pay them ourselves.

These words ring clear today. The American taxpayer will no longer, nor should they, allow us in Washington to continually spend their money with little or no accountability. We in Congress must put political expediency aside—reduce the deficit—remembering that we are to serve the American taxpayer and not vice versa.

Our Founding Fathers knew of the danger of leveraging current political aspiration on the backs of future generations. Congress remains incapable of looking toward the future—we are an entity embedded in the present, unable to look beyond the next election cycle.

James Madison wrote in Federalist Paper No 51:

Government is the greatest of all reflections on human nature. If men were angels, no government would be necessary. If angels were to govern man, neither external nor internal controls on government would be necessary.

Well Mr. President, here in Washington there are few, if any, angels cohabiting among us. Accordingly, we do require a control mechanism to reduce our current fiscal dilemma—a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution. This amendment will help restore two important elements left unaddressed by the Constitution: limited government and an accountable deliberative legislative body, both of which are vital to a free America. All too often this legislative body has used the power of the purse for political expediency rather than what is in the best interest of the American people.

Reducing spending in order to balance the Federal budget is something that will require tough decisions, the kind of decisions we in Washington rarely have the courage to own up to and all too often pass on to future generations.

My record with regard to reducing the size and scope of the Federal Government by eliminating excessive spending is clear. I have been cited by numerous grassroots groups like the Concord Coalition, the National Taxpayer's Union, as both a taxpayers' friend and as one of Congress' most frugal Members. I believe the only way to eliminate our Federal deficit is to deal with runaway spending, much like families in New Hampshire deal with life's everyday expenses. If a family is unable to pay for a certain expense, the prudent thing to do would be to do without; not here in Washington where no one and nothing goes without, whether it is funding for Medicare, or to conduct another study to eliminate the screw worm.

The American people are well versed in the way Washington operates—they are not dumb. These past November elections made a strong statement about change; a statement heard loud and clear throughout the hallowed Halls of Congress; one that demands we revert from our past, outdated social policies that govern the Nation and jeopardize the very being of the next generation. The people are screaming, "we have heard enough from you in Washington, now it's your turn to hear from us."

Mr. FORD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky, Mr. FORD, is recognized.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that following the cloture vote on tomorrow, the Senator from West Virginia, Mr. BYRD, be recognized to make a statement and lay down an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FORD. I thank the Chair and I thank the majority leader.

CLOTURE MOTION

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send a cloture motion to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The cloture motion having been presented under rule XXII, the Chair directs the clerk to read the motion.

CLOTURE MOTION

We the undersigned Senators in accordance with the provisions of Rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate do hereby move to bring to a close debate on House Joint Resolution 1, the constitutional balanced budget amendment:

CLOTURE MOTION

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send a second cloture motion to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The cloture motion having been presented under rule XXII, the Chair directs the clerk to read the motion.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, do hereby move to bring to a close debate on House Joint Resolution 1, the constitutional balanced budget amendment:

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there now be a period for the transaction of morning business, not to extend beyond the hour of 9:30 p.m., with Senators permitted to speak for up to 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROFESSIONAL GOLF ASSOCIATION TOUR AND POSSIBLE FTC COMPLAINT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I understand that the Federal Trade Commission is considering filing a complaint challenging the PGA Tour's conflicting event and media rights rules as unfair competition.

I question whether the public interest would be served by eliminating the foundation for the success of the tour, which has worked well for a very long time and enjoys the support of players, fans, and sponsors. I understand that the PGA tour has generated more charitable contributions from its events than all other sports combined. I am concerned that forcing the tour to alter its rules may put these charitable activities at risk.

Mr. President, I have today sent a letter to Federal Trade Commissioner Starek outlining my concerns. I ask unanimous consent that this be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,

Washington, DC, February 15, 1995.

Hon. ROSCOE B. STAREK, III,

Commissioner, Federal Trade Commission,
Washington, DC.

DEAR COMMISSIONER STAREK: I understand your staff in the Bureau of Competition, after a four and one-half year investigation of PGA TOUR, has recently recommended to the Commission that a complaint be issued challenging the PGA TOUR's conflicting event and media rights rules as unfair methods of competition.

I am familiar with the PGA TOUR's operations and its record of growth, integrity and contributions to charity. PGA TOUR has been able to generate more charitable contributions from its events than all other professional sports combined. More than $30 million in charitable donations were generated through PGA TOUR events in 1994 alone. I am concerned that forcing the PGA TOUR to alter its rules may put these charitable activities at risk.

Through years of experience, the players have learned that the way to accomplish their objectives was to develop rules which include the players' commitment to support their own events. Only through this commitment, as expressed in the conflicting event and media rules, will the sponsors and broadcasters who provide the financial support for PGA TOUR events risk investment in PGA TOUR tournaments. It is because of the sponsors' and broadcasters' financial support that the players, through PGA TOUR, are able to produce a ten-month season of weekly tournaments with significant prize money for not only the world's top money winners, but also young aspiring players and players past their prime. Thus, it appears to be clear that both the purpose and effect of the rules in question are to increase output and competition, not to limit competition unfairly.

As you know, our antitrust laws do not prohibit reasonable limitations among members of a league or organization of competitors where the limitations are required to increase output and competition. It is my understanding that the PGA TOUR was investigated by the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice in the late 1970's and no action was taken to challenge or change either these rules or other conduct of the PGA TOUR.

I appreciate your consideration of these concerns.

Sincerely,

BOB DOLE,
Republican Leader.

A DIAMOND ANNIVERSARY

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, one of the vital crusades in American history was the women's suffrage movement—a giant step that, in extending voting power to American women, vitalized our entire democracy as few changes in our political system have.

A complement to the extension of voting rights to women was the founding, seventy-five years ago, of the League of Women Voters of the United States, a non-partisan organization of more than 1,100 chapters and in excess of 150,000 members and supporters nationwide. In my own State, West Virginians can be particularly proud that the current National President of the League of Women Voters of the United States is Mrs. Becky Cain, St. Albans, West Virginia. She is a woman who has served with great distinction during her two-year term.

As I suggested, today marks the seventy-fifth anniversary of the League—its "Diamond" Anniversary, as it were. Certainly, throughout those seventy-five years, the League of Women Voters has more than proved and repudiated its value to our democratic way of life in its unflagging efforts to educate voters, to encourage the exercise of our precious franchise, to elevate political debate, and to urge improved quality among the men and women who seek public office.

Mr. President, as we witness the birth pangs of democratic practice around the world—as we observe nations and groups of people within nations struggling to learn and to revere democratic institutions, and to respect honest differences of opinion within their electorates—we can be thankful that America has come so far in little more than two centuries in balancing and preserving those instruments of political and electoral life that have provided us with a long heritage of the peaceful transfer of political power and mutual respect among people with differing political values. In no small part, we owe to the League of Women Voters a large measure of our gratitude for enshrining that tradition of civility in our national electoral life. I believe that for that legacy of peaceful change and spirited debate in lieu of armed conflict, we stand indebted to efforts of groups such as the League of Women Voters—groups devoted to the peaceful and serious practice of democracy.

Mr. President, I salute the League of Women Voters, and I know that I speak for all of our colleagues on the League's anniversary in expressing my appreciation to the League for its record of the enhancement and celebration of our Constitutional rights, privileges, and ordinances.

TRIBUTE TO THE HON. CAL ANDERSON

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to a former colleague, a great legislator and a courageous and loyal friend, Washington State Senator Cal Anderson.

I worked with Cal Anderson when I served in the Washington State Senate. He is known throughout my home State as an outstanding legislator. His reputation is one of hard work, of holding true to his beliefs but compromising for the greater good, and of reaching conclusions that work for everyone. Cal is a true believer, as I am, in good government.

I was honored to work with him on open record policies in my home State. I was astounded by his ability to be inclusive, to bring everyone into the debate. Cal made sure that our bill was not just legislation that was good to look at but legislation that was good for people.

Cal is a Vietnam veteran. He earned two Bronze Stars and four Army Commendation medals for meritorious service in that conflict. He is courageous, Mr. President, and he is honest. He has touched so many lives across this country—his very presence in our State legislature shows young people that no matter who they are or where they come from, everybody has a great deal to offer their communities and our country. His very presence tells us that America will be great when we let everybody participate and be an equal voice in our national dialog.

Cal Anderson is one of the highest ranking openly gay elected officials in this country. He continues to break down stereotypes and ignorance. And, he is a champion and a role model for all people. Nobody in the State legislature thought of Cal as the "gay legislator"; we thought of him as an extraordinary man who just happened to be gay.

And, this week, Mr. President, with his characteristic honesty and integrity, Cal Anderson told us he has AIDS. He has been diagnosed with non-Hodgkins lymphoma and is undergoing chemotherapy. I called him today, and was not surprised to find him in his senate office in Olympia. He has a lot of work to do, and is determined to get it done.

Mr. President, Cal Anderson's honesty should inspire all of us who shape public policy to take this epidemic seriously. In my own State, more than 5,500 men, women, and children have been diagnosed with AIDS. More than 1,100 cases have been reported over the previous year. Cases are growing in rural areas, and cases are growing among women.

A few weeks ago, we learned the sad news that AIDS is now the leading cause of death of Americans between the ages of 25 and 44. I fear that everyone in America will soon know someone who is infected with HIV. My friends and neighbors in Washington do now: his name is Senator Cal Anderson.

Mr. President, let me conclude by thanking Cal for everything he does for my home State, and by wishing him and his partner, Eric, only the best with his therapy and in the future.

MINIMUM WAGE INCREASE

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I support raising the minimum wage. It helps working Americans improve their standard of living. It moves in the direction of self-sufficiency and away from welfare. It gives help to those who practice self-help.

First, raising the minimum wage will certainly help increase working Americans' standard of living. In this country, a full-time job should not mean full-time poverty. The typical American family is living on less than it did 15 years ago. The current minimum wage of $4.25 an hour for a full-time year-round worker equals only $8,500 per year. This minimum wage is not a living wage.

Second, increasing the minimum wage helps people move toward self-sufficiency and away from welfare. I know that raising the minimum wage 90 cents is not enough to lift a family above the poverty level. But, if a 90 cent increase to $5.15 an hour is the best we can get right now, then we will take it.

Finally, raising the minimum wage will help those who practice self-help. Two-thirds of minimum wage workers are adults over the age of 21. They are reliable, dedicated employees who want a chance to move up in society, or just to get back on their feet.

They believe, as we all do, in the satisfaction that comes from hard work. They do not apologize for not making a lot of money and they are not looking for public hand-outs, but they certainly deserve a decent wage for honest work.

Mr. President, the minimum wage is worth less than it used to be. Because of inflation, the value of the minimum wage has fallen by nearly 50 cents since 1991, and is now 27 percent lower than it was in 1979.

I know in the coming weeks we will see many statistics, graphs, and figures from supporters and opponents of raising the minimum wage. But in this debate, I do not want my colleagues to lose sight of the fact that these statistics represent people, real people who go to work every day so they can pay their bills, and have a decent place to live.

These are real people, who live in Baltimore, Annapolis, Hagerstown, and other American cities who must choose between clothing or food for their kids, between medical care or heat.

A low minimum wage contributes to the notion of "working poor". By raising the minimum wage, we give people a chance to help themselves, to do better for themselves and their families, and to achieve the American dream.

That is why I support this legislation to help make work pay.

THE NATIONAL SECURITY REORGANIZATION ACT

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, every Member of the Senate is concerned about the national security of our country. I know each of my colleagues give serious thought and consideration to the details of how best to provide for our national defense and the strength and well-being of our Armed Forces.

And for that reason call to the attention of my colleagues a recent article by the Secretaries of State and Defense, entitled "Foreign Policy, Hamstrung," which appeared in the February 13 edition of the New York Times. Secretary Warren Christopher and Secretary William Perry have joined together to present what I believe is a most cogent and informative analysis of the National Security Revitalization Act, legislation which the other body is considering today and tomorrow.

Secretaries Christopher and Perry point out that this act which is part of the so-called Contract With America that the Republican leadership of the House is rushing to pass, is in its current form, a deeply flawed piece of legislation. It is their considered opinion that the measure would undermine any President's ability to safeguard our national security and to effectively exercise his or her constitutional role of commanding our Armed Forces.

I believe we should give serious consideration to the concerned views expressed by these two able Cabinet officers, who are directly responsible for overseeing the day-to-day work of guiding our Nation's foreign and defense policies.

They believe that the act's first major flaw is that it would return the United States to a crash-schedule deployment of a costly national missile defense system designed to protect against a nonexistent credible threat to our national security. They correctly point out that such an unwarranted and expensive system would not only divert billions of scarce defense dollars from other more urgent defense needs, such as the readiness and well-being of the men and women of our Armed Forces, but that the unnecessary expenditure of funds on continental defense against a nonexistent ballistic missile threat would also be detrimental to the ongoing development of an effective theater defense system.

It is indeed ironic that while some on the other side of the aisle, both here and in the House, loudly proclaim the need for increased spending on a multibillion-dollar star wars program to defend against a theoretical intercontinental ballistic missile attack, they are, at the same time, unwilling to support the necessary funding for the Nunn-Lugar program to reduce the threat of nuclear attack by working cooperatively with Russia to dismantle the missiles and nuclear warheads which were once aimed at our cities.

Secretaries Christopher and Perry also point out that the proposed act unilaterally designates certain Eastern European states for NATO membership without consideration of the concerns and desires of other NATO members, or the readiness of the designated states to assume the military and political obligations inherent in NATO membership.

Furthermore, they contend that, by its restrictive language this act would effectively abrogate our U.N. treaty obligations to pay our share of U.N. peacekeeping operations. The end result of such short-sighted restrictive action would be the elimination of the availability to the United States of U.N. burden-sharing resources.

We in the Congress must be extraordinarily careful not to permit overzealous partisanship to encourage the hurried enactment of legislation which restricts the ability of this, or any future President of the United States, to carry out his fundamental constitutional duty to protect the national security of our Nation.

I ask unanimous consent that the article by Secretary Christopher and Secretary Perry be printed in the RECORD, and I commend it to my colleagues' attention.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Feb. 13, 1995]

FOREIGN POLICY, HAMSTRUNG

(By Warren Christopher and William J. Perry)

This week Congress is to consider legislation that would undermine this and every future President's ability to safeguard America's security and to command our armed forces. The measure is deeply flawed. It is called the National Security Revitalization Act, but if adopted it would endanger national security.

We are committed to working with Congress in a bipartisan fashion. But if this measure is passed in its current form, we have told the President we will recommend that he veto it.

The bill's first flaw is that it would return the United States to a crash-schedule deployment of a national missile defense, designed to protect the U.S. from missile attacks. That deployment is not justified by any existing threat to our nation's security, and it would divert billions of scarce defense dollars and other resources from more pressing needs, particularly in the area of theater missile defenses.

We are building effective theater defense systems; they will protect U.S. forces abroad, and the ports and airfields they use, from Scud-like missiles in the hands of rogue states like North Korea, Iraq and Iran. The continental U.S. does not now face a ballistic missile attack from these states. But we are not complacent. We are conducting a broad research and development program that will, in a few years, be able to deploy a national missile defense system whenever a threat emerges.

Second, the bill unilaterally and prematurely designates certain European states for NATO membership. NATO should and will expand. NATO expansion will strengthen stability in Europe for members and nonmembers alike. But new members must be ready to undertake the obligations of membership, just as we and our allies must be ready to extend our solemn commitments to them. Our present steady and deliberate approach to NATO expansion is intended to insure that each potential member is judged individually, according to its capacity to contribute to NATO's goals.

That approach gives every new European democracy a strong incentive to consolidate reform. But if we arbitrarily lock in advantages now for some countries, we risk discouraging reforms in countries not named and fostering complacency to countries that are. Indeed, the effect of the measure before Congress could be instability in the very region whose security we seek to bolster.

Third, the bill would effectively abrogate our treaty obligation to pay our share of the cost of U.N. peacekeeping operations that we have supported in the Security Council. The bill would require us to reduce our peacekeeping dues dollar for dollar by the cost of operations we conduct voluntarily in support of U.S. interests. These operations deter aggressors, isolate parish states and support humanitarian relief in places like Bosnia and Iraq.

If we deduct the cost of our voluntary actions against our U.N. dues, it would cancel our entire peacekeeping payment. Other nations—Japan and our NATO allies—would surely follow, and U.N. peacekeeping would end. Under current circumstances, it would end U.N. peacekeeping overnight.

That would eliminate peacekeepers already stationed at important flash points like the Golan Heights on the Israel-Syria border, where U.N. forces support progress in the Middle East peace process. It would pull U.N. forces from the Iraq-Kuwait border, from Cyprus and from the former Yugoslav republic of Macedonia. In short, this bill would eliminate an effective tool for burden sharing that every President from Harry Truman to George Bush has used to advance American interests. It would leave the President with an unacceptable option whenever an emergency arose: act alone or do nothing.

The measure would also impose unnecessary, unsound and unconstitutional restrictions on the President's authority to place our troops under the operational control of another country—even a NATO ally—for U.N. operations. Our forces always remain under the command authority of the President, and we already apply the most rigorous standards when we pass even the most limited responsibility to a competent foreign commander. But the Commander-in-Chief must retain the flexibility to place troops temporarily under the operational control of officers of another nation when it serves our interests, as we did so effectively in Operation Desert Storm and in most other conflicts since the Revolution. By restricting that flexibility, the bill would undercut our ability to get the international community to respond to threats.

Effective American leadership abroad requires that we back our diplomacy with the credible threat of forces. When our vital interests are at stake, we must be prepared to act alone. And in fact, our willingness to do so is often the key to effective joint action. By mobilizing the support of other nations and leveraging our resources through alliances and institutions, we can achieve important objectives without asking American soldiers to bear all the risks, or American taxpayers to pay all the bills. That is a sensible bargain the American people support.

This Administration has worked hard to improve our consultation with the Congress on every issue raised by the National Security

Revitalization Act. But in each case, what is at stake is fundamental: the authority of our President to protect the national security and to use every effective option to advance the interests of the U.S. In its present form, the bill unwisely and unconstitutionally deprives the President of the flexibility he needs to make the right choices for our nation's security.

WAS CONGRESS IRRESPONSIBLE? THE VOTERS HAVE SAID YES!

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, anyone even remotely familiar with the U.S. Constitution knows that no President can spend a dime of Federal tax money that has not first been authorized and appropriated by Congress—both the House of Representatives and the U.S. Senate.

So when you hear a politician or an editor or a commentator declare that "Reagan ran up the Federal debt" or that "Bush ran it up," bear in mind that the Founding Fathers made it very clear that it is the constitutional duty of Congress to control Federal spending.

The fiscal irresponsibility of Congress has created a Federal debt which stood at $4,807,066,615,385.66 as of the close of business Tuesday, February 14. Averaged out, every man, woman, and child in America owes a share of this massive debt, and that per capita share is $18,247.71.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

By Ms. SNOWE (for herself, Mr. COHEN, Mr. JEFFORDS, and Mr. LEAHY):

S. 419. A bill to grant the consent of Congress to the Texas Low-Level Radioactive Waste Disposal Compact; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Ms. SNOWE:

S. 420. A bill to establish limitations on the use of funds for United Nations peacekeeping activities; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. FORD:

S. 421. A bill to extend the deadline under the Federal Power Act applicable to the construction of a hydroelectric project in Kentucky, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

By Mr. McCONNELL (for himself, Mr. COVERDELL, and Mr. D'AMATO):

S. 422. A bill to authorize the appropriations for international economic and security assistance; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. COHEN:

S. 423. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide improved access to quality long-term care services, to create incentives for greater private sector participation and personal responsibility in financing such services, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. D'AMATO:

S. 424. A bill to provide for adherence with MacBride Principles by United States persons doing business in Northern Ireland; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. ROCKEFELLER (for himself, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. CAMPBELL, Mr. DORGAN, and Mr. WELLSTONE):

S. 425. A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to require the establishment in the Department of Veterans Affairs of mental illness research, education, and clinical centers, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

By Mr. SARBANES (for himself and Mr. WARNER):

S. 426. A bill to authorize the Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity to establish a memorial to Martin Luther King, Jr., in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

SUBMISSION OF CONCURRENT AND SENATE RESOLUTIONS

The following concurrent resolutions and Senate resolutions were read, and referred (or acted upon), as indicated:

By Ms. SNOWE:

S. Con. Res. 7. A concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that the President should not have granted diplomatic recognition to the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. McCONNELL (for himself, Mr. COVERDELL, and Mr. D'AMATO):

S. 422. A bill to authorize the appropriations for international economic and security assistance; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

FOREIGN AID REFORM LEGISLATION

• Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, it seems to me there are two good reasons for a complete overhaul of foreign aid: the world has changed and Congress has changed. The cold war is over replaced by a new, ambitious Russia, a host of violent smaller regimes, ethnic tensions, nuclear concerns, and massive refugee movements affecting even our own borders.

On the bright side, there are former communist nations actively seeking U.S. support, the flourishing of free enterprise and democracy, giant leaps in free trade and real prospects for peace in some of the most war-torn parts of the world.

Since the world has changed so dramatically, our tools of foreign policy must change with it—and one of the key tools is foreign aid.

That is the impetus for the proposal I am introducing today.

Our ability to effectively target foreign aid is crippled in large part by the outmoded and unduly complicated Foreign Assistance Act of 1961.

The 300-plus pages of this document contain 33 conflicting goals, 75 questionable priorities, which effectively tyrannize the 10,000 AID employees who carry out 1,700 projects in 89 countries.

There is no real sense of coherence, strategy, or focus to the law or our aid program. It may seem reasonable to direct the President to support a rural development program, but should we be requiring him to protect "community woodlots"? Maybe the law should define an "increase in foreign crop productivity" as an American national priority, but should we go so far as requiring the President to "strengthen foreign systems to deliver fertilizer to farmers?" Creating national standards for nutrition is one thing, but should the law direct U.S. assistance support a "strategy for breast-feeding"?

While many of the goals enshrined in law may be admirable, I question whether they are American national priorities. My bill presents three clear, supportable goals: first, foreign aid must protect American security; second, foreign aid must promote American economic interests and finally, foreign aid must preserve political and regional stability.

Together with these broad goals, I want to adopt specific conditions and performance criteria. If the conditions can't be met, the program should not be funded. Throughout my tenure on the Foreign Relations Committee and the Foreign Operations Subcommittee, I can't think of a single country that has graduated from U.S. assistance.

This is partly due to the fact that we send money to countries where government policies actually defeat the prospects for real economic growth. It's in our interests to facilitate the transition to free markets, not subsidize failures.

So, as a beginning point, this bill radically changes our approach to bilateral economic aid. In the past development assistance has focused on relieving the symptoms of poverty and despair. No doubt there are people and communities where the quality of life has improved somewhat. But by any standard, the fact is most poor countries are still poor and that is largely because of government practices and policies.

This bill starts from scratch. Development assistance, economic support funds and related programs are eliminated and instead I have established a new, smaller bilateral economic aid account. Funds can only be spent in countries committed to the road to free-market reform.

Aid will flow if a government encourages free trade and investment, protects private property, ownership and interests, limits state control of financial institutions, production and manufacturing and restricts interference in establishing wages and prices.

Several weeks ago at the Miami summit we heard 33 nations extol the merits of trade not aid. Chile's impressive record may have had a great deal to do with this hemispheric shift in emphasis.

In 1970, it had the twin distinction of being the world's largest recipient of U.S. aid per capita and being an economic basket case. Setting aside wrenching internal political events, once cut loose from aid dependency, Chile implemented a comprehensive free-market system, turned an economie corner and the rest, as they say, is history. The success of these reforms is evident in the fact that Chile's economic strength has opened the door to early membership in NAFTA.

Chile offers a good lesson in why foreign aid fails. If countries resist market reforms no amount of aid will improve economic or political conditions.

Absent meaningful reforms, foreign aid, like crack for an addict, only fuels failure.

The only way to break the devastating cycle of dependency is to end foreign aid entitlement programs, to change our economic aid agenda.

We should be contributing to a cure, supporting and energizing economic growth and opportunity, not just offering temporary relief from symptoms.

Why? Well setting aside altruistic motives, it is in our economic interests to encourage countries to embrace free-market principles. As we turn the corner on this century, it is clear our own economic health and progress, improving and expanding American job opportunities are closely tied to export opportunities in developing countries.

This mutually enriching scenario depends upon changing how we administer foreign aid—aid must become performance based.

Beyond defining broad goals and performance based economic aid strategy, the bill also funds specific national priorities. As drafted, the bill creates two separate titles—one for Europe and the NIS and the other for the Middle East.

There is little question in my mind that the security interests of our Nation are directly affected by stability in the Middle East and Europe. In the former, the administration has actively pursued a comprehensive peace agreement. Whether or not negotiations produce sound, durable agreements, the United States has ongoing interests driven by a number of issues including our close alliance with Israel, the important relationship with Egypt, as well as concerns about political extremism, energy security and terrorism.

I believe our assistance supports vital American interests in the region and should be sustained.

Turning to the second region where I think we have vital interest, the bill provides $350 million for Eastern Europe and the Baltics and $750 million for assistance to the New Independent States of the former Soviet Union. Within the NIS account, the bill earmarks funds for Ukraine, Armenia, and Georgia.

I also toughen conditions on Russian aid. No funds can be provided if there is any evidence the government is directing or supporting the violation of another nation's territory or sovereignty.

Beyond the NIS, many of my colleagues share a concern about expanding the sphere of NATO's stabilizing influence. This bill builds on this interest and targets excess defense articles and IMET for the Baltic nations and the Visegrad group.

In addition, as an alternative to Russia's ambition to exercise a unilateral security role in the region, I earmark money for a training and support of a joint peacekeeping battalion for the Baltics. This was a program the President announced in Riga this summer and then immediately told Congress, he was diverting the funding to Haiti. This reversal was a serious mistake which the bill corrects.

This bill not only spells out what needs to be done, but which agency should do it.

There are two major structural changes: first, trade and export promotion efforts are consolidated. The Trade Development Agency and the Overseas Private Investment Corporation are merged and the funding level is boosted.

One clear way to strengthen popular support for foreign aid is to make it more effectively serve American business interests—as I mentioned, American jobs, exports, and income depend on it.

Second, the bill abolishes AID and consolidates the agency's functions under the Secretary of State. This recommendation reflects my view that U.S. foreign aid must better serve U.S. foreign policy interests. The connection between U.S. aid and U.S. interests has been lost with agencies acting wholly independent of our collective interests and common good.

And, there is no more compelling illustration of the problem than the difficulties which plague the NIS program. Here you have the first major initiative since the Marshall plan. It enjoys the President's personal attention and bipartisan support in Congress—if anything was designed to work it should have been our NIS effort.

Instead, bureaucratic redundancy has allowed AID to blame the State Department, State to blame AID—and when all else fails, both blame the host government for not asking for a program in the first place.

But for a combination of these excuses, we could have had an aggressive effort underway 2 years ago—helping lay a foundation for a legal and commercial code protecting citizens and property throughout the NIS.

Instead, Judge Freeh has been put in the unfortunate position of playing catch-up with an international Mafia capable of undermining the successful transition to free markets throughout the region, not to mention engaging in nuclear terrorism against the United States.

Let me add one more point on the need to reorganize the foreign policy bureaucracy.

I have only addressed issues that fall directly within the jurisdiction of the Foreign Operations Subcommittee. Given the opportunity, I would also recommend consolidating USIA activities under the State Department and abolish ACDA altogether.

It makes no sense not to have the agency responsible for communicating U.S. interests separate and apart from the agency it serves. The State Department and USIA are integrated overseas and should be here at home. As for ACDA, it is completely unclear what they do that couldn't be done by the Undersecretary for International Security Affairs. Since these agencies are beyond the jurisdiction of my subcommittee, I will leave their reorganization and funding to the good judgment of Senator HELMS and Senator GRAMM.

This bill is a new lease on life for American assistance programs. Although drafted here in Congress, I should point out that I worked hard to assure that we do not micromanage the process.

Presidential flexibility is clearly preserved in general, by broadening goals and specifically by maintaining various waiver and transfer authorities, although I have restructured them somewhat to address a number of problems which have developed in the past several years.

Recently, the administration has increased its use of waivers to move forward with programs which I think everyone would agree are controversial. The fact that waivers have been so frequently invoked at the last possible minute, suggest one of two things: either the administration is incapable of even short-term planning or they are intentionally undermining the congressional notification and consultation process.

I am not prepared to pass judgment at this stage, but let me point out that waiver authorities included in this bill in sections 208, 701, and 703 must now either meet a national security interests test or Congress must be notified in advance of the use of the waiver.

Let me conclude by summing up where my bill takes foreign aid: First, I clearly define American interests; second, I set standards for performance; third, I fund American priorities in the Middle East and Europe and, fourth, I reorganize the bureaucracy so that foreign aid better serves our foreign interests.

If we don't produce real changes in how we administer foreign aid—soon—we will end up with no foreign aid at all.

In 1961, when he transmitted the Foreign Assistance Act to the Hill, President John Kennedy said:

No objective supporter of foreign aid can be satisfied with the existing program—actually a multiplicity of programs. Bureaucratically fragmented, awkward and slow, its administration is diffused over a haphazard and irrational structure covering at least four departments and several agencies. The program is based on a series of legislative measures and administrative procedures conceived at different times for different purposes, many of them obsolete, inconsistent and unduly rigid and thus unsuited for our present needs and purposes. Its weaknesses have begun to undermine our confidence in our effort both here and abroad.

Forty-four years later, President Kennedy's words couldn't be more accurate.

Let me conclude by expressing my appreciation to Senator COVERDELL and Senator D'AMATO who have joined in cosponsoring this measure. When I released this bill in December, Senator COVERDELL was quick to point out many features which he supported and one which caused him serious concern. It is in deference to his considerable expertise and strong views that I revised my original draft and removed the Peace Corps from my reorganization plan.

I look forward to working with Senator COVERDELL and his colleagues on the Foreign Relations Committee to reform the foreign aid and policy process. Let me pay special recognition to the committee chairman, Senator HELMS, whose leadership is crucial to changing the way this country carries out both its foreign policy and foreign aid agenda. It is my hope that working together in the authorization and appropriations process we can take advantage of a unique moment in history and complete a comprehensive reorganization of the foreign policy bureaucracy.

• Mr. COVERDELL. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my friend from Kentucky, Senator MCCONNELL, in introducing legislation to overhaul our current foreign aid program. I commend him on his efforts and his leadership in this matter, and look forward to working with him and others to forge a new foreign assistance framework for the 21st century.

That foreign aid reform is needed is clear. Amazingly, after 32 years, the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 remains the basic statute for our foreign aid program. Since then, the world has changed in ways few could have imagined. The collapse of Soviet influence, the growing interdependence of markets and the regionalization of conflict are realities that face this Congress and the American people. Reform efforts must be as sweeping as the changes that have made them necessary.

By almost any standard by which Congress evaluates programs, foreign aid has fallen short. Despite years of U.S. assistance, few countries have been able to make the transition from poor to developed. Examples of countries graduating from U.S. assistance to self-sufficiency are few and far between. While many nations have made serious efforts to help themselves, U.S. assistance is all too often a disincentive to economic reform and real growth. As a result, most Americans hold foreign aid in contempt. Their frustration is understandable, but it must be changed if we are to remain world leaders.

The world has changed dramatically, demanding a new foreign aid apparatus to address the new international environment. In this current climate of global unpredictability an shrinking budget resources, a new approach is needed. The bill we are introducing today meets that challenge. It states very simply that foreign assistance should meet three goals: It must protect American security, promote American economic interests, and preserve political and regional stability.

To meet these goals, our bill consolidates bureaucracies originally designed to meet the cold-war reality, and streamlines them in order to meet the new security environment. It provides additional resources to assist and promote U.S. economic interests overseas, creating more jobs and opportunities here at home. Our bill addresses what I believe has been a dangerous trend toward subcontracting our unique military capability to international institutions by prohibiting voluntary peacekeeping funds from being used to support U.S. personnel under U.N. command. Finally, the legislation anchors United States strategic interest throughout the globe by maintaining our commitment to the Middle East and Europe.

Additionally, I would like to thank Senator MCCONNELL for his cooperation in another matter regarding this legislation. As originally written, this bill would have folded the U.S. Peace Corps into the State Department. As former Director of the Peace Corps, I believe such a move would ultimately have detracted from the effectiveness and efficiency of the organization. The safety of Peace Corps volunteers, in my judgment, depends on its independent status. I raised these concerns with Senator MCCONNELL, and I appreciate his willingness to remove this provision.

To close, I want to commend the Senator from Kentucky for his hard work in this matter. Prudently managed, properly targeted foreign aid serves the national interests of the United States. Our challenge is to build a system that does both. I am proud to be included in this effort, and will continue to work toward the principles and objectives outlined in this legislation. •

By Mr. COHEN:

S. 423. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide improved access to quality long-term care services, to create incentives for greater private sector participation and personal responsibility in financing such services, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

THE PRIVATE LONG-TERM CARE PROTECTION ACT OF 1995

• Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that additional material be printed in the RECORD.

SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY OF THE PRIVATE LONG-TERM CARE PROTECTION ACT OF 1995

Purpose: The Cohen legislation is designed to provide improved access to long term care services. An emphasis is placed on removing tax barriers and creating incentives which encourage individuals and their families to finance their future long term care needs.

The bill creates consumer protection standards for long term care insurance, and provides incentives and public education to encourage the purchase of private long term care insurance.

TITLE I—TAX TREATMENT OF LONG TERM CARE INSURANCE

Sec. 101. Qualified long term care services treated as medical expenses

Section 213 of the Internal Revenue Code is clarified to allow qualified individuals to deduct out-of-pocket long term care services as medical expenses subject to a floor of 7.5 percent of adjusted gross income. Qualified long term care services include necessary diagnostic, preventive, therapeutic, rehabilitative, maintenance and personal care performed in either a residential or nonresidential setting. Qualified individuals must be determined by a licensed professional or qualified community case manager to be unable to perform without substantial assistance at least two activities of daily living (ADLs) or suffer from a moderate cognitive impairment.

Sec. 102. Treatment of long term care insurance

Section 213 is also amended to allow qualified long term care insurance premiums to be deducted as medical insurance subject to the 7.5 percent-of-adjusted-gross-income-floor. Qualified long term care insurance premiums are also deductible as a business expense and employer-provided long term care insurance is excluded from an employee's taxable income. A qualified long term care insurance policy must meet the regulatory standards as established in Title II.

Sec. 103. Treatment of qualified long term care policies

Benefits paid under qualified long term care insurance policies would be excluded from income under section 105(c) "Payments Unrelated to Absence from Work", and employer-paid long term care insurance would be a tax free employee fringe benefit.

The daily benefit cap for all long term care policies would be established at $200 per day and indexed for inflation. There is no "cliff" on per diem distributions, meaning that only payments above the established cap are treated as income.

• Private long-term care insurance is exempt from the continuation of coverage requirements created by COBRA. In addition, long-term care will be considered a "qualified benefit" that may be included in a cafeteria plan.

Sec. 105. Tax treatment of accelerated death benefits under life insurance contracts

Clarifies that an accelerated death benefit received by an individual on the life of an insured who is terminally ill individual (expected to die within 12 months) is excluded from taxable income as payment by reason of death.

TITLE II. STANDARDS FOR LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE

Sec. 201. National Long-Term Care Insurance Advisory Panel

Establishes a national advisory board to help implement the long-term care consumer protection standards, and educate the public, insurers, providers and other regulatory bodies of issues related to long-term care insurance.

Sec. 202. Policy requirements

Insurers are required to meet the National Association of Insurance Commissioners (NAIC) January 1, 1993 standards for long-term insurance. Additional federal requirements include: a mandatory offer of nonforfeiture benefits, rate stabilization, minimum rate guarantees, limits and notification of increases on premiums and reimbursment mechanisms for long-term care policies. Policies that do not meet these consumer protection standards would be denied the favorable tax treatment described in Section I.

Sec. 203. Additional requirements for issuers of long-term care insurance policies

A penalty of $100 per day per policy shall be imposed on long-term care issuers failing to meet the minimum federal standards as outlined in this section. The civil monetary penalty per policy may not exceed $25,000 against carriers, and may not exceed $15,000 per policy against insurance agents.

Sec. 204. Coordination with State requirements

A State retains the authority to apply additional standards or regulations that provide greater protection of policyholders of long-term care insurance.

Sec. 205. Uniform language and definitions

The National Advisory Council shall issue standards for the use of uniform language and definitions in long-term care insurance policies, with permissible variations to take into account differences in State licensing requirements for long-term care providers.

TITLE III—INCENTIVES TO ENCOURAGE THE PURCHASE OF PRIVATE INSURANCE

Sec. 301. Public information and education programs

The Secretary of Health and Human Services is directed to establish a program designed to educate individuals on the risks of incurring catastrophic long-term care costs and the coverage options available to insure against this risk. Education should increase consumers knowledge of the lack of coverage for long-term care in Medicare, Medigap and most private health insurance policies and explain the various benefits and features of private long-term care insurance.

Sec. 302. Assets or resources disregarded under the Medicaid program

Amends Section 1917(b) of the Social Security Act, related to Medicaid Estate Recoveries, to allow for States to establish asset protection programs for individuals who purchase qualified long-term care insurance policies, without requiring States to recover such assets upon a beneficiaries death. This provision is aimed at encouraging more middle-income persons to purchase long-term care insurance by allowing individuals to keep a limited amount of assets and still qualify for Medicaid, if they have purchased long-term care insurance.

States that develop asset protection programs to encourage private insurance purchase are required to conform with uniform reporting and documentation requirements established by the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

Sec. 303. Distributions from individual retirement accounts for the purchase of long-term care insurance coverage

Individuals above 59½ are allowed tax-free distributions from an IRA or an individual retirement annuity for the purchase of a long-term policy. This provision also allows individuals below the age of 59½ to withdraw from their individual retirement account without penalty in order to purchase a qualified long-term care plan. Individuals who obtain tax-free distributions from their IRA or individual retirement annuity would be restricted from deducting their long-term care insurance premium as a medical expense under Title I of this act. •

By Mr. D'AMATO:

S. 424. A bill to provide for adherence with MacBride Principles by United States persons doing business in Northern Ireland; to the Committee on Finance.

THE NORTHERN IRELAND FAIR EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES ACT

• Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to offer the Northern Ireland Fair Employment Practices Act. This legislation seeks to deter efforts to use the work place as an arena of discrimination in Northern Ireland. I am pleased that my colleague from New York, Representative BEN GILMAN, chairman of the House International Affairs Committee has introduced this bill, H.R. 470, in the House.

The Northern Ireland Fair Employment Practices Act incorporates the MacBride Principles, which are modeled after the famous Sullivan Principles, one of the initial efforts to apply United States pressure to change the system of apartheid in South Africa. The MacBride Principles are named in honor of the late Sean MacBride, winner of the Nobel Peace Prize and cofounder of Amnesty International.

This amendment will enlist the cooperation of United States companies active in Northern Ireland in the campaign to force the end of discrimination in the workplace by:

First, eliminating religious discrimination in managerial, supervisory, administrative, clerical, and technical jobs and significantly increasing the representation in such jobs of individuals from underrepresented religious groups;

Second, providing adequate security for the protection of minority employees at the workplace;

Third, banning provocative sectarian and political emblems from the workplace;

Fourth, publicly advertising all job openings and undertaking special recruitment efforts to attract applicants from underrepresented religious groups, and establishing procedures to identify and recruit minority individuals with potential for further advancement, including managerial programs;

Fifth, establishing layoff, recall, and termination procedures which do not favor particular religious groupings;

Sixth, abolishing job reservations, apprenticeship restrictions, and differential employment criteria which discriminate on the basis of religious or ethnic origin;

Seventh, developing and expanding upon existing training and educational programs that will prepare substantial numbers of minority employees for managerial, supervisory, administrative, clerical, and technical jobs; and Eighth, appointing a senior management staff member to oversee the U.S. company's compliance with the principles described above.

It is at the workplace in Northern Ireland, which can be used to either foster or eliminate discrimination, where improving the employment opportunities for the underprivileged will help factor out the economic causes of the current strife in Northern Ireland and, hopefully, begin the process toward a peaceful resolution of the so-called troubles.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 424

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Northern Ireland Fair Employment Practices Act".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds the following:

(1) Overall unemployment in Northern Ireland exceeds 14 percent.

(2) Unemployment in some neighborhoods of Northern Ireland comprised of religious minorities has exceeded 70 percent.

(3) The British Government Fair Employment Commission (F.E.C.), formerly the Fair Employment Agency (F.E.A.), has consistently reported that a member of the minority community is two and one-half times more likely to be unemployed than a member of the majority community.

(4) The Industrial Development Organization for Northern Ireland lists twenty-five firms in Northern Ireland which are controlled by United States persons.

(5) The Investor Responsibility Research Center (IRRC), Washington, District of Columbia, lists forty-nine publicly held and nine privately held United States companies doing business in Northern Ireland.

(6) The religious minority population of Northern Ireland is frequently subject to discriminatory hiring practices by United States businesses which have resulted in a disproportionate number of minority individuals holding menial and low-paying jobs.

(7) The MacBride Principles are a nine point set of guidelines for fair employment in Northern Ireland which establishes a corporate code of conduct to promote equal access to regional employment but does not require disinvestment, quotas, or reverse discrimination.

SEC. 3. RESTRICTION ON IMPORTS.

An article from Northern Ireland may not be entered, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, in the customs territory of the United States unless there is presented at the time of entry to the customs officer concerned documentation indicating that the enterprise which manufactured or assembled such article was in compliance at the time of manufacture with the principles described in section 5.

SEC. 4. COMPLIANCE WITH FAIR EMPLOYMENT PRINCIPLES.

(a) COMPLIANCE.—Any United States person who—

(1) has a branch or office in Northern Ireland, or

(2) controls a corporation, partnership, or other enterprise in Northern Ireland, in which more than twenty people are employed shall take the necessary steps to insure that, in operating such branch, office, corporation, partnership, or enterprise, those principles relating to employment practices set forth in section 5 are implemented and this Act is complied with.

(b) REPORT.—Each United States person referred to in subsection (a) shall submit to the Secretary—

(1) a detailed and fully documented annual report, signed under oath, on showing compliance with the provisions of this Act; and

(2) such other information as the Secretary determines is necessary.

SEC. 5. MACBRIDE PRINCIPLES.

The principles referred to in section 4, which are based on the MacBride Principles, are as follows:

(1) Eliminating religious discrimination in managerial, supervisory, administrative, clerical, and technical jobs and significantly increasing the representation in such jobs of individuals from underrepresented religious groups.

(2) Providing adequate security for the protection of minority employees at the workplace.

(3) Banning provocative sectarian and political emblems from the workplace.

(4) Advertising publicly all job openings and undertaking special recruitment efforts to attract applicants from underrepresented religious groups.

(5) Establishing layoff, recall, and termination procedures which do not favor particular religious groupings.

(6) Providing equal employment for all employees, including implementing equal and nondiscriminatory terms and conditions of employment for all employees, and abolishing job reservations, apprenticeship restrictions, and differential employment criteria, which discriminate on the basis of religion or ethnic origin.

(7) Developing training programs that will prepare substantial numbers of minority employees for managerial, supervisory, administrative, clerical, and technical jobs, including—

(A) expanding existing programs and forming new programs to train, upgrade, and improve the skills of all categories of minority employees;

(B) creating on-the-job training programs and facilities to assist minority employees to advance to higher paying jobs requiring greater skills; and

(C) establishing and expanding programs to enable minority employees to further their education and skills at recognized education facilities.

(8) Establishing procedures to assess, identify, and actively recruit minority individuals with potential for further advancement, and identifying those minority individuals who have high management potential and enrolling them in accelerated management programs.

(9) Appointing a senior management staff member to oversee the United States person's compliance with the principles described in this section.

SEC. 6. WAIVER OF PROVISIONS.

(a) WAIVER OF PROVISIONS.—In any case in which the President determines that compliance by a United States person with the provisions of this Act would harm the national security of the United States, the President may waive those provisions with respect to that United States person. The President shall publish in the Federal Register each waiver granted under this section and shall submit to the Congress a justification for granting each such waiver. Any such waiver shall become effective at the end of ninety days after the date on which the justification is submitted to the Congress unless the Congress, within that ninety-day period, adopts a joint resolution disapproving the waiver. In the computation of such ninety-day period, there shall be excluded the days on which either House of Congress is not in session because of an adjournment of more than three days to a day certain or because of an adjournment of the Congress sine die.

(b) CONSIDERATION OF RESOLUTIONS.—

(1) Any resolution described in subsection (a) shall be considered in the Senate in accordance with the provisions of section 601(b) of the International Security Assistance and Arms Export Control Act of 1976.

(2) For the purpose of expediting the consideration and adoption of a resolution under subsection (a) in the House of Representatives, a motion to proceed to the consideration of such resolution after it has been reported by the appropriate committee shall be treated as highly privileged in the House of Representatives.

SEC. 7. DEFINITIONS AND PRESUMPTIONS.

(a) DEFINITIONS.—For the purpose of this Act—

(1) the term "United States person" means any United States resident or national and any domestic concern (including any permanent domestic establishment of any foreign concern);

(2) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Commerce; and

(3) the term "Northern Ireland" includes the counties of Antrim, Armagh, Londonderry, Down, Tyrone, and Fermanagh.

(b) PRESUMPTION.—A United States person shall be presumed to control a corporation, partnership, or other enterprise in Northern Ireland if—

(1) the United States person beneficially owns or controls (whether directly or indirectly) more than 50 percent of the outstanding voting securities of the corporation, partnership, or enterprise;

(2) the United States person beneficially owns or controls (whether directly or indirectly) 25 percent or more of the voting securities of the corporation, partnership, or enterprise, if no other person owns or controls (whether directly or indirectly) an equal or larger percentage;

(3) the corporation, partnership, or enterprise is operated by the United States person pursuant to the provisions of an exclusive management contract;

(4) a majority of the members of the board of directors of the corporation, partnership, or enterprise are also members of the comparable governing body of the United States person;

(5) the United States person has authority to appoint the majority of the members of the board of directors of the corporation, partnership, or enterprise; or

(6) the United States person has authority to appoint the chief operating officer of the corporation, partnership, or enterprise.

SEC. 8. EFFECTIVE DATE.

This Act shall take effect six months after the date of enactment of this Act.●

By Mr. ROCKEFELLER (for himself, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. CAMPBELL, Mr. DORGAN, and Mr. WELLSTONE):

S. 425. A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to require the establishment in the Department of Veterans Affairs of mental illness research, education, and clinical centers, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

THE VA MENTAL HEALTH CARE IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1995

● Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I am proud to introduce legislation that would establish up to five centers of excellence in the area of mental illness at existing VA health care facilities. These centers, to be known as mental illness research, education, and clinical centers [MIRECC's] would be a vitally important and integral link in VA's efforts in the areas of research, education, and furnishing of clinical care to veterans suffering from mental illness. I am delighted to be joined in introducing this bill by Senators AKAKA, CAMPBELL, DORGAN, and WELLSTONE.

Mr. President, the need to improve services to mentally ill veterans has been recognized for a number of years. For example, the October 20, 1985, report of the Special Purposes Committee to Evaluate the Mental Health and Behavioral Sciences Research Program of the VA, chaired by Dr. Seymour Kety—generally referred to as the Kety Committee—concluded that research on mental illness and training for psychiatrists and other mental health specialists at VA facilities were totally inadequate. The Kety report noted that about 40 percent of VA beds are occupied by veterans who suffer from mental disorders, yet less than 10 percent of VA's research resources are directed toward mental illness.

Little has changed since that report. Information provided to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs at our August 3, 1993, hearing showed that the percentage of VA patients suffering with mental illness continues to hover over the same 40 percent rate found by the Kety Committee. Likewise, VA's research on mental illness has not increased to any appreciable extent and was estimated to be approximately 12 percent.

Mr. President, VA provides mental health services to more than one half to three quarters of a million veterans each year, yet in the decade between the time the Kety Committee began its work and now, there has not been a significant effort to focus VA's resources on the needs of mentally ill veterans. Among the recommendations of the Kety Committee was one that VA centers of excellence be established to develop first-rate psychiatric research programs within VA. Such centers, in the view of the Kety Committee, would provide state-of-the-art treatment, increase innovative basic and clinical research opportunities, and enhance and encourage training and treatment of mental illness.

Based on the recommendations of the Kety Committee, the Committee on Veterans' Affairs began efforts more than 6 years ago to encourage research into mental illnesses and to establish centers of excellence. For example, on May 20, 1988, Public Law 100-322 was enacted which included a provision to add an express reference to mental illness research in the statutory description of VA's medical research mission which is set forth in section 7303(a)(2) of title 38.

At that time, the committee—see S. Rept. 100-215, page 138—urged VA to establish three center of excellence, or MIRECC's, as proposed by the Kety Committee. In March 1992, Senator Cranston, then chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, noted that the VA had not taken any action to implement those recommendations. I unfortunately must tell you today that the VA still has done little to implement the recommendations of the Kety committee and has made no progress on the establishment of centers of excellence.

Mr. President, I also note that the January 1991 final report of the blue ribbon VA Advisory Committee for Health Research Policy recommended the establishment of MIRECC's as a means of increasing opportunities in psychiatric research and encouraging the formulation of new research initiatives in mental health care, as well as maintaining the intellectual environment so important to quality health care. The report stated that these "centers could provide a way to deal with the emerging priorities in the VA and the Nation at large."

In light of VA's failure to act administratively to establish these centers of excellence, our committee has developed legislation to accomplish this objective. The proposed MIRECC's legislation is patterned after the legislation which created the very successful geriatric research, education, and clinical centers [GRECC's], section 302 of Public Law 96-330, enacted in 1980. The MIRECC's would be designed first, to congregate at one facility clinicians and research investigators with a clear and precise clinical research mission, such as PTSD, schizophrenia, or drug abuse and alcohol abuse; second, to provide training and educational opportunities for students and residents in psychiatry, psychology, nursing, social work, and other professions which treat individuals with mental illness; and third, to develop new models of effective care and treatment for veterans with mental illnesses, especially those with service-connected conditions.

The establishment of MIRECC's should encourage research into outcomes of various types of treatment for mental illnesses, an aspect of mental illness research which, to date, has not been fully pursued, either by VA or other researchers. The bill would promote the sharing of information regarding all aspects of MIRECC's activities throughout VHA by requiring the Chief Medical Director to develop continuing education programs at regional medical education centers.

Finally, beginning February 1, 1997, the Secretary would be required to submit to the two Veterans' Affairs Committees annual reports on the research, education, and clinical care activities at each MIRECC and on the efforts to disseminate the information throughout the VA health care system.

At our committee hearing on August 3, 1993, numerous witnesses, including Dr. John Lipkin, representing the American Psychiatric Association, and Mr. Richard Greer, representing the National Alliance for the Mentally Ill, testified in favor of the MIRECC legislation. All of the veterans service organizations testifying at the hearing—the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Disabled American Veterans, and Paralyzed Veterans—supported the enactment of MIRECC legislation.

Mr. President, the VA for too long has made inadequate efforts to improve research and treatment of mentally ill veterans and to foster educational activities designed to improve the capabilities of VA mental health professionals. The establishment of MIRECC's will be a significant step forward in improving care for some of our neediest veterans. I am hopeful that this long recognized need will become more than a forgotten want item for veterans who suffer, in many cases, in silence.

The Committee on Veterans' Affairs has reported, and the Senate has passed, comparable legislation in each of the last three Congresses. I hope to bring this legislation before the Committee on Veterans' Affairs soon and remain optimistic that we can move forward with this important legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill appear in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 425

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. MENTAL ILLNESS RESEARCH, EDUCATION, AND CLINICAL CENTERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter II of chapter 73 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"§7319. Mental illness research, education, and clinical centers

"(a) The purpose of this section is to improve the provision of health-care services and related counseling services to eligible veterans suffering from mental illness, especially mental illness related to service-related conditions, through research (including research on improving mental health service facilities of the Department and on improving the delivery of mental health services by the Department), education and training of personnel, and the development of improved models and systems for the furnishing of mental health services by the Department.

"(b)(1) In order to carry out the purpose of this section, the Secretary, upon the recommendation of the Under Secretary for Health and pursuant to the provisions of this subsection, shall—

"(A) designate not more than five health-care facilities of the Department as the locations for a center of research on mental health services, on the use by the Department of specific models for furnishing such services, on education and training, and on the development and implementation of innovative clinical activities and systems of care with respect to the delivery of such services by the Department; and

"(B) subject to the appropriation of funds for such purpose, establish and operate such centers at such locations in accordance with this section.

"(2) The Secretary shall designate at least one facility under paragraph (1) not later than January 1, 1996.

"(3) The Secretary shall, upon the recommendation of the Under Secretary for Health, ensure that the facilities designated for centers under paragraph (1) are located in various geographic regions.

"(4) The Secretary may not designate any health-care facility as a location for a center under paragraph (1) unless—

"(A) the peer review panel established under paragraph (5) has determined under that paragraph that the proposal submitted by such facility as a location for a new center under this subsection is among those proposals which have met the highest competitive standards of scientific and clinical merit; and

"(B) the Secretary, upon the recommendation of the Under Secretary for Health, determines that the facility has developed (or may reasonably be anticipated to develop)—

"(i) an arrangement with an accredited medical school which provides education and training in psychiatry and with which the facility is affiliated under which arrangement residents receive education and training in psychiatry through regular rotation through the facility so as to provide such residents with training in the diagnosis and treatment of mental illness;

"(ii) an arrangement with an accredited graduate school of psychology under which arrangement students receive education and training in clinical, counseling, or professional psychology through regular rotation through the facility so as to provide such students with training in the diagnosis and treatment of mental illness;

"(iii) an arrangement under which nursing, social work, or allied health personnel receive training and education in mental health care through regular rotation through the facility;

"(iv) the ability to attract scientists who have demonstrated creativity and achievement in research—

"(I) into the evaluation of innovative approaches to the design of mental health services; or

"(II) into the causes, prevention, and treatment of mental illness;

"(v) a policymaking advisory committee composed of appropriate mental health-care and research personnel of the facility and of the affiliated school or schools to advise the directors of the facility and the center on policy matters pertaining to the activities of the center during the period of the operation of the center; and

"(vi) the capability to evaluate effectively the activities of the center, including activities relating to the evaluation of specific efforts to improve the quality and effectiveness of mental health services provided by the Department at or through individual facilities.

"(5)(A) In order to provide advice to assist the Under Secretary for Health and the Secretary to carry out their responsibilities under this section, the official within the Central Office of the Veterans Health Administration responsible for mental health and behavioral sciences matters shall establish a panel to assess the scientific and clinical merit of proposals that are submitted to the Secretary for the establishment of new centers under this subsection.

"(B) The membership of the panel shall consist of experts in the fields of mental health research, education and training, and clinical care. Members of the panel shall serve as consultants to the Department for a period of no longer than six months.

"(C) The panel shall review each proposal submitted to the panel by the official referred to in subparagraph (A) and shall submit its views on the relative scientific and clinical merit of each such proposal to that official.

"(D) The panel shall not be subject to the Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 U.S.C. App.).

"(c) Clinical and scientific investigation activities at each center may compete for the award of funding from amounts appropriated for the Department of Veterans Affairs medical and prosthetics research account and shall receive priority in the award of funding from such account insofar as funds are awarded to projects and activities relating to mental illness.

"(d) The Under Secretary for Health shall ensure that at least three centers designated under subsection (b)(1)(A) emphasize research into means of improving the quality of care for veterans suffering from mental illness through the development of community-based alternatives to institutional treatment for such illness.

"(e) The Under Secretary for Health shall ensure that useful information produced by the research, education and training, and clinical activities of the centers established under subsection (b)(1) is disseminated throughout the Veterans Health Administration through publications and through programs of continuing medical and related education provided through regional medical education centers under subchapter VI of chapter 74 of this title and through other means.

"(f) The official within the Central Office of the Veterans Health Administration responsible for mental health and behavioral sciences matters shall be responsible for supervising the operation of the centers established pursuant to subsection (b)(1).

"(g)(1) There are authorized to be appropriated for the Department of Veterans Affairs for the basic support of the research and education and training activities of the centers established pursuant to subsection (b)(1) the following:

"(A) $3,125,000 for fiscal year 1996.

"(B) $6,250,000 for each of fiscal years 1997 through 1999.

"(2) In addition to the funds available under the authorization of appropriations in paragraph (1), the Under Secretary for Health shall allocate to such centers from other funds appropriated generally for the Department of Veterans Affairs medical care account and the Department of Veterans Affairs medical and prosthetics research account such amounts as the Under Secretary for Health determines appropriate in order to carry out the purposes of this section."

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 73 of such title is amended by adding at the end of the matter relating to subchapter II the following:

"7319. Mental illness research, education, and clinical centers."

(c) REPORTS.—Not later than February 1 of each of 1997, 1998, and 1999, the Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives a report on the status and activities during the previous fiscal year of the mental illness, research, education, and clinical centers established pursuant to section 7319 of title 38, United States Code (as added by subsection (a)). Each such report shall contain the following:

(1) A description of—

(A) the activities carried out at each center and the funding provided for such activities;

(B) the advances made at each center in research, education and training, and clinical activities relating to mental illness in veterans; and

(C) the actions taken by the Under Secretary for Health pursuant to subsection (d) of such section (as so added) to disseminate useful information derived from such activities throughout the Veterans Health Administration.

(2) The Secretary's evaluations of the effectiveness of the centers in fulfilling the purposes of the centers.●

By Mr. SARBANES (for himself and Mr. WARNER):

S. 426. A bill to authorize the Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity to establish a memorial to Martin Luther King, Jr., in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

MEMORIAL LEGISLATION

● Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, since 1926 this Nation has designated February as the month to honor the contributions of African-Americans and their proud heritage, which has so powerfully enriched our land. As we honor the accomplishments of African-American citizens throughout the country, I wanted to bring to the attention of my colleagues legislation introduced today by myself and the distinguished Senator from Virginia, Senator WARNER, to recognize and honor Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

As you know, Dr. King's life was one of extraordinary accomplishments and has had a significant and lasting impact on our Nation's history. The legislation Senator WARNER and I have introduced today would recognize these accomplishments by authorizing the Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity, the oldest African-American fraternity in the United States, to establish a monument to Dr. King on Federal land in the District of Columbia. Identical legislation passed the Senate in the 102d Congress with 60 cosponsors, but was unfortunately not passed by the House of Representatives before adjournment sine die.

Pursuant to this proposal, the Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity of which Dr. King was a member, will coordinate the design and funding of the monument. The bill provides that the monument be established entirely with private contributions at no cost to the Federal Government. The Department of the Interior, in consultation with the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and the Commission on Fine Arts, will select the site and approve the design.

Alpha Phi Alpha was founded in 1906 at Cornell University and has hundreds of chapters across the country and many prominent citizens as members, including the late Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall. Alpha Phi Alpha has strongly endorsed the Martin Luther King, Jr. Memorial project and is committing its considerable human resources to the project's development.

Since 1955, when in Montgomery, AL, Dr. King became a national hero and an acknowledged leader in the civil rights struggle, until his tragic death in Memphis, TN in 1968, Martin Luther King, Jr. made an extraordinary contribution to the evolving history of our Nation. His courageous stands and unyielding belief in the tenet of non-violence reawakened our Nation to the injustice and discrimination which continued to exist 100 years after the Emancipation Proclamation and the enactment of the guarantees of the 14th and 15th amendments to the Constitution.

A memorial to Dr. King erected in the nation's Capital will provide continuing inspiration to all who visit it, and particularly to the thousands of students and young people who visit Washington, DC every year. While these young people may have no personal memory of the condition of civil rights in America before Dr. King, nor of the struggle in which he was the major figure, they do understand that there is much more that still needs to be done. As Coretta King said so articulately:

Young people in particular need nonviolent role models like him. In many ways, the Civil Rights movement was a youth movement. Young people of all races, many of whom were jailed, were involved in the struggle, and some gave their lives for the cause. Yet none of the youth trained by Martin and his associates retaliated in violence, including members of some of the toughest gangs of urban ghettos in cities like Chicago and Birmingham. This was a remarkable achievement. It has never been done before; it has not been duplicated since.

It is our hope that the young people who visit this monument will come to understand that it represents not only the enormous contribution of this great leader, but also two very basic principles necessary for the effective functioning of our society. The first is that change, even every fundamental change, is to be achieved through non-violent means; that this is the path down which we should go as a nation in resolving some of our most difficult problems. The other basic principle is that the reconciliation of the races, the inclusion into the mainstream of American life of all its people, is essential to the fundamental health of our Nation.

Mr. President, Martin Luther King, Jr., dedicated his life to achieving equal treatment and enfranchisement for all Americans through nonviolent means. As we continue to celebrate Black History Month, I urge all of my colleagues to join Senator WARNER and me in this effort to ensure that the essential principles taught and practiced by Dr. King are never forgotten. •

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 7—RELATIVE TO THE FORMER YUGOSLAV REPUBLIC OF MACEDONIA

Ms. SNOWE submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. CON. RES.

Whereas the United States has strong and enduring economic, political, and strategic ties with the Hellenic Republic of Greece;

Whereas Greece has been a strategic ally of the United States in the Eastern Mediterranean during every major conflict in this century;

Whereas historical and archaeological evidence demonstrates that the ancient Macedonians were Greek;

Whereas Macedonia is a Greek name that has designated the northern area of Greece for over 2,000 years;

Whereas in 1944, the United States opposed the changing of the name of the Skopje region of Yugoslavia by Marshall Tito from Vardar Banovina to Macedonia as part of a campaign to gain control of the Greek province of Macedonia, and the major port city of Salonika;

Whereas the regime in Skopje has persisted in inflaming tensions between it and Greece through a sustained propaganda campaign and the continued use of an ancient Greek symbol, the Star of Vergina, in its flag;

Whereas the Skopje regime has refused to remove paragraph 49 from its constitution, a reference to the 1944 declaration by the then communist regime calling for the "unification" of neighboring territories in Greece and Bulgaria with the "Macedonian Republic";

Whereas Greece has no claim on the territory of the former Yugoslav republic of Macedonia and has repeatedly reaffirmed the inviolability of all borders in the area of the 2 countries; and

Whereas it is in the best interest of the United States to oppose any expansionist or irredentist policies in order to promote peace and stability in the area: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That it is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) the President should not have extended diplomatic recognition to the Skopje regime that insists on using the Greek name of Macedonia; and

(2) the President should reconsider this decision and withdraw diplomatic recognition until such time as the Skopje regime renounces its use of the name Macedonia, removes objectionable language in paragraph 49 of its constitution, removes symbols which imply territorial expansion such as the Star of Vergina in its flag, ceases propaganda against Greece, and adheres fully to Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe norms and principles.

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. Total outlays for any fiscal year shall not exceed total receipts for that fiscal year, unless three-fifths of the whole number of each House of Congress shall provide by law for a specific excess of outlays over receipts by a rollcall vote.

"SECTION 2. The limit on the debt of the United States held by the public shall not be increased, unless three-fifths of the whole number of each House shall provide by law for such an increase by a rollcall vote.

"SECTION 3. Prior to each fiscal year, the President shall transmit to the Congress a proposed budget for the United States Government for that fiscal year in which total outlays do not exceed total receipts.

"SECTION 4. No bill to increase revenue shall become law unless approved by a majority of the whole number of each House by a rollcall vote.

"SECTION 5. The Congress may waive the provisions of this article for any fiscal year in which a declaration of war is in effect. The provisions of this article may be waived for any fiscal year in which the United States is engaged in military conflict which causes an imminent and serious military threat to national security and is so declared by a joint resolution, adopted by a majority of the whole number of each House, which becomes law.

"SECTION 6. This article shall be enforced only in accordance with appropriate legislation, which may rely on estimates of outlays and receipts, enacted by Congress.

"SECTION 7. Total outlays shall include all outlays of the United States Government except for those for repayment of debt principal and those dedicated to a capital budget. The capital budget shall include only major public physical capital investments. For each fiscal year, outlays dedicated to the capital budget shall not exceed an amount equal to 10 percent of the total outlays for that year, which amount shall not be counted for purposes of section 2. Three-fifths of each House may provide by law for capital budget outlays in excess of 10 percent for a fiscal year.

"Total receipts shall include all receipts of the United States Government except those derived from borrowing and the disposition of major public physical capital assets.

"SECTION 8. The receipts (including attributable interest) and outlays of the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund, or any successor trust funds shall not be counted as receipts or outlays for purposes of this article.

"SECTION 9. This article shall take effect beginning with fiscal year 2002 or with the second fiscal year beginning after its ratification, whichever is later."

KERRY AMENDMENT NO. 277

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. KERRY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him, to a motion to House Joint Resolution 1, supra; as follows:

I move to commit H.J. Res. 1 to the Budget Committee, to report back forthwith the following substitute amendment:

It is the Sense of the Congress that the Congress of the United States currently possesses all necessary power and authority to adopt at any time a balanced budget for the United States Government, in that its outlays do not exceed its receipts, and to pass and submit to the President all legislation as may be necessary to implement such a balanced budget, including legislation reducing expenditures for federally-funded programs and agencies and increasing revenues.

It is further the Sense of the Congress that the Congress should, prior to August 15, 1995, adopt a concurrent resolution on the budget establishing a budget plan to balance the budget by fiscal year 2002 consisting of the items set forth below:

(a)(1) a budget for each fiscal year beginning with fiscal year 1996 and ending with fiscal year 2002 containing—

(A) aggregate levels of new budget authority, outlays, revenues, and the deficit or surplus;

(B) totals of new budget authority and outlays for each major functional category;

(C) new budget authority and outlays, on an account-by-account basis, for each account with actual outlays or offsetting receipts of at least $100,000,000 in fiscal year 1994; and

(D) an allocation of Federal revenues among the major sources of such revenues;

(2) a detailed list and description of changes in Federal law (including laws authorizing appropriations or direct spending and tax laws) required to carry out the plan and the effective date of each such change; and

(3) reconciliation directives to the appropriate committees of the House of Representatives and Senate instructing them to submit legislative changes to the Committee on the Budget of the House or Senate, as the case may be, to implement the plan set forth in the concurrent resolution, with the cited directives deemed to be directives within the meaning of section 310(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, and with the cited committee submissions combined without substantive revision upon their receipt by the Committee on the Budget into an omnibus reconciliation bill which the Committee shall report to its House where it shall be considered in accord with procedures set forth in section 310 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

(c) the budget plan described in section (a)(1) shall be based upon Congressional Budget Office economic and technical assumptions and estimates of the spending and revenue effects of the legislative changes described in subsection (a)(2).

BIDEN (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 278

Mr. BIDEN (for himself, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. DORGAN, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. FEINGOLD, and Mr. KERRY) proposed an amendment to the joint resolution, House Joint Resolution 1, supra; as follows:

On page 3, strike lines 4 through 8, and insert the following:

"SEC. 7. Total outlays shall include all outlays of the United States Government except for those for repayment of debt principal and those dedicated to a capital budget. The capital budget shall include only major public physical capital investments. For each fiscal year, outlays dedicated to the capital budget shall not exceed an amount equal to 10 percent of the total outlays for that year, which amount shall not be counted for purposes of section 2. Three-fifths of each House may provide by law for capital budget outlays in excess of 10 percent for a fiscal year.

"Total receipts shall include all receipts of the United States Government except those derived from borrowing and the disposition of major public physical capital assets."

WELLSTONE AMENDMENTS NOS. 279-284

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. WELLSTONE submitted six amendments intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution, House Joint Resolution 1, supra; as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 279

At the end of the amendment, add the following:

"SEC. . The provisions of this article may be waived if a majority of the whole number of each House of Congress determines that compliance with the first clause of Section 1 would result in significant reductions in assistance to students who want to attend college."

AMENDMENT NO. 280

At the end of the amendment, add the following:

"SEC. . The provisions of this article may be waived if a majority of the whole number of each House of Congress determines that compliance with the first clause of Section 1 would result in an increase in the number of hungry or homeless children."

AMENDMENT NO. 281

At the end of the amendment, add the following:

"SEC. . The provisions of this article may be waived if a majority of the whole number of each House of Congress determines that compliance with the first clause of Section 1 would result in—

(a) substantial reductions in the quality of, or access to, health care for veterans, or

(b) substantial reductions in compensation provided to veterans for service-connected illnesses or injuries."

AMENDMENT NO. 282

Strike all after the first word and insert the following:

"The provisions of this article may be waived if a majority of the whole number of each House of Congress determines that compliance with the first clause of Section 1 would result in significant reductions in assistance to students who want to attend college."

AMENDMENT NO. 283

Strike all after the first word and insert the following:

"The provisions of this article may be waived if a majority of the whole number of each House of Congress determines that compliance with the first clause of Section 1 would result in an increase in the number of hungry or homeless children."

AMENDMENT NO. 284

Strike all after the first word and insert the following:

"The provisions of this article may be waived if a majority of the whole number of each House of Congress determines that compliance with the first clause of Section 1 would result in—

(a) substantial reductions in the quality of, or access to, health care for veterans, or

(b) substantial reductions in compensation for service-connected illnesses or injuries."

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

JAMES P. GRANT

• Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I was deeply saddened to learn of the recent death of a tireless champion of the world's children, James P. Grant. Most of us knew Jim as the deeply committed and energetic Executive Director of UNICEF, where his enthusiasm, his compassion, and his media savvy were legion. For 15 years he refused to take "no" for an answer, forcing those more accustomed to the high politics of diplomacy to consider the everyday realities for the youngest and most vulnerable members of the world's population. His child survival revolution can be credited with saving and improving the lives of millions of children who otherwise would have fallen victim to malnutrition, dehydration and easily preventable diseases.

While Jim Grant's contributions as UNICEF's Director are unparalleled, it was not only there that he made his mark. In fact he spent his entire lifetime in public service: First with the U.N. Relief and Rehabilitation Administration in China, where he was born, and later at the United States Department of State, the United States Agency for International Development, and the Overseas Development Council. In each of those capacities his concern for those living in poverty and despair lent special significance to his work and distinguished him as an individual.

Even as his own health began to fail him, Jim continued his important work at UNICEF. He enlisted the support of everyone from Hollywood superstars to Members of Congress in helping to realize the ambitious goals of the World Summit for Children—cutting child mortality by one-third, halving malnutrition and maternal mortality rates, providing basic education for all children, and reducing or eradicating childhood diseases by the end of this century. In recognition of Jim Grant's outstanding contributions, President Clinton awarded him the Nation's highest civilian honor, the Medal of Freedom, just last summer.

Mr. President, I am certain that my colleagues join me in extending my deepest sympathies to Jim's family. He is deeply missed but his life and work shall never be forgotten. •

HADASSAH'S WORK IN SARAJEVO

• Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, as a life member of Hadassah, the Women's Zionist Organization of America, I am proud of their humanitarian work around the world. I am also proud that Hadassah's founder, Henrietta Szold, was born in my hometown of Baltimore.

Private philanthropy cannot take the place of public policy. But it can play a vital role in providing aid and comfort in places like Bosnia—where medical facilities have been decimated by war.

I am pleased to share information with my colleagues on Hadassah's international relief work. I ask that Hadassah's report on their work in Sarajevo be printed in the RECORD.

The report follows:

HADASSAH NURSES COUNCILS ORGANIZE MASSIVE RELIEF EFFORT FOR SARAJEVO

Just a year after its founding in 1912, Hadassah, the Women's Zionist Organization of America, sent two intrepid nurses, Rose Kaplan and Rachel Landy, to Palestine to treat the malnourished and diseased mothers and children of Jerusalem, thereby laying the foundation for its ongoing medical work in Israel. More than 82 years later, in August, 1994, Hadassah again sent its nurses on an arduous journey, this time to the besieged city of Sarajevo. Elsie Roth and Kathryn Bauschard of St. Louis, Dianna Pearlmutter of Boston, and Charlotte Franklin of Santa Barbara, all members of Hadassah's nurses councils, went to assess the medical needs of the war-torn city and plan and coordinate the delivery of much needed medical supplies and clothing.

Traveling under the banner of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the nurses visited Kosevo Hospital and the State Hospital of Sarajevo during their 7-day trip. The nurses met with hospital administrators, doctors, nurses, and other personnel and inspected operating rooms, pediatric wards and pharmacy supply centers. They found deplorable conditions in the hospitals, which lacked even the most basic medical supplies.

At the time of their visit, Deborah Kaplan, Hadassah National President, stated, "Hadassah has a long-standing commitment to providing humanitarian aid throughout the world. We are proud to sponsor these four courageous women and, through the Hadassah Nurses Councils, will work to facilitate aid to Bosnia as identified through this mission."

Within five months of their return, the nurses, with the help of Hadassah Nurses Councils throughout the United States and in coalition with other organizations, churches and synagogues, amassed 30 tons of medical supplies and clothing valued at $3.5 million for transport to Sarajevo.

Since the nurses' trip, close connections have been forged between the coalition and the Jewish community of Sarajevo. About 300 Jews, a remnant of the 2,500 Jews from Sarajevo who survived World War II, remain in the city. Under the auspices of La Benevolencija, the Jewish humanitarian society formed in 1892, the Jewish community in Sarajevo has assumed responsibility for caring for the entire community. They operate the pharmacies and other health facilities, distribute foods, operate a daily soup kitchen, and facilitate the evacuation of the elderly and children.

In this way, the tiny Jewish community, which has existed in Sarajevo for more than 500 years, has been working to save its Catholic, Muslim and Orthodox Christian neighbors. All have been living under increasingly desperate conditions since the Bosnian conflict began nearly three years ago. More than 12,000 residents, including 1,625 children, have been killed and some 60,000 wounded. Medical supplies are not available to treat the sick and injured and restore them to health. Moreover, water, food, gas and electricity are in very short supply. Residents are now resorting to burning what possessions they have left, including old books and family heirlooms, in an effort to survive the winter cold.

The supplies collected by Hadassah and the other coalition members were shipped to New York for storage in a central warehouse provided by Queens, NY Hadassah. Eight tons of clothing are now on their way to Bosnia by cargo ship. The remaining 22-ton shipment, including pharmaceuticals, medical supplies and uniforms, has already been sent from Dover Air Force Base on air force planes to Croatia where it will now be airlifted by the United Nations directly to Sarajevo.

Hadassah members Sherry Hahn of Arlington and Elsie Roth, taking advantage of the cease-fire negotiated by former United States President Jimmy Carter in December, will return to Sarajevo to meet the shipment and help La Benevolencija distribute the supplies. Hearts will beat again when restarted by a perfectly reconditioned defibrillator included in the shipment. Bodies will heal when external fixators will hold them together without invasive surgery. Limbless people, wounded by shell fire, will walk again when more than 100 pieces of prosthetics replace their feet, legs and knees.

In a letter to Hadassah, Sven Alkalaj, the Bosnian Ambassador to the United States, wrote, "The Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and its people sincerely offer the American organization Hadassah their thanks for the fine activities of four nurses who, despite the dangerous situation in Sarajevo, had the courage to visit our nation's capital. Their mission was one of humanitarian concern and genuine compassion for our citizens who are in need of desperate medical attention."

"All of these registered nurses displayed an overwhelming desire to help those in need. Their compassion will long be remembered by those of us who had an opportunity to experience their love of humanity and their zeal for the advancement of the human spirit."

Ambassador Stuart E. Eizenstat, representing the European Community, praised Hadassah, saying that this organization should be proud of the relief they are providing in this tragic situation.

Hadassah, the WZOA, sincerely thanks the government of the United States, particularly the Department of Defense, for its cooperation in airlifting the relief goods we were able to gather together into this ravaged land.

For more than 82 years, Hadassah has been recognized for its pacesetting medical care and for the use of its resources and knowledge to benefit all humankind. This is but another example of Hadassah's affirmation of the Mishna's teaching "Whoever saves one life, it is as if he saved the entire world." The women of Hadassah have learned this lesson well. •

ORDERS FOR THURSDAY,
FEBRUARY 16, 1995

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today it stand in recess until the hour of 9:30 a.m. on Thursday, February 16, 1995; that following the prayer, the Journal of proceedings be deemed approved to date; that following the time allocated to the two leaders, the remaining time prior to 10:30 a.m. be equally divided between the two leaders or their designees for debate on the balanced budget constitutional amendment; and that at the hour of 10:30 a.m. the Senate proceed to the cloture vote, and the mandatory quorum call under rule XXII be waived.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, as indicated by the Senator from Kentucky in his unanimous-consent request, regardless of the outcome of the cloture vote, following the vote, Senator BYRD will be recognized to offer filed amendment No. 252. That consent has already been obtained.

I just say for the information of all Senators, votes are expected to occur throughout Thursday's session of the Senate, with the first vote occurring at 10:30 a.m.

Unless there is some other agreement, we are out tomorrow and we are back next Wednesday. I filed two cloture motions. Votes will occur on next Wednesday, after the reading of Washington's Farewell Address, and we will try to establish that so all Senators will be on notice before we leave here tomorrow.

TOMORROW

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, if there is no further business to come before the Senate, and no other Senator is seeking recognition, I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess, under the previous order.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 9:13 p.m., recessed until Thursday, February 16, 1995, at 9:30 a.m.
